Poetry.

HYMN TO THE CLOSING DAY.

Low sinks the sun, nigh is the closing day,
The deep, dank mists rise thin and gray
Along the winding stream, and overhead
The purple clouds put on a fringe of red,
And hazy, far-off hills stand glorified;
While on the beach the slowly ebbing tide
Whispers to the breeze that with its voice of air
Answers back, while overhead, in bush and everywhere,
Rises a low anthem the closing day;
And oh! setting sun, deem it not wrong
If I, too, chant to thee, in humble song,
An evening lay.

Oh! setting sun, thy work here nearly done,
How grandly endest thou thy daily run,
How gloriously sink down behind the hills,
Amidst the twittering birds and murmuring rills,
And wind around thee, fold on fold,
Thy purple canopies, now fringed with gold;
How sweet and simple are the varied notes
That mingled into one, arising, floats
Far out to thee.
How grand thy sinking quietly to rest
Upon Aeria's gentle, fluttering breast,
How grand to see.

Oh! closing day, now counted with the past,
How varied were thy works while thou didst last,
And now how glorious is thy ending; oh! it seems Like some fair vision I have seen in dreams,
Wandering on some rare, enchanted shore,
Seen in my dreams, but never real before
Found here with thee. Oh! thou closing day,
Where are the words man has made can say
What is like thee;
Like the sweet, soft music that ever and anon
Is heard, wafted from some dreamland of rare song
A hymn to thee.

Oh! starry orbs that shine so far away,
Jewels in the night-cap of the closing day,
That ushers in the darkness of the night,
And hides the daylight from our harrowed sight;
Oh! thou art beautiful companions for yon queen,
Yon gentle queen that on high is seen
Shedding her pale light upon the earth,
Oh! busy, closing day, thou art the birth
Of peaceful night.
Oh! setting sun, how grandly dost thou sink
Behind yon hills and leave a tint of pink
Upon the coming night.

Dear Restitution:

Although far away from any church organization and having none of that "fellowship of kindred minds" which Christians so much need and which I so much covet, I must write to express my deep interest in the movement now being made towards organization of our forces. Co-operation is certainly Scriptural and wise and needful in our work. How I would rejoice could I be present in Philadelphia at the General Conference. May God direct you all in your planning and may the much needed union of effort be well begun and enthusiastically carried out.

Since it has pleased God by the "foolishness of preaching" (not foolish preaching), to save those who believe, we must preach if we save any. Now I am too much burdened by the cares of a large and helpless family, and poverty, brought on by sundry mistakes in business enterprises and consequent indebtedness, to hope to be able to give my whole time to this glorious work soon. Some who have heard me preach in years past urge that I ought to give all my attention to that work. Surely I am not a Jonah! I would rather preach the gospel than any other work. Hardships and privations for myself I mind not at all. But when my honest debts stare me in the face, and a wife and five children appeal to me for bread and clothing, how can I go forth among strangers, most of whom are not in the least interested in such things, with no brethren able to aid me, no organized or systematic methods among them to sustain me while my time and labor is given to gospel work?

I do preach, not often in public, for I have no opportunity for that, but by the wayside, on the cars, on the road, in private houses, to individuals, to all who will listen anywhere and everywhere. I lend books and tracts, and can see some fruit of my labor. But after various wanderings in search of a home for my family, I am at last located here on a government claim, a homestead of 160 acres, two miles from Delano. One year has rapidly passed away. I have a plain but comfortable house of four rooms, and a fence enclosing less than an acre about the house, a few grape vines and a dozen fruit trees growing nicely, a two-horse wagon, a two-horse buggy, a gang plow and seeder, eight or nine tons of hay, and four work animals. It is too dry to plow now. We have had no rain, except a light shower not sufficient to lay the dust well, since the forepart of last March! Last season was too dry to raise a crop except on irrigated land. But water is only twelve to fourteen feet from the surface on my land, and windmills would enable me to put in and raise an orchard and vineyard and a few acres of alfalfa; if I could only get them. Two or three cheap mills would be needed for ten or fifteen acres. The soil and climate are exceedingly favorable if we only had water. Rabbit-proof fencing is also a necessity. But here I am, unable to get work, without means to make these needed improvements; among strangers, no brethren anywhere near me, and, at present, no work of any kind by which I can earn a dollar. As soon as it rains I can get all the plowing I can do at good prices, but that does not supply present needs. Well, perhaps I ought not to say so much of my present condition, but it just occurred to me it might serve as an example of how some who long to preach cannot.

No one is more ready and anxious to help himself than I am, and in fact, when one reflects that a year ago I had nearly nothing and had to borrow from an old San Francisco acquaintance the money to file on my land, I feel great gratitude to our Heavenly Father for the success attained. Educated and trained for the ministry in the Presbyterian Church, having seven or eight years of practical experience as a preacher, in that church first, and then in the Christian Church or among the Disciples, having been pastor of a church for two years at Rock Island, Illinois, and then in San Francisco, California, and preached in many other places acceptably while knowing only a meagre part of the truth as it is in Jesus, I feel certain that I could do good heralding forth the "glad tidings of great joy which shall be to all people" were it in my power. It is my purpose, if the Lord tarries so long, to give my whole time to preaching as soon as I can get my farm into a condition that will enable my family to support themselves thereon. I am trying to teach my children (for I cannot send them to school at present) and am not neglecting the word of the Lord. This work may be more important now than any other, but of course when I get work to do I must be busy at that and may be compelled to be away from home, when such teaching will be interrupted.

In the meantime were the Lord to open any door for me to engage in my chosen work, I would try to do that rather. I have threatened several times to write to The Restitution and announce myself ready to fill calls in California to preach if any were interested and would pay my expenses to reach the place and return home. But I have been so isolated and so busy I have hesitated. This letter is written on the impulse of the moment, in view of the notices I have read concerning the General Conference and its aims. The thought came, unless the brethren know of my condition and feelings they certainly can never help me to devise ways and means to do gospel work, and perhaps, if they knew, some might be able and willing to join hands with me and so the good news be sounded out in California. Your brother in Christ,

H. B. Rice

DIED.

Ray.—At her home seven miles west of Norfolk, Neb., Sept. 24, 1888, Mrs. Mary A. Ray, wife of John Ray, and only daughter of Brother and Sister Robert and Martha Foale, aged 25 years, 2 months and 10 days.

She was sick over a year with the hasty consumption and suffered beyond description. They did all in their power to save her, but every effort failed. They tried different physicians but that cruel monster death took her in his cold embrace. She leaves a husband and a little son two and one-half years old, father, mother and three brothers, besides other relatives and a large number of neighbors and friends to mourn her loss, for she was a kind and loving wife and mother and an affectionate daughter and sister. She was a believer but had not become obedient yet; she requested that no preacher around there should preach her funeral as there is none around here of the One Faith. She did not want to be preached off to heaven, when she knew she was going down to the silent tomb. O may the good Lord soon come back to this earth and wipe away all tears from our eyes, and the dead in Christ shall rise; and those that are awake shall not hinder those that sleep. So our dear loving ones will come forth out of their graves when the Lord comes to receive his own. O may we be amongst those that will hear his welcome voice, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you. When that day comes there will be no more sorrowing, and death itself must die. I well know how to sympathize with dear Sister Foale, for a little over thirteen months ago we buried a kind and loving daughter of nineteen summers, and the 20th of last May my dear, kind, affectionate and most indulgent mother died. A large number of the readers of The Restitution knew her. Martha Craton was her name. She has been a subscriber of our paper through all of its changes, names and editors. O may Gentile times soon close, and a new dispensation of things usher in. What a glorious thought! The Lord will soon come and sit on his Father's throne a thousand years and reign with his subjects gloriously. Rejoice, dear brothers and sisters, that day is soon coming.

Jesus, while our hearts are bleeding,
O'er the spoils that death has won,
We would at this solemn meeting
Calmly say, Thy will be done.

Though cast down, we're not forsaken,
Though afflicted, not alone,
Thou didst give and thou hast taken,
Blessed Lord, thy will be done.

M. A. Cuplin.

The Coming Age—Its Nature and Proximity. By J. P. Weethee.

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact, that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

The Coming Age is the product of laborious research—covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the Coming Age, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 300 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $[illegible] Send to this office for this work.

The Eastern Question

In its various phases.—Egyptian, British, Russian, Ottoman, Hebrew, American and Messianic, by J. P. Weethee. The title of this book gives a good idea of its contents, and the reputation of the author is a guarantee of its worth. The subject as a whole, and in its different divisions is handled in a masterly manner, and the reader is convinced at once that the author has spared no labor in the study of his topics. The work is thoroughly done and any one who carefully reads the 440 pages of this book will be well repaid. It is just the book for the time in which we live. Cloth binding, clear, pleasant type to read, and good paper. Price $1.50. Send to this office; orders will now be promptly filled, as we have received an invoice of the book, and will send direct from here. The two books, "Coming Age" and "Eastern Question" if ordered together, $5.00.

Dr. Smith's Bible Dictionary.

A Dictionary of the Bible comprising its Antiquities, Biography, Geography and Natural History, with Sixteen full-page Engravings, numerous smaller Illustrations, besides Maps of the Holy Land in the time of David, the time of Christ, and General Maps of the Countries mentioned in the Bible. It contains every name in the Bible concerning which anything can be said. It gives an account of each of the books of the Bible; explains the civil and religious institutions, the manners and customs of the Jews, as well as other nations alluded to in the Scriptures. This work by Dr. Wm. Smith, is just the "aid" to Bible study that you need, and every thorough student should place a copy on his table—you cannot read a chapter in your Bible without coming to some question on which you wish more information, and the best help you can get is Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary. Bound in cloth, 776 pages, price $1.50.

"The Gospel of Our Salvation and kindred doctrines—as Life only through Christ—Resurrection of the dead—Second coming of Christ—The Kingdom of God, etc., will be faithfully preached every Sunday morning at 10:30 a. m., to which services we heartily invite the seeker after divine truth! This service will close at 11:30, after which the church will meet for conference, "breaking of bread and prayers." 119 Grand st., on first floor, Brooklyn, N. Y.

ROMANISM:

THE DANGER AHEAD, THE REASON WHY A GOOD ROMAN CATHOLIC CANNOT BE A GOOD CITIZEN OF THIS REPUBLIC.

—BY—

A. J. GROVER.

The writer has given to the people of America statements of facts and figures which they will do well to reflect upon. The prospect for the future of the United States is not encouraging. "Romanism has votes to be cast as a unit. These votes are necessary in national elections, and in most local elections, to party success; whichever party will promise to do most for Romanism, will get them. Here lies the danger. Politicians have already silenced or subsidized the Protestant pulpit and the partisan press. As in the days when slavery ruled, everybody interested in the success of a party caters to Romanism. The national policy as to slavery almost cost the life of the republic. There is ten times as much danger to our free institutions from Romanism now, that there was from slavery in 1861."

Cloth 16mo, 136 pages, paper, with portrait of the author; Price, 75 cents.

Instructive Reading for the Young

The above is the title of a book of over 350 pages, made up of short stories and other instructive reading, both poetry and prose, for the young. It is illustrated with many fine engravings, is handsomely bound in cloth, and makes one of the most useful as well as pretty gifts for a young person that can be selected. Price $1.00

The Emphatic Diaglott. B. Wilson.

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlineary word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christianity have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on large paper. Cloth $4.00 Library binding $4.50.

The Unspeakable Gift. J. H. Pettingell.

With an Introduction by Mr. Edward White, of London, England.

This is a book of 480 pages, neatly printed and bound in cloth. This work conclusively proves the doctrine of Life only in Christ, and we most heartily commend it. Price 80c

The above price is for those who want this work for their own use. If you want to use one or more in mission work, or for a gift to a friend we will send them for only 50 cents each.

Cruden's Concordance—Unabridged.

This work is too well known to need commendation—every Bible student knows the value of Alexander Cruden's Concordance; bound in cloth, price $1 50

The Gospel of the Kingdom.

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses, by Wiley Jones. A book of 128 pages, clear type, cloth binding; price, 50 cents single copy, or 10 copies for $4.00. While devoted mainly to a systematic statement and defence of that gospel which the Lord Jesus and his apostles preached, this book contains also a prophetico-historical chart of the empires, and a key or outline of the Apocalypse. Pages 224 and 250. It shows the nature of future rewards and punishments, and points out the prophetic "signs" among the nations — Russians, British, Jews, Turks, and Roman Kingdoms—which portend the speedy and personal coming of Christ to raise the dead, judge the world, destroy the wicked, and establish the glorious and eternal Kingdom of God on earth. For sale at this office.

Key Words, or the Englishman's Hebrew and Greek Concordance to certain words which throw important light on great doctrines; a reference manual. By Wiley Jones. 176 pages, cloth bound, for 15c.

The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. By L. C. Thomas.

Title page.—"The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. Also an Epitome of the Great Salvation; and an Appendix including various other subjects, in brief.

The perfect unchangeable moral law is considered and shown to be the basis and spirit of the old Sinaitic law, now dead in its entirety. The law of Moses and law of Christ are compared and contrasted, and the relation of both to the old and new covenants is treated at some length. The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the stat the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 350 pages, Cloth bound, Price $1.00.

The Gospel according to St. Matthew.

—BY—

FATHER CHINIQUY.

ITS REVELATIONS ARE APPALLING.

Painful and horrible are words too weak to express the things which he relates — things enough to rouse the stones to cry out against a system which brings forth such apples of Sodom and deadly poison to the Church, the family and society.

Cloth, 12mo, 296 pages, with Portrait and Biographical Notice of the Author; Price $1.00.

FIFTY YEARS

—IN—

THE CHURCH OF ROME.

—BY—

CHARLES CHINIQUY.

A handsome volume of 832 pages, printed in clear type, on fine tinted paper. It is bound in strong cloth, marbled edges, and gilt stamp on side and back. Contains two portraits (one representing him in priestly robes) of the author.

There is no book upon the Romish controversy so comprehensive as this. It reveals the inner workings, aims and objects of Popery. It is from the experience of a lifetime witness, and challenges contradiction. It is a large but very valuable work, and is fast becoming a standard authority. Six editions were sold in one year, and large orders are being daily received for the present and 8th edition. The book commends itself to the American people, and to lovers of liberty everywhere.

The book contains, among other startling revelations, thrilling chapters on: The Bible and the Priests of Rome; the confession of Children; Festivities in a Parsonage; Protestant Children in Convents; the Priests in Masses; Rome and Education; the Mission of Rome; Murders and Thefts in Quebec. Papineau and the Patriots; Conversion of Dr. Newman; Grand Dinner of the Priests; the Abomination of Auricular Confession; Some of the Thousand Acts of Folly and Idolatry which form the Life of a Monk; the Vow of Celibacy; the Impurities of the Theology of Rome.

We have secured a supply of this book, and can fill orders direct. If you wish to inform yourselves as to the inside working of Romanism, send us $2.25 and you will receive the book postpaid at once.

We can also furnish Mr. Chiniquy's other work, "The Priest, the Woman, and the Confessional." A cloth bound book of 296 pages, price $1.00 postpaid.

Also "Romanism—the Danger Ahead," by A. J. Grover; contains 134 pages; cloth binding, 75 cts., postpaid.

The three ordered together we will send for $3.50.

The Restitution advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

THE EARTH: ITS PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE.--No. 24.

BY DR. J. K. THOMPSON.

THE THEOZOIC, OR AGE TO COME.
CONTINUED.

Scenic View of the age to come. ....The mild rays of the morning sun as it gilds Judea's hill tops, pouring a flood of mellow light and genial warmth over the vineyards and productive fields of Judean vales, are eclipsed by the intense phosphorescence emanating from the metropolitan city of Judea and the world; for there is no night there; for the Lord God giveth them light; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun, and it is now one day which is known unto the Lord, not day, nor night: for at evening time it is light, not only for the Jewish nation, but for the whole world.

Already have the tributes of praise and thanksgiving, and prayers for guidance during the labors of the day, with telephonic swiftness and accuracy, reached the ears of the King of kings and Lord of lords in the consistory of the holy temple, from every farmhouse, hamlet, town and city of the earth;—the offerings of loving hearts from the world's inhabitants, before entering upon their respective daily labors.

It is the time of the year for the visit of the delegates from the various nations, kindreds, tongues and people, (each in their allotted portion of the earth), in their annual convocation, to worship the King in his beauty, to bring the wealth of the nations, to keep the feast of tabernacles, and to partake, anew, at his table of the fruit of the vine, commemorative of the great sacrifice, he, himself had made for them and for the world away back in the years of the Post-tertiary age preceding the judgment era. What an assemblage is this! The political subdivisions, rearranged by the universal monarch of all of the earth,—of Europe, of Asia, of Africa, of North and South America; and of the isles of the sea, each have their representatives in this vast consociation. Each delegate rises in his allotted place and attests his allegiance, and that also of his people, and receives in return the kindly assurance of continued peace, prosperity, and fatherly protection.

Not one report of disloyalty or disaffection is made in all that host. The business being at an end, the angelic choir attune their harps and join in the songs of praise to God, and the Lamb that was slain; and now a glad shout of triumphant adoration from the ten thousand times ten thousand and thousands of thousands, is raised, and as the voice of one man we hear them saying, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing;—blessing, and honor, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever," and in response the elders reply, "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honor, and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created." Just now a voice from out of the throne, commands, "Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, small and great," and the vast multitude in tones like rolling thunders, or, like the ocean's roar, chant in unison, "Alleluia; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice and give honor to him. Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thy judgments have been made manifest." Is not that king David, who, with a golden crown upon his head, leads the choir with well-tuned harp and lofty song, and to whom all show their deep respect? His voice is very sweet and rich as he sings,—"The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters." "I will love thee, O Lord, my strength. The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer: my God, my strength, in whom I will trust; my buckler, and the horn of my salvation, and my high tower. I will call upon the Lord, who is worthy to be praised."

And who is that throng arrayed in white robes, and whence came they? An elder introduces them, saying, "These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. They are, therefore, before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more: neither shall the sun strike upon them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters. and God himself, shall wipe away every tear from their eyes." And with a loud voice they cried, "Salvation to our God, which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb," and with the four and twenty elders they sung their new song of highest praise, "Thou, O Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root and offspring of David, art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests and we reign on the earth."

Oh, with what fervid rapture each song is sung! With what touching tenderness each request is made to the King in his beauty! How pathetic the review of the trials and tribulations through which these have passed in order to attain to all this blessedness! What a concourse of saints and angels! Blessed association of immortal ones. Our hearts yearn to join in your raptures, to mingle in your songs, and to enjoy your sweet companionship in the fulness of the Kingdom of God.

Before returning to the nation assigned to him as his particular sovereignty when the feast of tabernacles is done, and in which he has participated throughout, and where he has met and become acquainted with the subordinate co-rulers of every part of the earth,—delegates like himself to the city of the great king, the immortalized overcomer spends a day or two in visiting among the notable celebrities of the age, and in viewing the grandeur and lofty majestic splendor of the holy city, Jerusalem, with its restored temple, and its gold-paved streets, and its beautiful surroundings, and in recalling scenes and incidents of the first advent of him who, though now the King of kings and Lord of lords, then had not where to lay his head,—who then was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, when he travelled over these lands, always doing good, but despised, rejected and put to death by his brethren, now however, the One to whom every knee bows, and every tongue confesses in grateful adoration and thanksgiving,—and in enjoying repeated draughts from, and baths in, the waves of the river of the waters of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb,—or in partaking of the luscious fruits just ripened on the boughs of the tree of life, borne in plentiful profusion, which grows abundantly on either side of the river, and in the midst of the streets of the city,—or, in preparing a package of the leaves of the tree for the relief of such of his subjects as may, at his return, be suffering from any injury or indisposition.

Visiting the comfortable residence of Abraham, the father of the faithful, he receives a kindly greeting from the old patriarch and from Sarah, his loving wife, and listens while they repeat the prominent occurrences of the Post-tertiary lives, and the pre-eminent goodness of God who has fulfilled all the promises he had made to them and to their seed, by raising them from the dead, immortal, and granting them honor, power and glory only second to that of their royal seed,—the King of kings and Lord of lords,—whose supreme rule, and authority is universally admitted in all the world, under God. Enoch and Elijah, tell him of their respective lives, of their miraculous translation, and of the scenes through which they have passed since they were removed from the earth Moses, too, erect in form, and with an undimmed eye, explains anew of the old covenant in its relation to their present surroundings, and the wonderful care of the Lord God, over rebellious Israel under his leadership, giving praise to God; that though once debarred from entering with Israel into the land of promise, he now enjoys the full fruition of his former hopes, and the coveted reward for his ardent labors, trials and cares in behalf of that nation.

Miriam, the prophetess, sung again the song, as of old, for his edification, though its notes were now purer, bolder, loftier than at first.

Passing thus from one to another of those ancient worthies, he hears them recount the peculiarities of their previous lives, their failures and their ultimate victories, and joins with them in ascribing to God, and to his royal Son, the glory for their salvation and present blessedness. The apostles too, —each a ruler over his separate tribe of restored Israel,—rehearse the history of their eventful lives, their labors for the spread of the gospel, their devotion to the Master's cause, their terrible sufferings in consequence of the persecutions of their brethren, the Jews, and by the universal Roman power, their constancy in the time of trial, and their martyrdom and subsequent participation in the glories of the first resurrection, as well as the splendors attending the restitution of all things that had been spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began, under the benign reign of the formerly despised, rejected, crucified, but now glorified and triumphant Master,—The Lord Jesus Christ. The impetuous Peter, the loving John, and Andrew, and all the rest, are present, making reports and receiving blessings for themselves, and for their respective tribes of Israel dwelling in national security, each in its allotted portion of the land of Palestine. Paul, too, enjoying the immortality he had offered to the seeker thereof, with his crown of rejoicing, regales him with the story of his adventurous labors and sufferings as an Apostle to the Gentiles. He reverts to the fierceness of his sufferings through persecution, but points to the nations blessed with everything that can make life desirable as the glorious result of his steadfastness to the gospel of Christ, and reminds him, that The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin was the law; ending up with this thank offering; "But thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God: how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out," Rom. xi. 33.

Leaving the holy city, for a stroll among the historical and justly celebrated scenes of Judea, the delegate notices the fertility and extreme productiveness of the soil. The plowman and the reaper labor together in the same field, gathering the golden grain and ripened fruits, even while the sower prepares the soil and scatters the seed for another equally prolific harvest. Brambles, thorns and briars, no longer hinder the fruitfulness of Eschol's grapes, or of the luscious pomegranate, or of the other delicious fruits. Tares and noxious weeds have long since ceased to choke the golden grain. Trees, herbs, plants and flowers, dressed and kept as in Eden's bowers of old, unhindered, yield their profusion of food and beauty, to satisfy every sense of taste, without alloy or stint. Fountains of pure water play along the roadside, and murmuring brooks, ever and anon, cross his path, Jordanward. Grateful shades of Lebanon's tall cedars, invite the traveller to rest and repose, ere labor, or travel has become tiresome. Locks, bolts and bars are unknown in all the land, as restraints to the greediness of the avaricious, or the infidelity of the covetous. On every side peace, plenty and prosperity abound. Numberless travellers are met on their way to the holy city. The young are going thither to visit the city and the temple; and the aged, to partake of the fruit of the tree of life for the perpetuation of their lives, and of the waters of the river of life. No beggars ask for alms along the highways, no palsied ones plead for cure, no lepers wait to be cleansed, no blind beg for sight, and no dead, sleep, waiting to be raised to life and conscious activity. Contentment, love, and true holiness, permeate every breast and furnish incentives for the performance of duty. Nor is this blessedness confined to Judea and Palestine. The remotest parts of the earth; the most obscure inhabitant not less than the nearer residents, all share alike the glory of the age.

To "dress and keep" the flora of the renewed earth in its most productive conditions, are man's,—perfected man's,—chief labors, even as it was in the beginning of the history of the race, before the fall.

But why shall we attempt to describe the indescribable. Since "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him," and "it doth not yet appear what we shall be;" though we have learned that, "when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is," and that "those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children forever," it seems like a hopeless task to unfold, or attempt to depict the perfection, the glory, and might and majesty of that world, or the peace, joy, love and blessedness of the Age to Come, adorned with all the revealed and unrevealed glories of the Kingdom of God upon the earth. The secrets of the past ages as revealed by science and revelation, however, conjoined to the revelations of prophecy, lead the searcher of the sure prophetic Word to expect, in the realization of the future, conditions far exceeding any it is possible for the mind of finite man to conceive: so that in glory and duration,—

When we've been there unnumbered years
Bright shining as the sun,
We've no less days to speak His praise
Than when we first begun.

To the Church of God in Christ, Greeting.

"And the Lord God formed man out of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul." Gen. ii. 7.

In these few brief sentences, we have the most concise, as well as the most reliable history, of the origin of our race, to be found on record. Like all other orders of the animal creation, he was formed of the dust of the ground, the earth, on which it was designed that he should live and from the fruits of which he was to sustain the life given him. That life was temporal; based on the same principle as the life of the other orders of the animal kingdom, which fact we shall note bye and bye. But though man's then present life was circumscribed by the same bound as was the life of all the animal world, yet was he more highly endowed than they, in that he possessed a moral and intellectual nature above and beyond all the lower animals. Very early in his history we have evidence of man's intellectual capacity in the fact that he was appointed by his Creator to give names to all the lower orders of animal creation, and as proof that he had ability rightly to discharge this duty we read that his maker approved his work when he had completed it by these words: "And whatsoever Adam called every living creature that was the name thereof," Gen. ii. 19. This was the royal seal of approval on man's first intellectual work. Had he never been called upon to exercise these powers, neither he, nor his descendants, would have any assurance that he possessed them. How wonderfully and wisely it is ordained that proper use tends to the development of all the powers with which we are endowed.

Man's intellectual nature as well as his physical form placed him at the very head of the animal creation. Set him on a plane entirely above them. On that plane he stood, and looking abroad over creation he saw in it the handiwork of a Supreme power whom he acknowledged as his Maker. He had intercourse with the "elohim" or agents of the Creator. He saw that all was beautiful. He felt that all was good.

But here, or at this stage of existence the race was but in its infancy. Its intellectual ability was tested and approved. His higher or moral nature must also undergo a test that thereby a character might be formed. It required both an intellectual and moral nature to form character. The intellectual nature grasps the thought, while the moral nature comes in and discerns between right and wrong. These faculties or powers belong only to the human race.

Man in his first estate was not deemed a fit subject for eternal life. Then as now, it was a gift too exalted to be bestowed on any who did not of their own free will, seek it in preference to aught else. The first means of attaining to a higher life was by means of the tree of life, which was so placed in his first home that he might easily have obtained it. The tree of life embodied more than a continuance of temporal life. The fruits of all the other trees, save that of the knowledge of good and evil were designed to continue or sustain the present life. But the tree of life was designed to make them live for ever, for it is said Gen. iii. 22, "lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life and eat and live forever." Had they partaken of this tree it would have imparted to them an age lasting nature. This they failed to do before they had developed a disobedient character, and then lest sin should be eternally manifested in them, they were deprived of access to the life giving tree, and though possessed of both a moral and intellectual nature the term of their natural life was circumscribed by precisely the same bound that limited the existence of all other animals, for we read in Gen. vii. 21-22, "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beasts, and of everything that creepeth upon the earth, and every man; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life of all that was in the dry land died. 23, And every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man and cattle and the creeping things and the fowl of the heaven, and they were destroyed from the earth; and Noah only remained alive and they that were with him in the ark." In this brief record we find written by the inspired pen the doom of that ungodly world: and we see no distinction made between man and beast and creeping thing, all in whose nostrils is the breath of life. They were all formed from the dust of earth, endowed with natural life, and that life was taken away by the same universal agent—water, and all living nature went back to its original elements—dust; and over all things that then perished the sable pall of eternal silence hangs with impenetrable gloom.

Noah, and those that were with him were saved alive. Why? Because they believed, and obeyed. Had they too, scorned the divine message we cannot doubt that they too would have fallen in the general ruin. Nor have we any authority to say that they will ever be re-animated either to do their first work over again or to be merely slain a second time. The wrath of God abides or rests on them as it does on all the wicked. The beasts of that age will not be restored, and we read in Psa. xlix. 19-20, "He shall go to the generation of his fathers; they shall never see the light. Man that is in honor and understandeth not is like the beasts that perish. This the psalmist declares to be the portion of those who understand not the ways of the Most High, and again he says in verse 14, Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning (of the resurrection) and their strength shall consume, the grave being a habitation for every one of them (margin). Thus we see that they rest in the grave amid silence and darkness while the righteous come forth through the power of him who holds the keys of death and Hades.

MRS. CARLIE WILLIAMS.

Dear Restitution:

About three hundred verses of the New Testament, refer to Christ's second coming, hence all believe he will come a second time.

There are two theories with reference to the second appearing of the Savior, and the Millennium. One is, that the Millennium will be brought about, by the preaching of the gospel, and that the Savior will come at the close of the Millennium; the other, that it will be ushered in by Christ's second advent.

To enable us to determine which one of these theories is correct, let us first determine what is to be accomplished in the world during the Millennium.

It is to bring about a restitution of all things.

We find in the prophecy of Isaiah the following:

"The wilderness and the solitary place shall be made glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. * * Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing!" Isa. xxxv. 1, 5, 6, 7.

We also learn that our Savior will remain in heaven until restitution times. Peter in speaking of Christ says: "whom the heavens must receive until the times of the restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began!" Acts iii. 21.

The wild animals are also to be tamed. "The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together, and a little child shall lead them, and the cow and the bear shall feed, their young ones shall lie down together and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the suckling child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand in the cockatrice's den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters that cover the sea!" Isa. xi. 6, 7, 8, 9.

Will the preaching of the gospel bring about all this?

The gospel has been preached eighteen hundred and fifty years.

If the world is to be converted by that means, something certainly ought to be accomplished in eighteen and a half centuries, but what are the facts? Notwithstanding the claim that Christianity is spreading and that the world is getting better, history tells us that there is more sin, crime and misery in the world today than there has been since the ark rested on Mt. Ararat.

The religion of Jesus Christ brings peace. If the world is being converted, we ought to see indications of peace. But what do we find when we go to the continent of Europe? We find more than twelve millions of men trained in the art of war, ready to be marshalled in battle array.

But what do the prophets, who, with prophetical vision, looked over the world at the time of Christ's second advent and saw it as it will then be, tell us? The Savior speaking of his second coming said "as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all," Luke xvii. 26; Matt. xxiv. 37.

To the people of the world, "the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night, for when they shall say, peace and safety—just what they are now saying—then sudden destruction cometh upon them!" 1 Thess. v. 2, 3.

"Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived!" 2 Tim. iii. 13.

Again the Savior says, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Luke xviii. 8. If the world shall be converted to true Christianity before Christ comes, will there be any doubt about him finding faith on the earth when he does come?

Can we come to the conclusion, from the foregoing quotations, that one thousand years of universal righteousness and peace, precedes the second advent of our Lord and Savior?

Will the Lord when he comes inaugurate a policy that will bring about the things spoken of in the prophecies quoted above? To determine this we must examine other prophecies.

I will remark that the prophecies which have been fulfilled have been literally fulfilled. We are forced to the conclusion that the unfulfilled prophecies will also be literally fulfilled.

In Dan. vii. 13, we read, "I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

Again we read that "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ and he shall reign forever and ever," Rev. xi. 15. By reference to Dan. vii. 27 we learn that this kingdom shall be under the whole heaven, not above in heaven. We also learn from Dan. ii. 44 that "the kingdom shall not be left to other people." It is a mistaken notion that the Lord will reign through the church or by proxy, but he will reign personally.

Where shall his kingdom be set up? "The Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously," Isa. xxiv. 23.

Again "the Lord God shall give unto him throne of his father David." Luke i. 32. David's throne was in Jerusalem.

The first great act in the Millennial age is the binding of Satan. Satan was in the garden and tempted Adam and Eve, but Christ, who is the second Adam, when he comes to people the world with righteous men and women, binds Satan so that he cannot trouble them. This world will never know a Millennium until Satan is bound.

After Satan is bound we learn that Christ is riging with his saints, and we are told that the rest of the dead live not again until the thousand years are finished; showing that Christ reigns at least one thousand years before the general resurrection and judgment. Rev. xx. 4 to 12. If that be so it cannot be true that he does not return to the earth until the general resurrection and judgment.

Ever since the time that Noah's ark rested on Mount Ararat the star of empire has taken its course westward, but henceforth the star of empire will appear in the east. Come Lord Jesus and come quickly. Amen.

On This Foundation.

Our prospects or hopes for the future are valuable, only in proportion to our assurance that we shall realize them. Disappointed hopes are so many pointed arrows which pierce the soul. Far better have no flattering prospects of a glorious future, than having based our hopes upon a sandy foundation, have them all swept away. Paul's prospects, however, were as sure as they were flattering. He had built his hopes upon the Rock of Ages. He knew no other foundation but Christ. To the apostle, Christ was "of God made unto him wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." Our apostle was of those who, hearing the sayings of Christ, did them. And all such the Master has likened unto a wise man, who built his house upon a rock; so when the rains descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew and beat upon that house, it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock. Paul's assurance of acceptance with God amounted to a certainty For, says he, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." So may all who have built their hopes of heaven upon the rock Christ Jesus, rest in the same confident expectation of the full realization of their future prospects, that characterized the apostle in his departing moments. "There is a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me in that day, and not to me only, but to all them also that love his appearing."

The indications of the "time of the end" are plain. The trees are putting forth leaves. The winter of the world may struggle fiercely yet, but it is doomed. We know, blessed be God! that "summer is nigh!" But for this the summer's sun must come. The world's winter is arctic—winter and night in one; but Christ as the Sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings; and then the Sun shall not withdraw itself; the days of darkness shall be ended.—Help and Food.

THE RESTITUTION.

Plymouth, Indiana, Nov. 14, 1888.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their Name, Post Office, County, and State plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co. Ind.

Remittances should be sent by Bank Draft Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk: money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

We have no time to write much editorially this week, as our time has been taken up in the duties of our Conference meeting here in Plymouth, and in making preparations to attend the coming Conference in Philadelphia. Our brethren have decided that we shall fill the place of editing The Restitution for one year longer should God, in mercy, spare us to live so long. We kindly ask our brethren to remember us in their prayers to God that we may be enabled to fill the responsible place to his glory, and also to remember Brother Underwood in all his perplexing cares; and, dear brethren, remember the paper; for you all know that journals advocating the soon-coming of the Lord, conditional immortality, and the restitution of all things, as predicted by all God's holy prophets, are not popular with the world.

We cannot get all the papers sent to us on the National Conference into The Restitution before the meeting takes place. Hence we shall take these unpublished manuscripts with us—Bro. E. Hoyt's and Bro. J. S. Miller's among the number. We expect to start to that meeting as early as Thursday. We ask the prayers of all our brethren and sisters that this general gathering of delegates may be blessed and that methods may be devised to build up and extend the cause of our loved Redeemer, by spreading far and wide a knowledge of his truth. We also ask the forbearance of our contributors for awhile should their articles be delayed a little, as we are compelled to distribute them to fill out future numbers while absent. Our Editorials, must also, be brief for a paper or two to come.

WORK.

"Work while the day lasts, for the night cometh in which no man can work."

We are admonished to watch and pray lest we enter into temptation, and also to "wait for the Lord from heaven," etc. But lessons of inactivity are nowhere taught in the Scriptures. We are to work as long as the day lasts, for the night hasteth onward and we must not let it find our work unfinished. We are commanded to work the works of God. The demand lies all around us and no loyal child of the King can ignore his claims or refuse to do his commandments that he may enter through the gates into the city. There is no promise to him who simply believes the commandments of God, the admonition is to do them.

If the Master was called upon to do the works of him that sent him, so also we who are to follow in his footsteps must be "workers together with him." If he fed the hungry, that, too, is our mission. If he sought to elevate the race, we, too, must toil for the same grand end. The bride who looks for her lord should not sit idly watching for his coming. There is no room in this busy world for folded, useless hands. She must make ready for his arrival by doing the duties he would have her to do. Better be found busy at his work than idly longing for his return.

True it is, and blessed as it is true, that "his reward is with him and his work before him." True it is that this work is the sweeping back of the flood of wrong, cruelty and deceit. True it is that it will mark the closing of the long night of crime and suffering, of cruelty and carnage. But we cannot therefore wait idly for our King to do all of this. As long as sin and suffering are in the world earnest work is the duty and the heritage of God's people. We must not wait to follow the majority, we must not question the "policy" of eternal truth and righteousness. It is not the province of the private to question the conduct of the campaign. We must simply advocate the truth, and watch and pray and vote, for the principles of righteousness, leaving the results entirely in the hands of our Great Commander. His agents in the future training of the nations must be those who are accustomed to work for the elevation of humanity, whether they can see any good resulting from their action or not. Heart and brain, and hands and feet are paralyzed by inactivity. There is no idleness in God's great moving world, from the delicate circulation in the blade of grass up to the throbbing pulse of the ever restless sea, motion is the unchanging law of nature and idleness everywhere means death. From the quiver of the humming bird's wings, up to the stately measure of the circling stars, motion is life and life is work. "Go work today in my vineyard." Time is hasting, never resting, and the night surely cometh when our work must be closed if not finished.

Mrs. H. V. Reed.

Dear Restitution:

I was glad to read in your issue of the tenth inst., your selection from the Central Presbyterian, because it expresses a very important "Bible Thought." Jesus said, "I have many things to say unto you, but you cannot bear them now." If the disciples had been capable of comprehending all the revelations the Father had to make to them personally, then there would have been no necessity for the mission of the Holy Spirit, "to guide them (gradually) into all truth." Just as they were made capable by their sad experiences and surroundings, to receive it. For instance at that time they could not comprehend the necessity of his suffering and his death. Nor yet in what sense his kingdom was "not of this world;" nor of this age. The glamor of his glory, majesty and power filled their minds to their full capacity. They were so confident that he was the Christ, they could not shake themselves free from their Jewish hope and expectation, that the glory of the kingdom would be immediately manifested. Hence the question, "Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel."

Father proposed to educate them legitimately, hence they must learn through natural channels, just as fast as they were capable of digesting and assimilating the knowledge imparted to them.

We must not forget that Father had created man out of the dust of the earth. That he said to him, and of him, "dust thou art." Now it was organized dust that was to be exercised in receiving, noting and storing away consciously the varied impressions that visible surroundings was to make on him, and from this starting point he was to be led up by easy grade from these more animal impressions and their lessons, to the comprehension of the invisible Father and his relations to him, till step by step he should peer into the possibilities of his nature being elevated to a higher plane and being endowed with higher capacities. At the end of four thousand years he had made only the progress that was manifested by the state of Jewish society in the days of our Lord, where a very large and influential portion of the community neither believed in either "Angels or Spirits."

A community in this stage of mental development needed infinite wisdom to handle them intellectually. Hence the infinite love of our Father in embodying himself in our nature, so that they could not only see inspired men such as their prophets, but infinite wisdom, infinite love and infinite holiness manifested in their own nature, indeed "all the fulness of the Godhead (manifested) bodily" in the Lord Jesus. He had thus commended himself to them by the manifestations of his character under all the varied trials that human nature could be subjected to, and his Godhead shown conspicuously in every phase of his relations and actions. Yet even his disciples did not comprehend him, they did not believe him. Hence the astonishment of Mary when she met him as the gardener, of the two when he revealed himself in "breaking bread," of Thomas when satisfied, and of those who were fishing. Peter said that notwithstanding they had lost their hope, that, "He should redeem Israel." He had by his resurrection, "begotten them again."

It is not wonderful that such a community could not receive or comprehend all he had to reveal to them, and therefore the necessity that he should depart from them and remain absent during this long interval of upwards of eighteen hundred years, because his absence alone could permit the varied contingencies to arise by which the faith of each individual could be fully tested, and the necessities of personal light, personal comprehension be developed.

Father has not made his revelations to a class of the human family whose prerogative it is to teach others, but to each individual, who must personally comprehend his teachings on their personal habits, personal weakness, personal relations and surroundings. Each must be tested on his own standing ground, and in relation to him in all his bearings and relations to the world. No one but each individual personally for him or herself can comprehend what is necessary to lead them up to the light and make them understand it.

Each individual must be tempted in relation to the supply of his physical wants or bread. Must have worthy honor and preferment placed within his reach. Must have the opportunity of presumptuously testing the promises of God, and his education will be shaped by his developed character under these opportunities. Hence God alone by his Holy Spirit can be his instructor. No gifted mortal can ever supply the place of "the Comforter," and it is only as Father leads individuals by his providence through labyrinths of circumstances suited to his individual tendencies and dispositions that he can open to him the meaning and bearing of his revealed truth (frequently) to his own peculiar case, and not only so, but the great bearings of Father's purposes have been gradually opened to comprehension. through the same means.

How frequently in the past have the constituted church authorities anathematized and condemned individuals for believing and teaching what the churches receive and believe everywhere today. It is very dangerous for a church or an individual to undertake to prescribe what is to be believed or rejected in regard to Scripture teaching. As long as the Lord remains absent the work of the Comforter is not complete. We have not yet been guided into all truth. Let us remember we are brethren, and each stands or falls to his own Master.

Selections.

WHAT ARE YOU LOOKING FOR?

"For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world; looking for the blessed hope, and (even) the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ."—Titus ii. 13.

"We should live—looking!" And so we do,—but for what? It would be well, perhaps, if the vast multitude of professing Christians around us, could be taken apart individually, and have each one the question seriously put to him, "What are you looking for?" It is to be feared, nay, rather it is quite certain, that with the very large majority it would be found that they were really looking for nothing beyond the present scene: that the business, the cares, the interests, and the pleasures of this life altogether monopolized their attention: that they were day by day so earnestly looking at the things that are seen and temporal that they neither desired nor designed to look off to those higher and better things which are unseen and eternal.

"What are you looking for?" might one reply: "Well, I am looking for such an increase in my business as will enable me speedily to accumulate sufficient wealth to live in ease and respectability for the remainder of my days, and when I die leave my children a step higher up the social ladder than when I began."

"What am I looking for?" would another say: "I am looking for some means whereby my worldly circumstances shall be so improved that I may prudently marry the woman I have selected as my future wife, and so share domestic joys which are the best and purest this earth can afford."

"What am I looking for?" might the man of science answer: "I am looking for some great discovery which shall give me world-wide fame, and enrol my name forever among those of the illustrious sons of science."

"What am I looking for?" might the politician reply: "I am looking for the triumph of my party;" or, if of nobler aims, "for the passing of some great measure of social reform, the repeal of some flagrant, the righting of some ancient, wrong."

But yonder methinks I see one whose bent form, hollow cheeks, and sunken eyes, tell too plainly that, for him at least, nothing can avail that earth can give, either of triumph or of joy, for more than a few brief days. To him, then, I repeat my question, "Friend, what are you looking for?" He lifts his heavy eye, and a sad, dubious smile flits over his emaciated features as he replies, "I am looking for death."

Alas, yes! from many indeed would such answers as these be received. But how many, think you,—how many I mean not of the men of the world, the merely careless and profane, but earnest souls, professing Christians, those whom we have every reason to hope and believe love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity? How many, even of such as these, I repeat, can make the language of their apostle their own and say, "The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared unto me, teaching me that—denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, I should live—looking for that blessed hope, even the glorious appearing of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ!"

And yet Paul's language is sufficiently explicit. He distinctly tells us that the grace of God was manifested in order that not Titus and himself alone, but God's people generally at that time, might so live. And should it not be so still? Yes; and bear with me, reader, if I say further that no Christian who does not so live, is living as God would have him live; that no Christian who does not so live is living in the position of the faithful servant whose loins are girt about and whose lamp is burning: that every Christian who does not so live has, in this respect, received the grace of God in vain.

The coming of the Lord was, we know, indeed the blessed hope of the church of Christ in its first and best days. It runs like a thread of gold through all the apostolic writings of the New Testament. It is used as the incentive to the exercise of every Christian grace; as the sufficient consolation under every form of trial; and as the infallible criterion of meetness for Christ's coming kingdom.

What does Paul say of his Thessalonian converts: "Ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven," Thess. i. 10. How does he endeavor to comfort those among them who had been bereaved? "I would not have you ignorant, brethren, concerning those which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent—or go before—them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we, which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we be ever with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words," 1 Thess. iv. 13–18.

It is ever so. Does Paul exhort believers to manifest their moderation to absence of undue carefulness regarding temporal things, it is in such words as these: "Let your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand. Be careful for nothing," Phil. iv. 5, 6. Or is patience or perseverance the grace which another apostle would have them exhibit, then he says: "Be patient, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruits of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and the latter rain. Be ye also patient, stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh," James v. 7, 8.

How many and how precious are the promises made to those, and to those only, who love and look for the Lord's appearing. "Henceforth," said Paul, when ready to be offered up and when the time of his departure was at hand, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing," 2 Tim. iv.8. "Christ was offered," he says in another place, "to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation," Heb. ix. 28. "Let your loins be girt about," said the Lord himself, "and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he shall return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open to him immediately. Blessed is that servant whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching," Luke xii. 35–37.

The very last promise which the Bible contains is couched in these words, "Surely I come quickly;" and the last sweet echo of Revelation which lingers on the ear, is the Church's Amen to the promise: "Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus."

But the inquiry, What are you looking for? besides its personal application has another more general but scarcely less important, What is to be the future of the church and the world? In this respect what are we looking for? This is a question which can hardly fail to suggest itself to every thoughtful mind at the present day. Mighty and accumulating forces of good and evil are at work around us. The battle becomes hotter, and the issue, to human foresight at least, more doubtful, day by day. Truly the word of God is tried to the uttermost. Christianity we are not untruly told is on its trial. Well, and what is to be the result? Shall it conquer and plant its victorious flag on the high towers of a world won to Christ? or shall the banner of the Cross go down beneath the dark inrolling tide of a science that seeks in vain after God, and an infidelity that blasphemes his name? Which are we to look for? For remember, I beseech you, should you be disposed to feel indignation at the suggested possibility of an adverse result, that Christ and Christianity must never be confounded. The Christian dispensation may end, and if I read the prophetic page aright will end, in apostasy, defeat, and judgment; but nevertheless Christ's kingdom is an everlasting kingdom which shall not pass away, and his dominion that which shall not be destroyed. Bearing this in mind, then, I ask again the question, What is to be the future of the church and of the world? How is to be inaugurated that gold age on which the prophetic eye of humanity has ever been fixed with a yearning, an imperishable hope? The question is indeed a momentous one, and, speaking generally, I may say that four answers have commonly been returned to it.

1. The first is that of Popery, or, as it prefers to be called, Catholicism; and it is to this effect: Our Lord Jesus Christ delivered to St. Peter, the prince of the apostles, the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and declared him to be the rock on which he would build his church,—that church against which the gates of hell should not prevail. Now the Pope is the successor of St. Peter, the promise made to the latter is therefore inherited by the former, and the ultimate triumph of the church secured. Sooner or later the union of Christendom will be accomplished; the breach which has for centuries divided the Eastern and Western churches will be healed; all Protestant opposition will be overcome; infidelity shall no longer exist: "The mountain of the Lord's house"—that is the Papacy—"shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it." The church of Rome shall attain to universal dominion, and in the person of his infallible vicar Christ shall, take unto him his great power and reign.

It is a splendid dream, and doubtless, to those who believe in it, affords an animating prospect. But seeing that is based upon falsehood, not upon truth, that it would be in reality only the triumph of that sorest of the curses which God has permitted to afflict humanity—Priestcraft; and that it is but an impious attempt to antedate Christ's millennial kingdom, and to give to a sinful man the honor that belongs only to the Divine Savior, we may safely put this answer to our question aside as being only the Pope's millennium.

2. What is to be the future of the church and the world? Again we ask the question, and now from a very different quarter a very different answer comes to us. It is the answer of that rapidly increasing party silently mustering under the banner of scientific materialism and philosophic scepticism. These men tell us that Christianity is an effete and worn out superstition; that the Bible has no better claim to be regarded as a trustworthy revelation from God than the Koran or the Vedas; that in point of fact we do and can know nothing of any higher powers, if such there be, than the matter and force out of which the universe is evolved: that death in all probability ends our existence, or, at all events, if there be such a thing as a future life, we neither know, nor ever can know anything about it here. Consequently, by and by, men will cease to trouble themselves about these idle inquiries and apply themselves rather to the real and practical business of life,—that business being to be happy now instead of speculating whether we shall or shall not be happy hereafter. Then, to this end, seeing that kings and priests, the Bible and the religious, have ever been the great troublers of mankind, all these must be swept away, and social democracy, scientific progress, and universal education, become the watchwords of a new and better era. Now it may be quite possible that God in righteous judgment will permit men in the pride and folly of their hearts to try this awful experiment. It seems from the teaching of prophecy only too probable. We know from the testimony of Scripture what is to be the true character of the closing days of the present dispensation, now so nigh at hand.

But this cannot be the end. Evil cannot finally triumph in a universe Divinely ruled. Dark as the gathering night may be, the eternal morning lies beyond. Our world and our race belong not to the devil but to God. "Yet," says the Lord in that glorious second Psalm,—"yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion. I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto me, 'Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the utmost parts of the earth for thy possession.'" Therefore, whatever indications there may be either in the Word or in the world of its temporary ascendency, we must repudiate the materialistic programme thus presented to us, as being in nothing better than the devil's millennium.

3 The third answer to our question is one which demands our more serious and respectful attention; it is what I may call the Protestant and Evangelical answer: the answer probably which some of our readers would give to the inquiry, What is to be the future of the church and the world? It is briefly this: The world is to be converted to Christ by the preaching of the Gospel and the power of the Spirit accompanying that preaching. By some future great revival movements, resembling in character, but far exceeding in effect those we have recently witnessed; by the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on a scale that shall altogether eclipse that of the day of Pentecost; by more abundant and manifest blessing on all missionary labors: in short, by our more diligent use of all existing spiritual agencies, the kingdoms of this world are gradually to merge into the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and all the glowing pictures of the prophetic page be substantially, if not literally realized.

Let us not here be misunderstood. I am not for one moment calling in question either the power of Christ's Gospel or the grace of his Spirit thus to convert the world. But this is not the question. The inquiry is this, What warrant have we for concluding that it shall be so? Is this really the work which the Gospel was designed to accomplish? On the contrary, is not this plainly a dispensation of election, not of universality? Must not the wheat and tares grow together even unto the harvest, which is the end of the age? Is it not nearly 1900 years since the Gospel was first preached, and are there any signs of the world's conversion yet? For nearly a century missions to the heathens have been carried on, What is the net result today? As I said just now, we know from prophecy that this dispensation is to end in apostasy, not in triumph, and therefore, seeing that it is founded on no certain warrant of God's word, but rather on ignorance of his revealed purposes concerning the future, we are compelled to regard even this hope, widely as it has been and still is cherished by true Christians, as being, after all, only Man's millenium.

4. Blessed be God, though we cannot hope for the world's conversion by the preaching of the Gospel, still our faith in God forbids the thought that evil shall ultimately prevail, and we need not be without a surer hope either for the church or the world, if we live looking for "the glorious appearing of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ." Yes, for the world and every nation in it; for the church as well as for the individual believer, all my hopes are bound up in this. Do you tell me that the night is growing dark? It may be so, but the Lord is coming. Do you tell me that the enemies of Zion are banded together for her destruction? It may be so, but the Lord is coming. Do you tell me that faith is waxing low, and love cold, and indifference death-like? It may be so, but the Lord is coming.

As we trace the history of the past we see plainly that each dispensation has ended in failure on man's own part, and immediate signal interposition on God's, and so it shall again. No evangelization of the world till the Lord comes; no binding of Satan till the Lord comes; no resurrection of the dead in Christ till the Lord comes; no rapture of the living in Christ till the Lord comes; no establishment of the promised kingdom of truth and righteousness, of peace and glory, till the Lord comes. "The glorious appearing of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ," and that alone, will introduce God's millennium.

Reader,—Do you live looking for this?

Conference Report.

The State Conference of the Church of God (taking the place of our Annual Assembly as agreed upon at our last Annual Meeting), was held with the church at Browntown, Warren Co., Va. Being hindered by the rain from commencing on Friday, as announced in The Restitution, met on Sunday, and although a heavy rainfall hindered some of the little body and the people there meeting with us in the forenoon, the afternoon being favorable by night the house was crowded with attentive listeners to the word. At the close of the discourse by the writer we had a feast of fat things with the dear ones assembled, in the observance of the solemn ordinance by which we show forth the death of our blessed Redeemer until he comes. Then we met in Conference and there being nothing more than common to consider, the time was taken up in the consideration of the National Conference as the most important movement or step ever taken by us as a people. Why, the very thought of a goodly number of true and tried ones, who have so long been toiling on a good portion of their time almost alone, in sounding out the midnight cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh: go you out to meet him." Of having an opportunity offered them of meeting together as has been by those good and generous-hearted brethren of Philadelphia; when and where we can talk our trials, sorrows and joys over, filled our little cups to overflowing, and the hope of the good resulting by such a meeting in the interest of the truth was like Benjamin's mess a double portion. The meeting continued until Tuesday night with good interest, when it closed with the usual farewell greeting and singing one of the sweet songs of Zion.

Shall we meet beyond the river,
Where the surges cease to roll;
Where, in all the bright forever,
Sorrow ne'er shall press the soul.

N. J. Morgan.

P. S. The writer was appointed as a delegate from Virginia to the National Conference in Philadelphia, Pa., representing a goodly number of called out ones for the all-saving name, both in Virginia and Maryland, and by order of the Conference to be published in The Restitution.

Familiarity with the Bible.

He who is so familiar with Bible that each chapter, open where he will, teems with household words, may draw thence the theme of many a pleasant and pathetic song. For is not all human nature and all human life shadowed forth in those pages? But the soul, to sing well from the Bible, must be imbued with religion as the flower is alternately imbued with dew and sunshine. The study of the Book must have begun in the simplicity of childhood, when it was felt indeed to be divine and carried on through all those silent intervals in which the soul of manhood is restored, during the din of life, to the purity and the peace of its early being. He who begins the study of the Bible late in life, must indeed devote himself to it night and day, with humble and contrite heart, as well as an awakened and soaring spirit, ere he can hope to understand what he feels—thoughts and feelings breathing in upon his soul like spiritual sounds and scents, as if from a region hanging in its mystery between heaven and earth.

Building.

Be careful how you build. Let nothing go to form your character that will not make it better and stronger. Let each brick be an honest one, and let it be laid carefully, with an earnest purpose to make yourself a good, noble man or woman. If already poor material has entered into your character, seek divine help to remove it. Get out every bad piece, every worthless habit. You cannot afford to have only an ordinary, much less a weak, character. While building see that you build of first-class material. You can build but one character in a lifetime, and it is to be yours for eternity; so make it the very best possible. But no character can be built of the best material unless we go to the Bible for it, nor built in the best way unless under the direction of Jesus, the Master-builder. Gathering your material from the Word of God, laying every portion with the towel of prayer and under the direction of Jesus, the great Master, your character will be one that will stand all trials, pass all tests, and remain through eternity well worth the lifetime it took to build it.—Forward.

Poetry.

THERE IS NO UNBELIEF.

There is no unbelief.
Whoever plants a seed beneath the sod
And waits to see it push away the clod,
Trusts in God.

There is no unbelief.
Whoever says, when clouds are in the sky,
"Be patient, heart! Light breaketh by and by!"
Trusts the Most High.

There is no unbelief.
Whoever sees 'neath winter's field of snow
The silent harvest of the future grow,
God's power must know.

There is no unbelief.
Whoever lies down on his couch to sleep,
Consents to lock each sense in slumber deep,
Knows God will keep.

There is no unbelief.
Whoever says "tomorrow," the unknown,
The future, trusts that power alone
He dares not to disown.

The Jewish Morning and Evening Sacrifices.

From Scripture we know that the ordinary services of the sanctuary consisted of the morning and evening sacrifices. There is, however, some difficulty about the exact time when each of the sacrifices was offered. According to general agreement, the morning sacrifice was brought at the "third hour," correspoding to our nine o'clock. But the preparations for it must have commenced more than two hours earlier. Few, if any, worshipers could have witnessed the actual slaying of the lamb, which took place immediately on opening the great Temple gate. Possibly they may have gathered chiefly to join in the prayer "at the time of incense." In the modified sense, then, of understanding by the morning sacrifice the whole service, it no doubt coincided with the third hour of the day, or 9 a. m. This may explain how on the day of Pentecost such a multitude could so readily "come together," to hear in their various tongues "the wonderful works of God"—seeing it was the third hour, then they would all be in the temple.

The evening sacrifice was fixed by the law as "between the evenings," that is, between the darkness of the glooming and that of the night. Such admonitions as "to show forth thy faithfulness every night upon an instrument of ten strings and on the psaltry," and the call to those who "by night stand in the house of the Lord," to "lift up their hands in the sanctuary and bless the Lord," seem indeed to imply an evening service—an impression confirmed by the appointment of Levite singers for night service in I Chron. ix. 23; xxiii. 30.

But at the time of our Lord the evening sacrifice certainly commenced much earlier. Josephus puts it down as at the ninth hour, i. e., three o'clock in the afternoon. According to the Rabbis the lamb was slain at the eighth hour and a-half, or about 2:30 p. m., and the pieces laid on the altar an hour later—about 3:30 p. m. Hence, when "Peter and John went up together into the Temple at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour," it must have been for the evening sacrifice, or rather half an hour later, and, as the words indicate, for the "prayer" that accompanied the offering of incense. The evening service was somewhat shorter than that of the morning, and would last, at any rate, about an hour and a-half, say till about four o'clock, thus well meeting the original requirements in Num. xxviii. 4. After that no other offering might be brought except on the eve of the Passover, when the ordinary evening sacrifice took place two hours earlier, or at 12:30 p. m.

Early in the morning the president directed a priest to ascend some "pinnacle," and see whether it was time to kill the daily sacrifice. If the priest reported, "The morning shineth already," he was again asked, "Is the sky lit up as far as Hebron?" If so, the president ordered the lamb to be brought from the chamber by the Beth-Moked, where it had been kept in readiness for four days. Others fetched the gold and silver vessels of service, of which the Rabbis enumerate ninety-three. The sacrificial lamb was now watered out of a golden bowl, and anew examined by torch-light, though its Levitical fitness had been already ascertained the evening before. Then the sacrificing priest, surrounded by his assistants, fastened the lamb to the second of the rings on the north side of the altar—in the morning in the western, in the evening in the eastern corner. The sacrifice was held together by its feet, the fore and the hind feet of each side being tied together; its head was laid towards the south and fastened through a ring, and its face turned to the west, while the sacrificing priest stood on the east side.

The elders who carried the keys now gave orders for opening the Temple gates. As the last great gate slowly moved on its hinges, the priests, on a signal given, blew three blasts on their silver trumpets, summoning the Levites and the "representatives" of the people (the so-called "stationary men") to their duties, and announcing to the city that the morning sacrifice was about to be offered. Immediately upon this the great gates which led into the Holy Place itself were opened to admit the priests who were to cleanse the candlestick and the altar of incense. The opening of these gates was the signal for actually slaying the sacrificial lamb. The sacrifice was offered in the following manner. One priest drew forward the windpipe and gullet of the sacrifice, and quickly thrust upwards the knife, while another caught the blood in a golden bowl. Standing at the east end of the altar, he sprinkled it, first at the northeast and then at the southwest corner, below the red line which ran round the middle of the altar, in each case in such manner as to cover two sides of the altar, or, as it is described, in the form of the Greek letter Γ (gamma). The rest of the blood was poured out at the base of the altar. Ordinarily, the whole of this service would of course be performed by priests. But it was valid even if the sacrifice had been killed by a layman, or with an ordinary knife. Not so if the blood were caught up in any but a consecrated vessel, or sprinkled by other than hands of a priest who at the time was Levitically fit for the service.

We proceed to describe the service of those whose duty it was to cleanse the altar of incense and to dress the golden candlestick in the Holy Place. A few particulars as to each of these will not be out of place. The triumphal arch of Titus in Rome bears a representation of the golden mortars in which the incense was bruised, and of the golden candlestick, but not of the altar of incense. Still, we can form a sufficiently accurate idea of its appearance. It was square, one cubit long and broad, and two cubits high, that is, half a cubit higher than the table of shew-bread, but one cubit lower than the candlestick, and it had "horns" at each of its four corners. It was probably hollow, and covered with a golden plate, and like an Eastern roof, surrounded by what resembled a balustrade, to prevent the coals and incense from falling off. Below this was a massive crown of gold.

The incense burned upon this altar was prepared of the four ingredients mentioned in Ex. xxx. 34, with which, according to the Rabbis, seven others were mixed, besides a small quantity of "Ambra," and of a herb which gave out a dense smoke. To these thirteen substances salt was of course added. The mode of preparing the incense had been preserved in the family of Abtinas. The greatest care was taken to have the incense thoroughly bruised and mixed. Altogether 368 pounds were made for the yearly consumption, about half a pound being used every morning and evening in the service. The censer for the Day of Atonement was different in size and appearance from the ordinary days. The golden candlestick was like that delineated in Ex. xxv. 31, etc., and is sufficiently known from its representation on the Arch of Titus.

Now, while one set of the priests were busy in the Court of the Priests offering the sacrifice, the two on whom it devolved to trim the lamps of the candlestick and to prepare the altar of incense had gone into the Holy Place. As nearly as possible while the lamb was being slain without, the first of these priests took with his hands the burnt coals and ashes from the golden altar, and put them into a golden vessel—called "tani"—and withdraw, leaving it in the sanctuary. Similarly, as the blood of the lamb was being sprinkled on the altar of burnt-offering, the second priest ascended the three steps, hewn in stone, which led up to the candlestick. He trimmed and refilled the lamps that were still burning, removed the wick and old oil from those which had become extinguished, supplied fresh, and re-lit them from one of the other lamps. But the large central lamp, towards which all the others bent, and which was called the western, because it inclined westward towards the Most Holy Place, might only be re-lit by fire from the altar itself. Only five, however, of the lamps were then trimmed; the other two were reserved to a later period of the service.

Meantime, in the Court of the Priests the sacrifice had been hung on one of the hooks, flayed, cut up according to rules, cleaned, and handed to the six priests who were successively to carry up the pieces to the rise of the altar, where they were salted and deposited. For "every sacrifice must be salted with salt"—nay, everything that was laid on the altar, except the drink-offering. At the same time, three other priests carried up to the rise of the altar the daily offering. The skins of the sacrifices were salted, and on the eve of each Sabbath distributed among the "course" of priests that had been on ministry.

The most solemn part of the service was now about to begin. For the third time the priests assembled in the 'Hall of Polished Stones," to draw the third and the fourth lots. But before doing this the president called on them to join the prescribed prayers. After this the lot was cast for burning the incense. No one might take part in it who had ministered in that office before, unless in the very rare case that all present had previously so officiated. Hence, while the other three lots held good for the evening sacrifice, that for the incense required to be repeated. He on whom this lot fell chose from among his friends his two assistants. Finally, the third was succeeded by the fourth lot, which designated those who were to lay on the altar the sacrifice and the meat-offerings, and to pour out the drink-offering.

The incensing-priest and his assistants now approached first the altar of burnt-offering. One filled with incense a golden censer held in a silver vessel, while another placed in a golden bowl burning coals from the altar. As they passed from the court into the Holy Place, they struck a large instrument (called the "Magrephah"), at sound of which the priests hastened from all parts to worship, and the Levites to occupy their places in the service of song while the chief of the "stationary men" ranged at the Gate of Nicamor such of the people as were to be purified that day. Slowly the incensing priest and his assistants ascended the steps to the Holy Place, preceded by the two priests who had formerly dressed the altar and the candlestick, and who now removed the vessels they had left behind, and, worshiping, withdrew. Next one of the assistants reverently spread the coals on the golden altar; the other arranged the incense; and then the chief officiating priest was left alone within the Holy Place, to await the signal of the president before burning the incense. As the president gave the word of command, which marked that "the time of incense had come," "the whole multitude of the people without" withdrew from the inner court, and fell down before the Lord, spreading their hands in silent prayer. It is this most solemn period, when throughout the vast Temple building deep silence rested on the worshiping multitude, while within the sanctuary itself the priest laid the incense on the golden altar, and the cloud of "odors" rose up before the Lord, which serves as the image of heavenly things in this description: "And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour.....And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer, and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand." The prayers offered by priests and people at this part of the service are recorded by tradition as follows: "True it is that Thou art Jehovah our God, and the God of our fathers; our King and the King of our fathers; our Savior and the Savior of our fathers; our Maker and the Rock of our salvation; our Help and our Deliverer. Thy name is from everlasting, and there is no God beside Thee. A new song did they that were delivered sing to thy name by the sea-shore; together did all praise and own Thee as King, and say, Jehovah shall reign who saveth Israel.

"Be graciously pleased, Jehovah our God, with Thy people Israel, and with their prayer. Restore the service to the oracle of Thy house; and the burnt-offerings of Israel and their prayer accept graciously and in love; and let the service of Thy people Israel be ever well-pleasing unto Thee."

These prayers ended, he who had formerly trimmed the candlestick once more entered the Holy Place to kindle the two lamps that had been left unlit; and then, in company with the incensing priest, took his stand on the top of the steps which led down to the court of the priests. The other three who had also ministered within the Holy Place gathered beside him, still carrying the vessels of their ministry; while the rest of the priests grouped themselves on the steps beneath. Meanwhile he on whom the fourth lot had fallen ascended to the altar. Those whose duty it was handed to him, one by one, the pieces of the sacrifice. Upon each he pressed his hands, and next flung them confusedly upon the fire, that so the flesh of the sacrifice might be scattered as well as the blood sprinkled. After that he ranged them in order, to imitate as nearly as possible the natural shape of the animal. This part of the service was not unfrequently performed by the high priest himself.

The priests, who were ranged on the steps to the Holy Place, now lifted their hands above their heads, spreading and joining their fingers in a peculiar manner. One of their number, probably the incensing priest, repeated in audible voice, followed by the others, the blessing in Num. vi. 24–26: "Jehovah bless thee and keep thee: Jehovah make his face shine upon thee and be gracious unto thee: Jehovah lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace." To this the people respond, "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, from everlasting to everlasting."

After the priestly blessing the meat-offering was brought, and, as prescribed in the law, oil added to it. Having been salted, it was laid on the fire. Next the high priest's daily meat-offering was presented, consisting of twelve cakes broken in halves—twelve half-cakes being presented in the morning, and the other twelve in the evening. Finally, the appropriate drink-offering was poured out upon the foundation of the altar.

The temple music now began. It was the duty of the priests who stood on the right and left of the marble table on which the fat of the sacrifices was laid, at the proper time to blow the blasts on their silver trumpets. There might not be less than two nor more than 120 in this service; the former in accordance with the original institution, the latter not to exceed the number at the dedication of the first Temple. The priests faced the people, looking eastwards, while the Levites, who crowded the fifteen steps which led from the Court of Israel to that of the Priests, turned westwards to the sanctuary. On a signal given by the president, the priests moved forward to each side of him who struck the cymbals. Immediately the choir of the Levites, accompanied by instrumental music, began the Psalm of the day. It was sustained by no less than twelve voices, with which mingled the delicious treble from selected voices of young sons of the Levites, who, standing by their fathers, might take part in this service alone. The Psalm of the day was always sung in three sections. At the close of each the priests drew three blasts from their silver trumpets, and the people bowed down and worshiped. This closed the morning service.

It was immediately followed by the sacrifices and offerings which private Israelites might have to bring, and which would occasionally continue till near the time of the evening sacrifice. The evening sacrifice resembled in all respects that of the morning, except that the lot was only cast for the incense; that the incense was burned, not, as in the morning, before, but after the pieces of the sacrifice had been laid on the fire of the altar, and that the priestly blessing was generally omitted.

The evening sacrifice was ordinarily slain at about 2:30 p. m., and offered at about 3:30 p. m., as stated above. But on the eve of the Passover it was killed an hour earlier, Chapter xi.

On the Sabbath day they sang Psalm xcii., "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord," etc., "because the Sabbath was symbolical of the millennial kingdom at the end of the 6,000 years' dispensation, when the Lord would reign over all, and his glory and service fill the earth with thanksgiving."—Dr. Edersheim.

THE NEW HEAVENS AND NEW EARTH: REMARKS ON 2 Pet. iii. 13.

No. 3.

"But, according to his promise, we look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

On this subject, W. Trotter's remarks are worthy of consideration: "As to Peter's words, 'We, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness,' they evidently refer to Isa. lxv. and lxvi., the only passages in the Old Testament where such a promise is recorded. In Isaiah the promise is unquestionably accompanied by statements which refer, not to the everlasting state, but to the Millennial period. Sin and death.... to however limited an extent, are found in the state of which the prophet testifies; and these, as all admit, have no existence in the new heavens and new earth of Rev. xxi. Two solutions of this difficulty have been suggested, both of which we shall present to our readers. It has been judged by some that Isa. lxv. 17, "For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind," refers to the actual new heavens and the new earth which are to succeed the conflagration of the present, and that in the succeeding verses, the prophet reverts from this final prospect to that which bears the nearest resemblance to it—the millennial state. Others judge that Isaiah has no eye to the literal post-millennial heavens and earth, but speaks only of the millennial state; the apostle Peter, according to the wisdom given to him, using the figurative language of the prophet, in reference to literal facts, to which the prophet could have no idea that his own language referred. Either of these views would materially tend toward clearing up the difficulty arising from a comparison of the passages before us."

On mature consideration we are inclined to accept the first of these solutions. We think the prophet had in vision "new heavens and a new earth," as they will exist in the everlasting future; for "the former things," he says, "shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." The change from the old to the new state is so great, so glorious, so blessed, that the old is no longer kept in mind; it is forgotten. And then, as a pledge of this, an earnest of it is given in the millennium. "But be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create; for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people; and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying." Then follows a description of a state of things which we know belongs to the Millennial age, in which, indeed, mention is made of wonderful blessings, but which is not entirely free from sin and death.

The advent of Christ, with which is associated destruction by fire and judgments, has also associated with it unspeakable blessings; and in view of these blessings, in view of the restored, renovated earth, we have the figurative and glowing language of Psa. xcvi. 11, 12: "Let the heavens be glad, and let the earth rejoice; let the sea roar and the fulness thereof; let the field exult, and all that is therein; then shall all the trees of the wood sing for joy." How, therefore, can we suppose Peter's language to imply the universal conflagration which is generally supposed, and that this takes place, as many Adventists teach, at the commencement of the second advent? The destruction by fire in the early stage of the advent must be chiefly of bitter and avowed enemies. To accord with other statements which refer to the same period, it must be thus limited. The language of Peter, then, must be understood to refer to the end of the thousand years, and after the judgment of the wicked dead. The opposite view of this passage places it in direct opposition to a multitude of other passages.

Then how can this burning up of the earth, and the consequent creation of the new earth, take place before the millennium, when it is not till after the millennium that the wicked dead are raised, as taught in Rev. xx. 5. Geo. N. H. Peters, in his "Theocratic Kingdom," has a long argument to show that the new heavens and new earth come before the thousand years; but we fail to see this; this view is attended with insuperable difficulties, although the view we take ourselves may not be entirely free from difficulty. It certainly has no difficulty so great as the one we have just mentioned in the way of accepting the opposite view. How can we suppose that there is a literal burning up of the earth, issuing in the creation of a new earth; that this takes place at the beginning of the thousand years; and that then, after the thousand years, after the new earth has existed for that long period, there is the resurrection of the wicked dead, the resurrection of the unnumbered millions of unrighteous ones that have been mouldering in their graves all over the earth? This cannot be. The idea is incongruous and confutes itself. If this old earth, containing the carcasses of all the unrighteous dead that ever lived, is burned up prior to the millennium, and a new earth created, how can they be raised up out of the new earth after the Millennium?

The marriage of the Lamb, according to Rev. xix. is previous to the Millennium. The new heaven and new earth of Rev. xxi. are after. Of this, there can be no doubt, if we carefully examine and compare these chapters. But the question may be suggested, Can it be supposed that the marriage of the Lamb would take place before the creation of the new earth? We answer, Why not, if the bride dwells in the holy city Jerusalem, above the earth? Geo. N. H. Peters takes it for granted, because it is taught in Rev. xix. 7–9, just before the thousand years, that the marriage of the Lamb hath come, and his wife hath made herself ready, etc., that if the new heavens and new earth are not created till after the millennium, the marriage must be postponed a thousand years. This is a groundless assumption, because the eternal home of the Lamb's wife, the glorified church, will be the New Jerusalem; and that wonderful union may be celebrated in heaven before the descent of the New Jerusalem. Some speak of this holy city coming down to the earth, and resting upon the earth; but we are unable to find any Scripture which teaches this. When John had a sight of it, he was carried "away in the Spirit to a mountain great and high," in order that he might see it distinctly and be able to describe it. We conclude also that it does not come upon the earth, but rests above it, and yet within sight of it by its inhabitants, from the statement that "the nations shall walk amidst the light thereof."

With the conflagration, as we have seen, Peter associates the "destruction of ungodly men." But this destruction, it should be borne in mind, is not the same as the burning of the tares in the harvest, set forth in chapter xiii. of Matthew. This harvest is identical with the harvest of the earth under the sounding of the seventh angel set forth in chapter xiv. of Revelation. But this is previous to the reign of Christ on the earth, and therefore, the earth cannot be destroyed. Those who hold to the destruction of the earth leave no room for the fulfilment of the covenant to Abraham and his seed. The conditions of the covenant require this earth to be the theatre of its fulfilment. But if this earth undergoes literal destruction by fire, and a new earth is created at the commencement of the millennium, how can it be? "Instead of the curse being removed from the existing world," as one writer observes, "the world falls beneath the curse and is sacrificed, so that an entire new one which has never borne a curse may be created." This would by no means be a proper fulfilment of the promise that the creation—the present creation now known to us—shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption. As the earth was cursed for man's sake, the apostle Paul represents the earth as groaning under the burden, and anxiously looking for deliverance. But if the earth is dissolved, burnt up, in the sense of being "reduced to its original nothingness," as General Goodwyn and others teach, where comes in the deliverance of which Paul speaks? General Goodwyn says it is not the old earth that is repaired or purified; but that is the very idea, in our judgment, that is brought out in chapter viii. of Paul's Epistle to the Romans. We understand the burning by fire to be the consumption of the corruption under which creation is now groaning.

The Coming Age—Its Nature and Proximity. By J. F. Weethee.

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious researches covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth, Price $1.00. Send to this office for this work.

The Eastern Question

In its various phases,—Egyptian, British, Russian, Ottoman, Hebrew, American and Messianic, by J. F. Weethee. The title of this book gives a good idea of its contents, and the reputation of the author is a guarantee of its worth. The subject as a whole, and in its different divisions is handled in a masterly manner, and the reader is convinced at once that the author has spared no labor in the study of his topics. The work is thoroughly done and any one who carefully reads the 560 pages of this book will be well repaid. It is just the book for the time in which we live. Cloth binding, clear, pleasant type to read, and good paper. Price $3.50. Send to this office; orders will now be promptly filled, as we have received an invoice of the book, and will send direct from here. The two books, "Coming Age" and "Eastern Question" if ordered together, $4.00.

Poetry.

DEAR GOD, IT IS I.

Dear God, dost thou feel on thy white garment's hem
The touch of a trembling and faltering hand?
Dost thou see loving Christ of lone Bethlehem,
One kneeling to thee on the hot, burning sand?
Canst thou see kindly Father, the tears falling fast?
Dost thine ear catch the sound of a heart-troubled cry?
O God, one has come to thee, calling, at least,
On my head lay thy fingers; it is I, it is I.

My heart has reached out to the world for its love—
For its blessings of riches, its honor and fame,
But back it doth come to the Ark like a dove,
With no tidings of rest, or joy to proclaim.
And here at thy feet could I lay my bruised heart:
Wilt thou mercifully hear now my sorrowing cry,
And grant me, for the world, that sweet better part?
Dost thou hear me, O God, it is I, it is I.

I have come with my hands bruised and aching with pain,
I have come with my soul heavy weighed with its grief,
I have come with my life, with its sin and its stain,
I have come with my arms, empty, e'en of a sheaf;
Canst thou love, blessed Christ, one unworthy, unclean?
Canst thou care for one sinking soul ready to die?
Canst thou lead by still waters and sweet pastures green
A child gone astray—so unworthy as I?

THE MAN OF SIN, 2 Thess. ii.
No. 12.

"'I know,' says one of the ablest writers of the Romish Church, 'by the evidence of manifest and incorrupt tradition, that there has always been a never-interrupted succession of men from the apostles' time, believing, professing, and practising such and such doctrines, by evident arguments of credibility, as miracles, sanctity, unity, etc., and by all those ways, whereby the apostles and our blessed Savior himself confirmed their doctrines; and we are assured that what the said never interrupted Church proposeth, doth deserve to be accepted and acknowledged as a divine truth.'" p. 23.

"'The Temples of our Martyrs,' says he, 'are shining and conspicuous: eminent for their grandeur and the variety of their ornaments; and displaying far and wide the splendor of their beauty. These we visit, not once or twice, or five times in the year, but frequently offer up hymns each day to the Lord of them; in health we beg the continuance of it; in sickness the removal of it; the childless beg children, and the barren to become mothers; and when these blessings are obtained, we beg the secure enjoyment of them. When we undertake any journey, we beg them to be our guides and companions in it; and when we return safe, we pay them our thanks; and that those who pray with faith and sincerity obtain what they ask, is manifestly testified by the number of offerings which are made to them in consequence of the benefits received. For some offer the figures of eyes, some of feet; some of hands, made either of gold or of silver, which the Lord accepts, though but of little value, measuring the gift by the faculties of the giver. But all these are the evident proofs of the cures of many distempers, being placed there as monuments of the fact by those who have been made whole. The same monuments likewise proclaim the power of the dead. Whose power also demonstrates their God to be the true God." p. 24.

"Now this is nothing else but the very picture of that same superstition which is practiced at this present day by the Papists, and was borrowed of old from the Pagans. Livy tells the same thing of the Temples of the Heathen Gods, which Theodoret does here of the Temples of their Saints; that they were rich in the number of offerings which the people used to make in return for the cures and benefits which they had received from them. In both cases we allow the offerings to be real, but take the cures, or the miraculous part of them at least, to be imaginary; and as we reject Livy's miracles without scruple, or any hurt to the faith of history, so we may reject Theodoret's too without shaking the evidence of anything else that is credible." p. 25.

"Mr. Dodwell, as we have seen above, chooses to shut up the history of true miracles with the three first centuries concerning those of the fourth as generally forged and fabulous; for the proof of which he appeals to the monstrous fictions which St. Athanasius, St. Jerome, and St. Gregory of Nyssa, have related. And, thus far, I entirely agree with him; that the pretended miracles of this age are utterly incredible; and particularly those to which he refers us, and to which we might add many more, affirmed also from their own knowledge, by St. Austin, St. Epiphanius, and all the other saints of the same times. Yet after so free a censure on the miracles of the fourth age, the same learned writer thinks it necessary still, to make some exceptions, for a few of them, which St. Chrysostom has attested. But such a distinction appears to be wholly groundless; or if there be any difference between this particular Father and the rest of them, it is clearly to the disadvantage of Chrysostom when considered in the character of a witness. For his peculiar talents were those of a declamatory preacher, whose art lay in warming the passions, not in convincing the reason, and whose pompous style and rhetorical flourishes, instead of being adapted to a simple narrative of plain facts, was apt rather to exaggerate plain facts into miracles. And as there is no ground for any preference, in his personal character, so there is none likewise in the particular miracles which he attests, which are all said to be wrought not by the ministry, of any living and holy men, but by the reliques of the dead, or the oil of their lamps, or the sign of the cross." p. 27.

"Justin Martin frequently affirms that the gift of expounding the Holy Scriptures was granted by the special grace of God to himself" (among others). Yet some of his interpretations are most fanciful. "Discoursing on the Mystery of the Cross, he says, the sea could not be passed, the earth could not be tilled, without the sale of instruments of that shape. The form of man being erect, the extension of his arms and the projection of his nose from his forehead, show the figure of the cross." "Describing the fight of the Israelites with Amalek, as long as Moses employed himself in prayer with his hands stretched out in the form of a Cross, Amalek was beaten, for the people did not conquer because Moses prayed, but because he was exhibiting the form of the cross."

Middleton also says Justin "professes the highest regard for certain spurious books under the names of the Sibyl and Hystaspis, which he treats with the same reverence as the Prophetic Scriptures. It is certain from this example and authority of Justin, these silly writings were held in the highest veneration by the Fathers and rulers of the Church through all succeeding ages." He gives an instance in the case of Clemens of Alexandria. Dr. Case held those books to have been "forged for the advancement of the Christian faith." Some impute the fraud to Hermes, some to Papias, others to Justin himself.

Justin affirms also that silly story concerning the Septuagint version of the Old Testament, "That it was by seventy elders sent for that purpose from Jerusalem to Egypt at the request of king Ptolemy; whom that king shut up in so many cells, and obliged them each to translate the whole Bible apart, and without any communication with each other. Yet all their several translations were found to agree verbatim, and by that means were demonstrated to be of divine inspiration." Middleton adds, "The learned and ingenious Editor of Justin's Apologies and Dialogues, is often forced to break out into a kind of astonishment at his ignorance, negligence, rashness, credulity, so gross in many instances as to baffle the art of criticism, nor to admit any certain rule of collecting his real sense."

"Irenæus, who was the most diligent collector and asserter of Apostolic traditions, yet Photius one of the ablest critics of his own or any other age of the church, 'thought it necessary to advertise the reader that in some of them the purity of truth with respect to Ecclesiastical doctrines, is adulterated by his false and spurious reasonings.'" "He affirmed that our Savior lived to an old age, or was fifty years old at the least—as he came to save all men it was necessary that he should pass through all the several stages of life, asserting that this was received by tradition from those who lived with (St.) John and the other apostles.'" "He also asserted the fabulous story of the Septuagint version, as already recited. To this he added another, no less romantic, that the sacred Scriptures were utterly destroyed in the Babylonish captivity, but restored again after seventy years by Esdras, inspired by God for that purpose." In this he was followed by all the principal Fathers of the succeeding centuries." Speaking of the number of the gospels he says, It is impossible that there could have been more or less than four; for there are four climates, and four cardinal winds."

"The later Fathers, generally speaking, do but copy the notions and even the blunders of these two. For as they are the earliest who have left any considerable works behind them, so they are the first likewise in credit and authority with succeeding ages."

Mr. Dodwell, one of their most zealous admirers, frankly owns that their way of reasoning is loose, sophistical, and declamatory.

Dr. Whitby referring to Papias and his scholar Irenæus, says, "These two earliest writers of the second century, who, on the credit of idle reports of uncertain fame, have delivered to us things said to be done by the apostles and their scholars, have shamefully imposed upon us, by the forgery of fables and false stories."

Dr. Middleton remarks, "Since the very earliest of all traditions and the nearest to the fountain's head, are found to be so corrupt, it will demonstrate at least what a treacherous foundation they must be to build any opinion upon, and much more any article of our faith." "Here then we see the origin and history of tradition. Papias, a weak and silly man who mistook the sense of the apostles was the first who made it his particular business to recommend the use of it, and for that purpose took the pains to collect all the unwritten facts and sayings of Christ and his apostles, from the report of those who had conversed with them. These sayings as Eusebius tells us, consisted of a number of strange parables and doctrines of our Savior with several other fabulous stories, which the authority of so venerable a person, who had lived with the apostles, imposed upon the church for genuine, and the gravity of his scholar Irenæus confirmed and propagated to succeeding ages; through which every one still added to the collection, whatever he thought useful to the particular cause or opinion which he favored.

The miracles claimed were: 1. Raising the dead; 2. Healing the sick; 3. Casting out devils; 4. Prophesying; 5. Seeing visions; 6. Discovering the secrets of men; 7. Expounding the Scriptures; 8. Speaking with tongues." Of the first, beyond mere assertion, not a single instance of it is particularly described, or clearly attested in all history. The second was maintained by the heathens through fraud and craft. The third a false mimicry of our Lord and his apostles. Fourth, fifth and sixth, for example, "Cyprian declared that he had received a divine admonition to mix water with wine in the sacrament of the Eucharist in order to render it effectual," to ordain one Numidicus a priest, etc., saying, there was no occasion to wait for human testimonies (as consent of clergy and people) when the divine suffrage had already been signified!" "By a divine admonition also to the great scandal of his clergy, he fled from Rome to escape from persecution!" So also did Deonysius, bishop of Alexandria, swearing to the truth of the vision. These visions were contemned by many, of whom Cyprian himself confesses, "they would sooner believe anything against a priest than believe a priest." Seventh, see ante-Justin, etc. Eighth, gift of tongues. Irenæus declares it to have been indulged to many in his days. But it is very remarkable that this primitive bishop appears to have been in great want of it himself for the propagation of the gospel in his own Diocese among the Celtæ or Gauls, where, as Dr. Cave interprets his words, "it was not the least part of his trouble that he was forced to learn the language of the country, a rude and barbarous dialect, before he could do any good upon them." Not a single Father in succeeding ages made the least claim to this, or to speak of it than as a gift peculiar to the first Christians in the times of the apostles." Dr. M. says he might rest his argument on this single point.

"Apostolic Fathers, who had lived and conversed with the apostles, Barnabas, Clement, Ignatius, Polycarp, Hermas. There is not the least claim or pretension in all their several pieces to any of these extraordinary gifts. Nor to any standing power of working miracles for the conversion of the heathen world." Inquiry p. 2.

"Here then we have an interval of about half a century, the earliest and purest of all Christian antiquity after the days of the apostles in which we find not the least reference to any standing power of working miracles as exerted openly in the church for the conviction of unbelievers." p. 9.

"The difference in the manner of exerting them will greatly confirm the suspicion. We never find the apostles calling upon the magistrates and people to come and see the mighty wonders, etc., whereas this confident and ostentatious manner of proclaiming their extraordinary powers carries with it an air of quackery and imposture as it was practiced by the primitive wonder-workers; in the form especially of casting out devils, challenging all the world to come and see." p. 22.

"Of whatsoever condition the actors were in the performance of their miracles they were always charged with fraud and imposture by their adversaries. Lucian tells us that wherever any crafty juggler expert in his trade, and who knew how to make a right use of things, went over to the Christians he was sure to grow rich immediately by making a prey of their simplicity. And Celsus represents all the Christian wonder-workers as mere vagabonds and common cheats, "who rambled about to play their tricks at fairs and markets; not in the circles of the wiser and better sort, for among such they never ventured to appear; but wherever they observed a set of raw young fellows, there they took care to intrude themselves and to display all their arts." The same charge was constantly urged against them by all the other enemies of the Christian faith, Julian, Porphyry, etc. p. 23, Inq.

ROMANISM:

THE DANGER AHEAD. THE REASON WHY A GOOD ROMAN CATHOLIC CANNOT BE A GOOD CITIZEN OF THIS REPUBLIC.

—BY—

A. J. GROVER.

The writer has given to the people of America statements of facts and figures which they will do well to reflect upon. The prospect for the future of the United States is not encouraging. "Romanism has votes to be cast as a unit. These votes are necessary in national elections, and in most local elections, to party success; whichever party will promise to do most for Romanism, will get them. Here lies the danger. Politicians have already silenced or subsidized the Protestant pulpit and the partisan press. As in the days when slavery ruled, everybody interested in the success of a party caters to Romanism. The national policy as to slavery almost cost the life of the republic. There is ten times as much danger to our free institutions from Romanism now, that there was from slavery in 1861."

Instructive Reading for the Young.
The above is the title of a book of over 350 pages, made up of short stories and other instructive reading, both poetry and prose, for the young. It is illustrated with many fine engravings, is handsomely bound in cloth, and makes one of the most useful as well as pretty gifts for a young person that can be selected. Price $1.00

The Emphatic Diaglott. B. Wilson.
Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlineary word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christianity have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words therein literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New Improved edition on large paper, Cloth $3.50 Library binding $4.50.

The Unspeakable Gift. J. H. Pettingell.
With an Introduction by Mr. Edward White, of London, England.

This is a book of 360 pages, neatly printed and bound in cloth. This work conclusively proves the doctrine of Life only in Christ, and we most heartily commend it. Price 50c

The above price is for those who want this work for their own use. If you want to use one or more in mission work, or for a gift to a friend we will send them for only twenty cents each.

The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. By L. C. Thomas.

Title page.—"The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. Also an Epitome of the Great Salvation; and an Appendix including various other subjects, in brief.

The perfect unchangeable moral law is considered and shown to be the basis and spirit of the old Sinaitic law, now dead in its entirety. The law of Moses and law of Christ are compared and contrasted, and the relation of both to the old and new covenants is treated at some length. The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the state of the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 180 pages, Cloth bound, Price $1.00.

The Priest, the Woman, and the Confessional.

—BY—

FATHER CHINIQUY.

ITS REVELATIONS ARE APPALLING.

Painful and horrible are words too weak to express the things which he relates — things enough to rouse the stones to cry out against a system which brings forth such apples of sodom and deadly poison to the church, the family and society.

Cloth, 16mo, 224 pages, with Portrait and Biographical Notice of the Author; Price $1.00.

FIFTY YEARS

—IN—

THE CHURCH OF ROME.

—BY—

CHARLES CHINIQUY.

A handsome volume of 832 pages, printed in clear type, on fine tinted paper. It is bound in strong cloth, marbled edges, and gilt stamp on side and back. Contains two portraits (one representing him in priestly robes) of the author.

There is no book upon the Romish controversy so comprehensive as this. It is a complete picture of the inner workings, aims and objects of Popery. It is from the experience of a living witness, and challenges contradiction. It is a large but very valuable work, and is fast becoming a standard authority. Six editions were sold in one year, and large orders are being daily received for the present and 8th edition. The book commends itself to the American people, and to lovers of liberty everywhere.

The book contains, among other startling revelations, thrilling chapters on, The Bible and the Priests of Rome; the Confession of Children; Festivities in a Parsonage; Protestant Children in Convents; the Trade in Masses; Rome and Education; the Miracles of Rome; Murders and Thefts in Quebec; Papineau and the Patriots; Perversion of Dr. Newman; Grand Dinner of the Priests; the Abomination of Auricular Confession; Some of the Thousand Acts of Folly and Idolatry which form the Life of a Monk; the Vow of Celibacy; the Impurities of the Theology of Rome.

We have secured a supply of this book, and can fill orders direct. If you wish to inform yourselves as to the inside working of Romanism, send us $2.25 and you will receive the book postpaid at once.

We can also furnish Mr. Chiniquy's other work, "The Priest, the Woman, and the Confessional." A cloth bound book of 296 pages; price $1.00 postpaid.

Also "Romanism—the Danger Ahead," by A. J. Graver; contains 140 pages; cloth binding, 75 cts., postpaid.

The three ordered together we will send for $3.60.

'THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.'

VOL. XXXVII. Dead PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOVEMBER 21, 1888. NO. 43.

THE RESTITUTION

TERMS
One Year - - - $2.00.
Six Months - - 1.00.
Three Months - .50.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

THE EARTH: ITS PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE.—No. 25.

BY DR. J. K. THOMPSON.

OBJECTIONS CONSIDERED.

Objections have been, and still are brought against the views of creation and redemption herein set forth, and, doubtless these objections will continue to be advocated in the future until its unfoldments shall reveal the certainties and processes of God's work, outlined now in science, and the brief revelations of his inspired Word. Some of these have been discussed, briefly, in the progress of this work, while a few of the others will be noticed in the present article.

Prominent in the list is the very prevalent and somewhat popular opinion of Darwin, Huxley and others, in relation to spontaneous generation, or "the origin of species by means of natural selection," which teaches that—instead of having been created by the All-Wise Creator in an unchanging world especially designed for each separate type of life, only affected within its specific sphere, by fixed laws of propagation or increase or decrease, improvement or degeneration,—the earth's fauna and flora are constantly undergoing mutations according to adaptation, through "natural selection," or "the survival of the fittest;" so that those of any particular species survive which are best calculated for their peculiar conditions of life, and to increase the improved stock at the expense of the weaker members. Affinity, or natural selection, it is claimed by the theory of evolution, affords the basis and occult force, by which all the fauna and flora may have been produced from a few, or even from a single form of life. Many eminent scholars have devoted their time and best thought to the development of this theory in its various forms, and they have adduced strong arguments and facts in support of it, but as long as the generic types of creation remain independent and distinct, and while the successive creations continue of the same general pattern in which they were originally created, although millions of years have elapsed since their first appearance on the earth, type after type occurring, each cast in its specific pattern,—"after his kind,"—and, while, too, the earth-parentage of the quadrupeds of the cenozoic predominance, and the water-origin of the reptilian productions of the mesozoic, are acknowledged as facts of revelation and research, with an unqualified resistance against the intermingling, or hybridizing of types so that it requires the utmost care, and unflagging persistence and patience, to even approximate such a result, by persons who have devoted all their best attainments to secure it, it certainly seems like folly to expect, or to argue that even years of association, or any other "natural" cause could produce this crossing of the species, with the improvement of the species of its ultimatum. Even if the hybridizing of allied species was not, so far as we know, inevitably followed by sterile progeny, deteriorization of the type would be equally as liable to succeed, or, even be expected, rather than improvement, and a universal "survival of the fittest."

But, even if the theory of the "evolution of the species by natural selection" be accepted as true, it does not follow that the forces which produce these results are the innate, inherent qualities of matter. God has ever wrought, (at least as far as our knowledge of his works extend,) through media, agencies and intelligences, in the accomplishment of all his purposes. When man was created, he was not brought into full being and conscious activity from the abyss of vacuity, nor by curtailing the caudal appendage of a baboon, but "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground," of the same material as was the remaining creations of Tertiary time, "and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life: and man became a living soul," Gen. ii. 7, and, whether we consider the ability of God as manifested in analytical and synthetical correlations of chemical combinations and affinities, or, in the forces and laws, the causes and effects of the physical world, or, attempt to fathom the occult processes and activities of animal and vegetable life,—their adaptation to each other and to their surroundings in the world, and of the different parts and members of organized bodies, with the peculiarly nice coaptation of each to the rest, and to its function in the economy of being, or study the beautiful mechanism of the universe of worlds, with the mutual laws, relations, composition and adjustment of each, or, trace the mind of the Creator through the development of the successive stages of earth-formative periods, with the advancements to higher planes of life in each age, or search the Word of God, which "came not in old time by the will of man: but which holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," for a revelation of his will and purpose in relation to the earth, and to man, the wonders of the atonement, and the glories of man's ultimate perfection in the "age to come," or, the relations of mind, and matter, in any of their varied manifestations, it is impossible for us to separate ourselves, either by the theory of "natural selection," or of "the survival of the fittest," or even of "spontaneous generation," from the truth that, a supreme intelligence has certainly planned all these things; that an intelligent and superior power has directed all these activities, and affinities, and that an unlimited knowledge was essential to properly conserve and co-relate all the materials and forces necessary to produce such vast results with such mathematical exactness, stability and uniformity.

Underlying all the activities, forces, powers and properties of the material world there is an uninvestigable disposer and designer, who is above all, and through all, and in all; conserving or correlating matter and its qualities at will, to attain, or delay results according to definite formula, and under such foreknown rules and principles as his prescience sees fit to dictate, so that, whether accomplished by the forces of "spontaneous generation,"—by, "natural selection,"—by "the survival of the fittest," or, by an arbitrary exhibition of the Divine power exercised upon inert matter independent of pre-existing forms of life, his creative energy is equally manifest in the creatures, powers, and properties, produced by his skill and care.

Another objection frequently offered, is based upon the stability of the earth, and the lack of evidence (except scriptural testimony) of any change in its conditions, and manifestations of life. It is not uncommon to hear repeated the long-since predicted question, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation." Where are the proofs that there will be an age yet to come in the future? What surety can be given for the fulfillment of the prophesies concerning the kingdom of God?

Peter terms this class of objectors, "Scoffers walking after their own lusts," and he says "they are willingly ignorant" of the facts of age-changes that have occurred in the past, and that will take place in the future.

Had such a one been permitted to view the earth in its formless chaotic state, as it was when the thought of the Creator first expressed itself in the early correlations of hitherto conserved forces, in order to establish the rotundity of the molten, shapeless mass, his thought would have been, "Where is the promise of a change of form in this fluid mass by which it will assume the shape of an oblate spheroid? What assurance is there that the dense cloud-wall by which the molten earth is surrounded,—a vaporous canopy resting on the surface of the earth materials, utterly impermeable to rays of light,—will be thinned to permit the sun's rays to penetrate to the surface of the earth? How shall we know that day and night will eventually alternate each other as a result of cooling of the earth's exterior coating of rock? I see no evidence of change, and everything is as it was at the beginning of creation. Year after year passes by without visible change."

The fiat of God, however, went forth; the cloud of heavy mist became thinner; the earth assumed form; the waters rested evenly over the level surface of the earth, and light penetrated the pall, and scattered darkness from an empty world, vindicating God's Word, which had said "Let there be light, and there was light," by producing Day and Night forever. God's veracity is established; the scoffer stands rebuked.

The objector of the Eozoic would have asked, "Where is the promise that the mist of gaseous, water vapor will ever be raised above the earth's surface, affording an interspace of clear air between the waters resting on the bosom of the earth, and those that hang suspended above it? Is there any proof that a canopy (the firmament) is forthcoming? What evidence is there that the warm waters of the Eozoic age will be peopled by countless millions of living protozoans?" Eozoic time moves on towards the completion of the age. "All things," says he, "continue as they were in the beginning of the creation." But ere the judgment of the age is announced as good the cloudlift, the canopy, the firmament, the separation of waters above from those below by a clear air-space, and the unnumbered mass of protozoan organisms inhabiting the warm flood attest the creative power of God. The scoffer is again rebuked by the wonderful progress of creation and God's veracity is confirmed.

The objector of the Palezoic Period would have enquired, "Where is the promise of a separation of the waters into immense seas by land areas? or, of the setting of the sun, moon and twinkling stars, to give light upon the earth? or, of the growth of a vegetation upon the exposed land surfaces, so dense that by its fossilization it will furnish fuel for all the necessities of a future age? What surety have we that a higher plane of life will fill the waters of Silurian oceans, than predominated in the warmer Eozoic. Why should we look for a still grander type of animal existence in the Devonian age than the waters of Silurian and Eozoic seas afforded? Behold, all things continue as they were in the beginning of creation. Everything remains unchanged, because no change is required." The long period known as Palozoic Time, however, rolled on with its unfoldments. The Mollusk, and the radiate, and the articulate, pre-eminent numerically during the Silurian, yielded to the vertebrates of the Devonian. The slugs, snails, and corals of the former were no longer the predominating type, but fishes with unequally-lobed tails, rapacious sharks, garr and sturgeons were everywhere present in the waters of the latter, basking in the brilliance of a new-born sun, or seeking protection from his mid-day rays beneath a mossy bank, or devouring beds of weaker forms of life to appease their ravenous appetites, in the milder beams of borrowed light from the moon and starry host of night, or lying concealed among the thickets of brake and fern and towering rushes, of the Carboniferous Era. The continental reliefs and contours were well defined; the foliaged, flowerless flora, picturesque, dense, grand; the fauna profuse though of the ichthye type alone, with a bright sun, moon and stars, of Devonian birth, shining over all. The organic forms of life of the Paleozoic type, live, pursue the few purposes of their existence, and dying, receive their sepulture and epitaph in the solid rock, to be opened and read long ages afterwards. The wilful ignorance of the Paleozoic scoffer has been overlooked, and God's ability to create new heavens and new earths according to his will, purpose and general plan, with the fauna and flora of each creation rightly apportioned to the conditions of the age in which they live, has been fully established.

The question of a Mesozoic objector would have been, "Where is the promise of reptilian predominance? Have not the types of life been exhausted in the present creation's fauna? What evidence is there that the Silurian mollusks, encrinites, and corals, will be exchanged for any higher living forms than those which have lived in the past, and are still living in the present? Where is the proof that the Devonian fishes and Carboniferous forests will not be repeated to constitute the fauna and flora of the Mesozoic? All things continue as they were in the beginning of creation. Evolution has brought the minute protozoan types of life from the Eozoic up through the gradations of progressive advancement by a "survival of the fittest," producing the Silurian embodiment of perfection in living organisms. Four grand types have been fulfilled by those of silurian waters; the fifth is completed by vertebrate existence. Amphibious, four-footed reptiles are far advanced above the fishes of the sea, and the insignificant fauna that inhabited the waters before them. Where is the promise of any farther advancement? The judgment answer of the Creator at the close of Mesozoic Age-work again discloses the wilful ignorance of the objecting scoffer, and vindicates the character of God.

The Cenozoic age dawns upon the earth with the race of reptiles insignificant in number, and diminutive in form and stature. The fiat of the Almighty is issued; Let the earth bring forth, etc., but the scoffer of the Tertiaries insists at once that there is no need of an advanced form of life on the earth, and enquires, "Where is the promise of the huge quadrupeds spoken of? No such organisms have existed in the past, what evidence that they will exist in the future?

What evidence is there to show that a different form of living beings will populate the earth. All things continue as they were from the beginning of creation. Reptiles have preponderated in the past, not only in numbers but also, in stature. The ichthyosaurus, the plesiosaurus, the dinosaurs, the megalosaurs, the pterodactyle, the rhamphorynchus, etc., have held sway since the beginning of creation. Where is to be found the promise of quadrupedal, mammalian animation? Of the megatheria, and of anoplotheria, of the xiphodon, and mastodon, and mammoth, and gigantic Irish elk, and cattle for future domestication? Where is the proof that a being will be created in the image of God and in his likeness, capable of obeying law, and of becoming immortal and perfect through such obedience,—an heir of the world to come?

The royal proclamation however, is made of the work of the age and God's creative power and energy fulfils it by creation of all those types of earth's fauna. Placental mammals spring from the dust of the earth at the command of the Almighty, and man is created from the dust of the ground, animated by the same fauna (breath of life,) and assigned to their subjugation and control under God. God's work of the ages proceeds without abatement to its completion, and the scoffer's questionings display his wilful ignorance of God's plan of age work, and his own lack of prescience. God is again vindicated to the confusion of the objecting scoffer.

The present, historical age pushes onward, with man alienated from God, from his purpose, and from even a desire to aid in the age-labors as God requires of him. The Divine man,—the head of the new creation, is made perfect through obedience, by a resurrection from the dead,—a pattern of the earth's future predominating fauna, a future sovereign of all the earth under God; he passes into the heavens, and awaits the completion of the age and its work, leaving abundant promise of his future return near the end of the age to resume his labors, and to finish his assigned work, yet the willingly ignorant scoffer inquires, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation. Death, an eternal sleep, is the common lot of all living organisms, including mankind. The "age to come," the resurrection of the dead, the blessing of all the nations of the earth, through Abraham and his seed, and the kindred topics that pertain thereto, are mythical inventions of priestcraft, unsupported by reason, unknown to science, and are unworthy of investigation." Yet God's Word has gone forth for the fulfilment of all these things, and he, as the Supreme Architect of the world, and in whom is our only reliance for future life or any of its attendant blessings, asks us to believe and conform our lives to them, for a participation in all their glories, for our own mutual benefit. They are indissolubly linked together, while the oath and promise of God, the Creator of all things, stand pledged that they will assuredly come to pass; and the fulfilment of the prophecy of the chaotic age, when God said Let there be light and there was light; of the eozoic in the establishing of a firmament, dividing the "waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament," and the introduction of protozoic organisms in the warm eozoic flood; of the silurian, with its defined continental outlines and reliefs, by which "the waters under the heavens were gathered together unto one place," with the exposure of fertile land areas, and its profusion of mollusks, articulates and radiates; of the devonian wealth of ichthye life, and the setting of the sun, moon and stars "in the firmament to give light upon the earth;" of the tree ferns, the sigillaria, the stigmaria, and lepidodendrons of the carboniferous era; of the mesozoic aion abounding in reptiles, hideous in form, terrible in appearance loathsome in their movements and, frightful in their destruction of the low forms of life, animal and vegetable, contemporaneous with, or, preceding them in creation; of the tertiary epoch notable for its giant quadrupeds, its animals for future domestication, and its man,—has not more certainly been followed by the exact fulfilment of the mandate of the Creator, than will his oath and promise for a "restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," that, "in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus."

Age on age already past
With their records laid in stone,
Make assurance doubly sure, at last,
That there is still an "age to come."

CHORUS:
O, there is an age to come,
When the judgment day is o'er;
And when God has called his people home,
To rest in his rest evermore.

In that age, when Christ is king,
Sin and sorrow cannot come,
Crowned with life, the saints can truly sing,
The delights of "the age to come."

Angel-equals, they will reign
O'er the world, with earth their home,
And the fruit of life's fair tree, again,
Is theirs through "the age to come."

Through our God's sabbatic rest,
With unceasing love and home,
All the nations will be truly blest
Evermore in "the age to come."

Hasten then, Oh, present age;
By thy toils and pains make room
For the judgment's chiliastic page
And the rest of "the Age to Come."
Amen, and Amen.

The Gospel.

The power of God unto salvation is inherent in the gospel, and in it, to the exclusion of every other power or agency, for which Paul said he was not ashamed. See Rom. i. 16–17. A certain power, or powers, may, and often does, inhere in what might be termed a gospel; everything in general (but without Bible warrant), and nothing in particular (and without warrant), and so may produce spasmodic action, a very agreeable sensation, ecstatic joy, etc.; but this is the extent of its power; no salvation from death or from death's embrace.

It is the gospel, having the definite article "the" as a prefix designating it, as something specific and definite which it is to accomplish in its mission and work. Paul says to Timothy, "I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession; that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ; which in his times he shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality, dwelling in light, which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen or can see; to whom be honor and power everlasting, Amen. 1 Tim. vi. 13–16.

I wish now to call the reader's attention especially to the first clause of the 16th verse, which reads, "Who only hath immortality," i. e., in the present tense. A complete refutation of the current theology of the nineteenth century transferred from heathen or pagan mythology and transmuted through catechism, the doctrine or dogma of man's inherent immortality. Plainly, if God only has it, then certainly no other being in the universe has it now. But this does not militate at all against the idea that man can never attain unto it. By no means, for it can be attained by patient continuance in well-doing, and earnestly seeking for it. See Rom. ii. 6–16. The mission of Christ is to save men through their belief of and obedience to the gospel. See Mark xvi. 15, 16. This gospel was brought to light by Christ who abolished death. No immortality as long as death reigns. See 2 Tim. i. 9–13.

The germ of the gospel is found in the promise of the seed of woman who will bruise the serpent's head The gospel was preached to Abraham; the covenant to him and his seed (Christ) of the land of Canaan (not heaven, or "beyond the bound of time and space," equivalent to nowhere) and here, the papal dogma of "going to heaven at death" is refuted. No such thing as inheriting the earth, see Matt. v. 5, and Psa. xxxvii. wherein the inheritance of the saint and the destiny of the wicked are put in contrast with each other. Truth, when allowed its normal position, will displace error to the same extent. The resurrection of the dead, Paul says the preaching of which is the gospel. See 1 Cor. xv. 2. Please read the whole chapter. No future life without a resurrection.

M. I. LEWIS.

Selections.

ASHER'S GOLDEN PROMISE.

As thy days so shall thy strength be. Deut. xxxiii. 25.

Think how deep this promise is. It is as deep as all our necessity. What kind of days are before us? Days of weakness and weariness, when footsore and faint we shall creep along the rugged path? As these days so shall our strength be. Will they be days of conflict, when the demands of truth and righteousness are on one side, and the attractions of interest and ease on the other, and we have to choose between them? As these days so shall our strength be. Will they be days of labor, above what flesh and blood can stand? Still the promise fails not, the heaviest burden that comes will be successfully borne. Will they be days of anxiety? Already we may be wondering how provision will be made for all our wants. Look at the sparrows on the snowy street. They do not sow, they do not reap, they do not gather into barns, and your Heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? O ye of little faith! Will they be days of perplexity, when all is dark and you do not know which way to turn? This bright promise guarantees guidance. Will they be days of temptation? You have entered on the way of life, how will you endure to the end, will you be among the number that overcomes? This gracious promise assures us that he who has begun the good work will finish it. Will they be days of death? The days of the last struggle, of the last terror, will certainly come to some of us, but let us lean on this life-giving promise and we will be able to sing,

Yea though I walk through death's dark vale,
Yet will I fear none ill,
For thou art with me, and thy rod
And staff, me comfort still.

Think also how high this promise is. If it is as deep as our necessity it is as high as God's capacity. It pledges to us all the resources of God. Can these ever be exhausted? If we can say "The Lord is my Shepherd," must we not add, "I shall not want?" Remember what strength God has poured into weak hearts, what wonders he has wrought for his people. Remember how he redeemed Israel and led them through the Red Sea, and guided and guarded and fed them in the waste, howling, wilderness, and brought them into his goodly land. Gaze on that picture gallery of faith in the eleventh of Hebrews and pluck up heart. Ponder the grace and strength that you have seen poured into the hearts of God's people around you in dark and evil days. Then lift up your hearts with confidence and say, "This God is our God forever and ever, he will be our guide even unto death."

Think again how short this promise is. It is limited to the day through which we are passing. It runs parallel to the command, "Be not anxious for the morrow, for the morrow will be anxious for itself." It echoes the blessed warning "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Do not expect the strength of two days to be given you in one day. You know not what a day may bring forth, but God does, and he never gives us Tuesday's strength on Monday, or Wednesday's on Tuesday, but according to the day so is our strength. God never promises us strength for burdens we shall never be called upon to bear, therefore if in our fear and folly we laden our hearts with the troubles of the future, we need not be surprised if we feel ready to sink beneath the load. I have heard of an old lady who was continually oppressed with the thought that she would die in the workhouse, and God gave her no strength to bear that burden, because he knew she would quietly fall asleep in her comfortable little room. Never bear tomorrow's burdens, for you cannot borrow tomorrow's strength; as thy days so shall thy strength be.

Think lastly how long this promise is. Though you live to be older than Methuselah this promise will last you all your days. This is a promise for all our earthly pilgrimage. We shall find it ready, waiting for us, every morning we awake on earth. However long, it will keep step with us all the way. Back from Murray Bay there are two lakes, Comporte and Morin, separated by a mile or two of bush. The camp at Lake Comporte is much better than that at Lake Morin, and once when fishing at Morin in the evening I resolved to come back to camp at Comporte for the night. But how could we traverse the interesting bush in the dark? I had with me a snowshoer's torch, and lighting it, I marched along the path with the two habitants following. Though I had often walked that path, I never before knew how many twistings it had, and how many fallen trees lay across it. Without the torch I should utterly have lost the way. Now mark! that torch did not light all the way from Morin to Comporte at once. It lit up only a very small part of it. But when I walked as far as the light illumined, it shed its light still further ahead; and thus, step by step, it lighted all the way, and brought us safely to our place of rest. So is it with this blessed promise. Though it only guarantees strength for the day, as we trust it every day, it will guide us to the very end, and bring us safely to our Father's house. Let not your hearts be troubled. Grasp this promise and say with David, "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever." "As thy days, so shall thy strength be."—A. B. Mackay, in New York Observer.

The Everlasting Rest.

One of the sweetest passages in the Bible is this one. "Underneath are the everlasting arms." It is not often preached from; perhaps because it is felt to be so much richer and more touching than anything we ministers can say about it. But what a vivid idea it gives of the Divine support! The first idea of infancy is resting in arms which maternal love never allows to become weary. Sick-room experiences confirm the impression when we see a feeble mother or sister lifted from the bed of pain by the stronger ones of the household. In the case of our Heavenly Father the arms are felt, but not seen. The invisible, secret support come to the soul in its hours of weakness and trouble; for God knoweth our feebleness, he remembers we are but dust.

We often sink very low under the weight of sorrows. Suddenly disappointments can carry us, in an hour, from the heights down to the very depths. Props that we have leaned upon are stricken away. What God means by it, very often, is just to bring us down to "the everlasting arms." We did not feel our needs of them before. We were "making flesh our arm," and relying on human comfort or resources.

THE RESTITUTION.

Plymouth, Indiana, Nov. 21, 1888.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their Name, Post Office, County, and State plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co. Ind.

Remittances should be sent by Bank Draft Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk: money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

Our paper is two days late this week, owing to the absence of the Publisher in Philadelphia. Full reports of the very interesting meetings held there will be given in future issues.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

At the time of writing these notes for this short paper I am, this Thursday evening, Nov. 15, at 6:30 p. m. in the city of Washington on my way to the contemplated National Conference to be held in Philadelphia as appointed in The Restitution. Six other brethren came on the same train that brought the Editor to this city. We came over the Baltimore & Ohio R. R., on the Limited Express, with tickets purchased to Philadelphia. We shall stay over in this Capital of the nation for about twenty-four hours. As it was becoming dark when the Editor, Brother J. H. Wagoner and Brother L. C. Conner got aboard at Walkerton, we had no good opportunity to see what kind of a country this road traverses through in the State of Ohio. This morning found us across the Ohio River in West Virginia. In this State we saw but little except rough hills and mountains interspersed with very narrow valleys. As a general thing the inhabitants of these regions live in poor, small isolated cots. Where there are coal mines, however, there will be something like a cluster of these small houses. It is only occasionally that the passing traveller beholds anything like beautiful, large, substantial buildings.

That our lives and our times are in the hands of God was demonstrated soon after we crossed the Ohio River at Wheeling. We were on the Limited Express East, and the Limited Express West was soon to meet us, but that one meeting never occurred. Through some cause not well ascertained by us, it ran into a freight train and several persons were killed, though, as we were informed, the passengers escaped.

> "Tomorrow, mortal, boast not thou
> Of time and tide that are not now;
> But know in one revolving day,
> That e'en thyself may pass away."

After climbing up grades, passing through dark tunnels, and descending down grades, and winding along valley streams, we found ourselves about 3 p. m. at Harper's Ferry, where the train was held a few minutes while the passengers eat their dinner or supper (whichever it might be called) opposite that little brick building now known as "John Brown's Fort." Here he intrenched himself with a few to fight in behalf of the helpless oppressed—the down-trodden slave. He fell a martyr to the cause he espoused, but his indomitable courage won the admiration of his most inveterate enemies, who envied him the fortitude to confront danger and death without showing any sign of flinching.

Along the line of the Potomac all through this part of the country is historic ground, made such in the last great conflict between the North and the South. Men die, but principles founded in eternal right live on in undecaying strength. God is in history and the revolutions that overturn thrones and wreck empires are not chance upheavals. John Brown plans and commences an apparently insane crusade, and his shattered body is suspended on a gallows, but the words, "His soul is marching on," inspired a resistless military avalanche that swept all before it. Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe writes a sentimental novel on the dreadful wrongs and oppressions of the despised slaves, and the heart pulses of nations beat in irrepressible throbbings of indignant sorrow and sympathy. The hand of destiny cuts down the oppressor with the sword, and wrenches the manacles off from the toil-worn limbs of the cringing slave. Moral forces are omnipotent when wielded by the Almighty hand of God. They may be smothered but after a while they become volcanic and overturn mountains. The end of overturning is not yet, and never will be till he shall come whose right it is to reign. It is only then that the earth will be filled with the glory of the Lord. It is only then that earth's deserts shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose, it is only then that the lion and the lamb shall lie down together, it is only then that every man shall sit under his own vine and fig-tree, and it is only then that the day of earth's regenesis shall come. So good-night dear readers of The Restitution. I have traveled nearly or quite 700 miles in the last twenty-four hours, and am writing these notes by gas light in a room of a Washington hotel, and it is bed time.

We left Washington on Friday evening last, or Nov. 16, at 5:30 p. m., arriving in Philadelphia at 9:30 p. m. Will postpone some notes regarding the capital of the nation to a future number, as our readers will look for some notice of the commencement of the National Conference in this number. Am writing between meetings at 1:00 p. m., and can only say that brethren have come in from north, south, east and west; that committees have been appointed and have got to work on the matters assigned them, of which details hereafter. A very able sermon was delivered today by Bro. Wm. Brookman, of Toronto, Ont., and the writer is appointed to deliver a short discourse on the Lord's Supper this evening, and serve in its administration. Bro. Kramer, from Brooklyn, is expected to speak at 7:45 p. m., this evening. Met with Bro. L. C. Baker, Editor of Words of Reconciliation, and some valuable works on human destiny. The presentation of the views advocated in his serial and books have resulted in his severance from the communion—Presbyterian—to which he belonged. To some extent his way has been obstructed, as a minister, but juster views of divine revelation will win their way despite all opposition.

So far the meetings for business have progressed harmoniously, but there are some perplexing questions up for consideration on which there may not be a unanimity of sentiment. The social meetings have been characterized by an exhibition of loving devotion to the Lord, and to his children assembled together—and those scattered abroad have not been forgotten. A spirit of the utmost kindness is manifested by the dear brethren and sisters of Philadelphia toward visiting brethren and sisters. Dinner and supper are prepared at the place of meeting so that no time is lost in going to and from places that have become our temporary homes. Our prayer is that they may meet a hundred-fold reward in this life, and eternal life in God's everlasting kingdom.

We forbear naming individuals, who are here as delegates, in this paper. We write this in the midst of exciting talk, and our readers must accept our paper for what it is worth, as the Editor will not be in Plymouth to throw it into the waste basket on a second reading. Imperfect notes may be acceptable owing to the subjects to which attention is directed. Till a better opportunity turns up we close, this another brief paper.

THE NEW HEAVENS AND NEW EARTH: REMARKS ON 2 Pet. iii. 13.

No. 3.

If a kingdom is to be established on the earth that shall have no end, as the covenant requires, the earth itself must have no end. Christ and his saints cannot reign for ever on the earth, if the earth in a little while is to be burned up and destroyed. In Joel we read, "But Judah shall abide (margin, or, be inhabited) for ever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation," Chap. iii. 20. And in the 37th chapter of Ezekiel, verse 25, the Lord God says, "And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, they, and their children, and their children's children, for ever."

The apostle Peter, speaking of the old world that was overflowed with water, says that it perished; but he does not mean that the earth perished; but that all the people, saving eight souls, perished in the waters, and also that an end was brought to the then prevailing state of society. The earth did not end, but has remained till this present time; and from the eight surviving souls, the human family has been replenished and remains. The burning up of the earth, therefore, is a strong expression implying, not its destruction, but its redemption,—its purification,—its being made anew. The Psalmist says, "Thou hast established the earth, and it abideth." "The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever," Eccles. i. 4.

When the seventh angel sounds, great voices in heaven will follow, saying, "The kingdom of the world is become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ: and he shall reign for ever and ever," Rev. xi. 15. A divine declaration like this is fatal to the notion that the world, or the earth, is to come to an end.

In a great multitude of passages there is clear evidence that after the coming of Christ, and the day of the Lord has begun, nations continue on the earth. But if there is a literal burning up of the earth, what will become of the nations during the time of burning? In our exegesis of this expression we are bound to have regard to the analogy of Scripture bearing on this period. All through the Millennial day we never lose sight of nations, and there is nothing clear on the point that they will end with the Millennium, although that opinion is so generally held; and we confess we have shared in it ourselves, more perhaps from the force of early training than from a conviction by comparing Scripture with Scripture; and therefore, whatever burning and destruction take place, it must be consistent with the continued existence of nations.

Dr. Seiss, referring to the several passages which speak of heaven and earth passing away, says, "The original word is never one which signifies termination of existence." It "is a verb of very wide and general meaning, such as to go or come to a person, place, or point; to pass, as a man through a bath, or a ship through the sea; to pass from one place or condition to another, to arrive at, to go through; to go into, to come forward as if to speak or serve. As to time, it means going into the past, as events or a state of things. That it implies great changes when applied to the earth and heavens is very evident; but that it ever means annihilation, or the passing of things out of being, there is no clear instance either in the Scriptures or in classic Greek to prove. The main idea is transition and extinction."

In his work entitled, "Geology and Revelation," Dr. J. Pye Smith says, "I cannot but feel astonished that any serious and intelligent man should have his mind fettered with the common—I might call it the vulgar—notion of a proper destruction of the earth. I confess myself unable to find any evidence for it in nature, reason, or Scripture."

There are a number of critical writers, some holding the Pre-Millennial view and some the Post-Millennial view, who do not confine this language exclusively either to the setting forth a material change or a moral and spiritual change. It may doubtless be regarded as embracing both; Scripture, we believe, will warrant its application to both. All the different forms of language employed on this point show clearly that the earth itself and also the heavens, or the firmament above us, will undergo a great and literal change. Every evil, indeed, every thing, whatever may be its nature, in the land or the atmosphere, which is inimical, in any way or in any degree, to man's well-being, will be removed. In this sense the earth and the heavens will be made new. But how little we can understand of the process of renewal which belongs only to the great Almighty Creator.

Then the language without doubt embraces a moral and a spiritual change. In the present age, the heavenly places, the air, or space above us, is occupied by the devil and by demons, or evil spirits: hence the devil is called by Paul "the prince of the power of the air," the wicked leader of the myriads of those who are "the world-rulers of this darkness," "the spiritual hosts of wickedness." These are enemies with whom we have to wrestle or struggle. But they will have no existence in the new heavens. In this sense the heavens will be made new in the Millennial age. The aerial regions perfectly cleansed of these foul spirits, may be well designated new, and much more so when the Christ and his joint-rulers, the king-priests, rule the world from "the holy city Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, having the glory of God." The language of the apostle, therefore, not only embraces the purification of the earth and the heavens, in a material point of view, but also their purification morally and spiritually in the overthrow of Satanic rule and the restoration of the theocratic rule.

What a blessed subject for contemplation is the new heavens. It will never be said of the new heavens that they have gathered blackness, that dark clouds have hidden the light of day, that a terrible storm is threatening the inhabitants of the earth, or that noxious vapors exist in the atmosphere, that malaria threatens the heath of the people.

The mind cannot conceive the everlasting peacefulness and serenity and beauty and splendor of the new heavens. On exceptionally bright and sunny days we admire the grandeur of the present heavens, but what will they be in the future when the Almighty Creator sets himself to the work of renewing the heavens, or restoring them to their former state?

Conference Report.

The Church of God in Indiana met at Plymouth, Ind., Nov. 8, 1888, and continued over Sunday following. On call of Churches it was found that Macy, Argos, Antioch, Rensselaer, Claysville, Pierceton and Plymouth were represented.

The treasurer's report shows $77.70 received. Paid out for Evangelist $25.00. Leaving a balance of $52.70.

The Evangelist's report shows that during the year he has preached 205 discourses. Number of converts 32.

Motion was made and carried that we try and keep an Evangelist in the field the coming year, and Brother L. E. Conner was again selected for that work.

A committee of three, I. G. Roberts, Wm. Railsback and W. Tuttle, was appointed on Evangelist work, and instructed to arrange with the Evangelist as to amount of salary, and to solicit funds from churches for his support.

Pledges were made of $50.00 each by Macy, Argos, and Antioch for Evangelist fund the coming year; Bro. Wince thought Claysville could send $10.00 and Bro. Willey agrees to have Rensselaer send $20.00. Pierceton has already sent a good sum, and if the other churches of the State will do as well as the ones who have pledged it will be an easy matter to keep our Evangelist at work all the time.

Brother Conner presented a letter from the Church at Sugar Grove, near Shoals, Ind., asking for admittance into this Conference, and on motion the request was granted. Sugar Grove church recommended Bros. Alvin W. Stewart and Philip C. Emmons as well fitted for ministers of the gospel, and asked that they be granted letters from this Conference, and on Bro. Conner stating that he had been there and could also recommend them, letters were granted them.

The preaching brethren present were S. A. Chaplin, J. F. Wagoner, L. E. Conner, J. L. Wince, R. S. Dwiggins and H. R. Carter. Notwithstanding it rained nearly the entire time until Sunday, the hall was filled at each meeting and good attention given to the words spoken. Our next meeting will be held, should the Lord permit, some time in February. Time and place will be announced hereafter.

THE LITERAL RETURN OF THE JEWS.

The same prophets who predict a future reversal of the spiritual curse of hardening which has for ages rested on the Jew, no less plainly and explicitly predict the reversal of all temporal curses which were denounced, and have so literally fallen upon the nation, the land, and the Holy City. Thus, for example, we read in Jer. xxx. 3: "Lo, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will bring again the captivity of My people Israel and Judah, and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave unto their fathers, and they shall possess it." So we read again in Ezek. xxxvii. 21: "Say unto them, thus saith the Lord God, 'Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side and bring them into their own land!'" Such examples, as every Bible reader knows, might be easily multiplied. It is utterly impossible to apply all such predictions of return to the land, as some have sought to do, to the return under Ezra from the Babylonian exile. Whatever they mean, it is absolutely certain that they refer to an event which is yet in the future. This will be perfectly clear from the following considerations:

1. The Scriptures of Divine Revelation undoubtedly predict a return which is to take place "in the latter days." To "the latter days" is expressly referred, e. g., the prophecy of Jeremiah, in chapter xxx. What this expression means, every Bible student knows. It is never used with reference to any period before the first advent of our Lord. Least of all is it ever used in any of those prophecies which by common consent refer to the restoration from Babylon. The return of "the latter days," therefore, whatever it be, cannot be understood of the restoration from Babylon, nor of any event before the first coming of our Lord. Hence, as nothing since the first advent has occurred which could be so understood, it is plain that the promised return is an event yet in the future.

2. Another proof that the Babylonian restoration cannot be intended in all these predictions of a regathering of Israel in the land which God has given them, is found in the fact that the restoration of the ten tribes, under the names of Ephraim, Israel, etc., as well as that of the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, is distinctly predicted. Thus, for example, in the prophecy of restoration in Jer. xxx. 31, the restoration of the house of Israel or Ephraim, as distinguished from that of Judah, is as specifically the subject of chapter 31 as is the restoration of Judah the subject of the chapter preceding. Very explicit is the language of the prophet Ezekiel in this matter: "Says unto them, thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and they shall be one in mine hand.... And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel, and one king shall be king to them all, and they shall no more be two nations, neither shall they be divided into two nations any more at all," Ezek. xxxvii. 19–22. It is very plain, again, that, whatever these words mean, they were not fulfilled in the restoration from Babylon, nor have been at any time since. They must refer to an event yet future.

3. In the third place, whereas the restoration from Babylon, and the rebuilding at that time of the city of Jerusalem, was followed again and again by dispersion and by a yet more complete overthrow of the city, this restoration of the latter days is uniformly represented as being absolutely final. Thus we read a most emphatic declaration of a rebuilding of Jerusalem, after which "it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down, any more for ever," Jer. xxxi. 40. So, also, by Amos, the Lord says: "I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them," Amos ix. 15. These words assuredly cannot be referred to the restoration from Babylon, after which they were again pulled up out of their land, and scattered more widely and fearfully by the armies of the Romans than they ever were by the power of Nebuchadnezzar.

4. Again we read of a restoration which shall not only be final, but complete. Thus, the Lord said by the prophet Ezekiel, "O mountains of Israel!... I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of it," Ezek. xxxvi. 8–10. So, also, by Isaiah the Lord promised, "Ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel!" Isa. xxvii. 12. Surely no one will insist that the restoration from Babylon satisfies such language as this. So far from all returning at that time, we are told that only 42,360 of the captives ever returned, Ezra ii. 1, 64. Anything approaching to a universal restoration of Israel to their own land the world has never yet seen. So, again, it is plain that whatever these predictions mean they cannot refer to the return from Babylon, but to an event which is yet in the future.

5. This is, if possible, made still more clear by what we are told of the condition of Israel thus restored. As regards their national life, they are to be in a state of independence. "Strangers shall no more serve themselves of Jacob," Jer. xxx. 8. But since the Babylonian restoration the Jews have had to wear the yoke of the Gentiles almost without interruption. The brief quasi independence of the Jews, under the Asmonean kings, was soon followed by the beginning of a more complete subjection than ever, from which they have never yet recovered. And then, in the second place, it is always added that after that future restoration to the land the long history of Israel's apostasies shall end. Thus we read of the prophecy of Ezekiel that after that final reunion of Ephraim and Judah on the mountains of Judah, they shall not "defile themselves any more with any of their transgressions." From that time on the sanctuary of God "shall be in the midst of them for ever more." It is needless to say that such words as these cannot be applied to a restoration which, if it cleansed them from idolatry, only brought them for awhile into their own land, there to commit after a time the greatest crime of their whole history, in the crucifixion of the Son of God.

6. Finally, the prophets themselves recognize the fact that there shall be two restorations. In the book of Isaiah this is said in so many words, thus: "It shall come to pass in the day that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea.... And he... shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth," Isa. xi. 11, 12. But the Babylonian restoration was the first, and not the second; and as there has certainly been no restoration since, it follows, according to the explicit teaching of the prophet, a second restoration of Israel is yet in the future.

Here then we have no less than six independent proofs that the Scriptures do predict a regathering of the Jews into their own land, such as the world has never yet seen. Do the words of Scripture which foretells that this shall be, mean what they undoubtedly say, or are they, one and all, to be understood as merely figurative descriptions of the prosperity of the church in the latter days, or, at most, as poetic amplifications of the prophecies of Israel's conversion?

Strange, indeed, that such a question should be raised! If such words as those which we have cited do not teach that Israel, the literal historical national Israel, shall yet be gathered into their own land, to be rooted out no more for ever, we ask, with all earnestness, what words could possibly have been substituted which should have taught this? The very same terms are used in Jer. xxix. 10, in predicting the return of the Jews from the Babylonian captivity, which are elsewhere employed to predict the return of the latter days. As every one knows, the event proved that these words were to be taken in their plain and evident literal sense; they meant precisely what they said, nothing more and nothing less. How, then, on any sound principles of exegesis, can any one be justified in denying that the self-same words in the same prophets, foretelling a "second" restoration, also mean exactly what they meant in the former case, namely, a literal return of the Jewish nation to their own land? We insist, on principles of interpretation which seem to us little less than axiomatic, that the presumption in this case, for the literal interpretation of these temporal promises to Israel, is wellnigh irresistible.—Samuel H. Kellogg, D.D.

The Depth of Bible Thought.

In the Bible there are certain little incidental—and apparently careless—touches, either direct statements or implied inferences, that are sometimes startling when the attention becomes fixed on them—for they may have been read a thousand times without exciting any particular thought. We have frequently been arrested by such passages in both the Old and the New Testament, and it has at the time appeared to us they could not have been put where they are found by any human hand. They involve truths so profound, and utter those truths in so unforced and artless a manner, and their significance is so veiled to the casual reader, that it seems impossible that they can have an earthly source. Such passages often occur in the Evangelists, in the discourses of our Lord—declarations that find their echoes in the very depths of our nature, and that seem to descend, like the rains of heaven, from outlying realms. When Jesus cried on the cross, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"—that was no human cry—though it came from the human side of his nature. But no other man, under the same circumstances, would have uttered that passionate appeal to God amid the agonies of the cross, for it was a dying testimony to the veracity of his life, and implied a consciousness of a relation to an extra mundane power which no human being could feel except through the Holy Spirit. We could point out many such verses in both the Gospels and the Epistles. They occur also in the Old Testament. For example, "It shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." We find this right at the beginning of the Bible—in the beginning of the very first book. There is no sense in it, taken in its lower signification; and if it had appeared for the first time in one of the Gospels, or one of Paul's epistles, it would not have been remarkable. But in Genesis, it is remarkable. The Messiah had not been developed at that time in Hebrew thought. But at the very moment man falls these two great thoughts find utterance—the Serpent, the kingdom of evil, and the Christ, the Kingdom of heaven. They are at once in conflict. The serpent symbol runs through the Jewish theology, and finds its most vivid expression in the imagery of the last book of the New Testament, the Revelation. Now, to predict (say in the time of Moses—though it is doubtless much older), that the seed of the woman was to bruise the Dragon's head, is a conception impossible to human thought, for no son of man could possibly destroy the kingdom of Satan, unless he were at the same time the Son of God. And our remark is, that to find this little statement of a couple of lines, carelessly as it were, thrown into the narrative of the early chapters of Genesis, may well rivet our attention. The inspired writer strikes at once—and at the very outset—the key-note of the whole burden of Revelation. That is the theme of all the subsequent books of the Bible—history, prophecy, and psalm. It is an arrow, as soon as the bow is lifted, in the very center of the mark, piercing on the first attempt the very focus of all the human speculation of all the subsequent ages; imbedded like a hidden gem in the very oldest page of the Hebrew books.

Another statement of this sort is found in the same connection, and uttered on the same occasion. It is the curse pronounced on humanity after the fall, and on the earth.

It has been the effort of men of genius and of great writers to represent human life as in many respects a very satisfactory affair. A great deal has been written about human happiness, and the pursuit of happiness. Our works of fiction, and children's books, represent earth as a very pleasant place, and human life, under favorable condition, as a very agreeable state of things. The fairy books of the middle ages are all based on this thought and fairly express the popular sentiment. The Bible, on the contrary—while indulging in no extended talk—at the very outset, as soon as the tragedy in Eden is enacted, in one single stroke, gives us the true delineation of human life; "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." And to the woman he said: "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow; in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." There is no rose-colored view of human life here, but a deep significance in every syllable. When we cast the eye back over human history—take the history of the Jews—how fearful has been the amount of human suffering! Or take the world today; take even London, the metropolis of one of the most prosperous and flourishing of all nations of the nineteenth century, and what is the condition, and who can estimate the sorrows of nine-tenths of the population? And then go to China—to India—to Africa—and how deep in the wretchedness of the sons of Adam! It was all foreshadowed in the few verses we have quoted—and here again too in the third chapter of Genesis, on the very threshold of the sacred books, the inspired penman strikes the key-note of another strain which runs through the pages of Holy Writ—the ruin of man, and the bitterness as well as the utter vanity of the human life. On these two texts are preached all the sermons that run through the prophets, the chronicles, and the lyric strains of the old economy; and through the Gospels and the Epistles and the apocalyptic visions of the New Testament. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread"—and in the sweat of thy brain shalt thou nourish thy spirit; and "the seed of the woman shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel,"—this is the summation of the history of humanity, and of the conflict between good and evil to be fought out through the ages on the theatre of human thought until Victory shall perch on the banners of the mysterious champion who in "the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God" was to overwhelm with confusion the Serpent-Prince of the powers of darkness.—Central Presbyterian.

The Lord is Coming.

The light of his coming is flashing afar,
The rising and glory of Bethlehem's star;
The heavens receive him no longer from sight,
Descending, encompassed with seraphim bright.

He comes! lo, he comes for the harvest of earth—
The gems of his crown-bright jewels of worth;
And the mantle of death is folded away,
And the faithful of ages are born in a day.

Behold the despised and crucified One,
Once led to the cross, now ascending the throne!
And the kings of the earth cast their crowns at his feet,
And the hosts of the heavens his praises repeat.

Rejoice, O ye faithful! the circling of years
Has hastened his coming to dry up your tears;
The sweet fields of Eden again are restored,
The kingdom of Jesus,—rejoice in the Lord.

Poetry.

"I SHALL BE SATISFIED WHEN I AWAKE WITH THY LIKENESS."

Even now my heart is ravished
With my Savior's precious love,
And, as hasting on to glory,
Daily I his sweetness prove,
Though he leads to living pastures,
And I taste a flowing tide,
Yet, until I see his beauty,
I shall ne'er be satisfied.

Many a song he gives to brighten
All the long and dreary night,
Many a cup of joy he gives me,
For in me he has delight.
Surely with such love abounding,
I could give up all beside;
Still, I'm sure, until I see him,
I can ne'er be satisfied.

O, my heart, with grace uplifted,
Would each fiery trial stem;
But, to gaze upon the Victor,
Decked with many a diadem—
Him to see, I've sweet desirings,
Who for me once bled and died;
And I know, till I behold him,
I can ne'er be satisfied.

For with him, I know, are treasured
Rarest things, both new and old;
But his love, his heart's affection
Choicer is than finest gold;
Changeless, too; than death, e'en stronger.
For my Lord was crucified;
And until these eyes behold him,
I can ne'er be satisfied.

Soon the day-dawn will be breaking,
And the shadows flee away:
Now, by faith, in joy and gladness,
I await the coming day;
For I know my soul is safely
Hidden in his wounded side;
And soon he sweetly tells me
I shall soon be satisfied.

Lo! he tells me now his secret,
Cheering with his heavenly smile;
Telling me, in love's low whisper,
It is but "a little while."
Yes, for soon to brightest glory
He will fetch away his bride,
Then I'll shine in his own likeness,
And be ever satisfied.

THE MAN OF SIN. 2 Thess. ii.
No. 18.

"Dr. Waterland seems to be of the same mind in general with Dr. Dodwell concerning the miracles of the fourth century, yet adds the following amendment to it, 'Nay and if we may believe Paulinus who reports it as an eyewitness, they continued down to the latter end of the fourth.'" But Dr. Middleton asks, "Why must we be referred to Paulinus in a question of such importance? a name unknown to the greater part of his readers; while the names of Athanasius, Basil, Jerome, Chrysostom are in everybody's mouth, and appealed to by himself on every other occasion; and who have written whole books on the miracles of that very age, wrought by saints and monks and reliques, many of which they have reported likewise as eyewitnesses as well as Paulinus. The omission, therefore, of these great names....is a clear, though tacit confession that he knew them all to have forfeited their credit in this particular cause; and that even his beloved Athanasius, on whose faith he had pinned his own...., was not to be trusted at least with the report of a miracle." p. 28.

"I take it to be a maxim on which we safely depend, that wherever the bishops, the clergy, and the principal champions of the Christian cause are found to be tampering with false miracles and establishing new rites and doctrines by lies and forgeries, it would be vain for us to look for any true miracles in that age and that church. And this was actually the case of the fourth century, in which all its most illustrious fathers, now saints of the Catholic Church, Athanasius, Epiphanius, Basil, Gregory of Nyssa, Ambrose, Jerome, Austin and Chrysostom, have all severally recorded and attested a number of miracles, said to be wrought in confirmation of some favorite institution of those days, which in the judgment of all the learned and candid Protestants are manifestly fictitious and utterly incredible."

Dr. Middleton argues that as at the beginning of the fourth century the Church received the protection of the magistrate, which continued to increase, there was no need for miracles. And again, if the miracles of the fourth century were forgeries, it will naturally excite in us the same suspicion of their predecessors who were yet more credulous. p. 30.

Speaking of the first ages (centuries) he says, "There never was any period of time in all ecclesiastical history in which so many rank heresies* were publicly professed, nor in which so many spurious books were forged and published by the Christians, under the names of Christ and his apostles, as in those primitive ages." He then quotes Cyprian's account of the state of the Church just before the Decian persecution, about A. D. 250. "That the body of Christians studied nothing but how to increase their patrimony; and forgetting what the faithful had done in the times of the apostles, or what they ought to do at all times, had no other passion but the insatiable ardor of enlarging their fortunes. No true devotion in the priests; that the simple were deluded, and the brethren circumvented by craft and fraud; to swear not only rashly but falsely and to quarrel among themselves with an obstinate hatred. That the Bishops, instead of relieving their younger brethren in the church, were eager only to heap up money, to seize people's lands by treachery and fraud, and to increase their stock by exhorbitant usury. p. 37.

"Mr. Dodwell says 'that many things concurred to recommend the credit of the preceding ages, which have no place in those that followed;" and speaking of the life of Gregory of Nyssa, a bishop of the greatest piety and gravity, he says, "in this life there are many things which breathe the air of imposture and the genius of the fourth century, so that I dare not mix them with what is more genuine for fear of hurting the credit of all." p. 128.

I come now to consider the argument on the ground of the Scriptures, so far as the promise of our Lord contained in his final charge to his apostles is concerned.

John Henry Newman, D. D., as already mentioned, wrote an essay on the Ecclesiastical Miracles. The import of the essay is thus described by the author himself: "That ecclesiastical miracles, that is, miracles posterior to the apostolic age, are on the whole very different in object, character and evidence from those of Scripture on the whole, so that the one series or family ought never to be confounded with the other; yet that the former are not therefore at once to be rejected; that there was no Age of Miracles, after which miracles ceased; that there have been at all times true miracles and false miracles, true accounts and false accounts; that no authoritative guide is supplied to us for drawing the line between the two; that some of the miracles reported were true miracles; that we cannot be certain how many were not true; and that under these circumstances the decision in particular cases is left to each individual, according to his opportunities of judging."

Note that Cardinal Newman admits there were false miracles as well as true; affirms that we have no authoritative guide for drawing the line; and that there was no Age of Miracles, after which they ceased. In reply I affirm on the contrary there was an Age of Miracles after which they ceased; that we have an authoritative guide by which to distinguish both between the false and the true, and to determine when the Age of Miracles ceased.

It is on all hands agreed, among professing Christians, that miracles were performed at two notable epochs of the world's history, namely, at the institution of Judaism and Christianity respectively. In the former case a notable series of miracles on a grand scale inaugurated the deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt, their settlement in Canaan and even their intervening forty years' wandering in the desert. Occasional miraculous working occurred in subsequent times, but only during the period when men inspired by Jehovah, were expressly employed in his service. A precisely similar order of things is found to have existed at the introduction of the gospel of Christ. This may be conveniently demonstrated in connection with the work of Dr. Newman already noticed.

Dr. Newman says there was no Age of Miracles; let us see. He admits there was a period when miracles of a certain class were performed, and which were different in several important respects from any that have been performed at any subsequent period. There was then an Age of Miracles, properly so-called. He quotes Mark xvi. 16, and following verses to prove that miracles were to continue to be performed by all who believe. But here there is no distinction intimated as to one class of miracles during a certain period, and a different class during a succeeding period. This text cannot therefore be adduced to prove a perpetual succession of miracles unless they be all of one kind. But I think it must be admitted that our Lord here promises a succession of miraculous working to be exercised by believers in general, without expressing any limitation as to time, or otherwise.

While making this admission, however, there is another question which arises, namely, Was there any limitation introduced as regards the method by which this promise of miraculous working was carried into practice? In other words, Was the administration of this endowment attended with any conditions whereby its exercise would be limited either as to persons or times?

The facts of the case are these. On two occasions only was there a direct communication of miraculous endowment after the ascension of our Lord. These were the day of Pentecost when the apostles were directly endowed with the gift of tongues; and in the house of Cornelius several Gentile believers. All the other cases recorded show these to have been exceptional. In the first it was the apostles only who were endowed; in the second, the direct bestowal of the gift upon Gentiles was evidently for the purpose of removing the prejudices of Jewish disciples (who were witnesses) to the admission of the Gentiles to the blessings of the gospel.

Here is a different case. Philip works miracles, preaches the gospel, baptizes both men and women (believers) in Samaria. The news comes to the apostles at Jerusalem, who immediately send Peter and John. These apostles pray for the believers that they might receive the Holy Ghost; then they lay their hands on them and they receive the Holy Ghost. This process is noted by Simon the sorcerer, for when he saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, etc."

Note here that Philip possessed the power of working miracles, but he was not an apostle, and therefore had neither authority nor power to communicate the gift to others. It required the presence of an apostle to lay his hands on the believers before such an endowment could be conferred. There is little wonder that we find this act of laying on of hands spoken of as one of "the principles of the doctrine of Christ," in the letter to the Hebrews.

The instance just quoted is clear as to the conditions under which the power of working miracles was communicated to believers. Another case occurs, which although not so express as to the absolute necessity of the laying on of the hands of an apostle, is still so far confirmatory. I refer to Acts xix., where Paul laid his hands on a number of disciples at Ephesus and "the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues and prophesied." Plainly in reference to this "principle" Paul writes to the Galatians and speaks of himself as "he that ministereth to you the Spirit."

Now it will be admitted that these instances are just as authoritative on the subject of the miraculous endowment of believers as our Lord's own promise recorded in Mark xvi. There is no inconsistency between them. The promise is silent as to direct immediate endowment as the result of belief and baptism. The facts are plain as to the conditions under which believers became recipients of the promise.

The Christian age of miracles began with our Lord's ministry, and was continued as there were apostles to administer the gift, and believers to receive it. After the apostles had disappeared, those believers who had received the gift would continue to possess it during the remainder of their lives. But when the last survivor of these had passed away, the Christian Age of Miracles would come to an end.

There was thus also "an authoritative guide for drawing the line" between the false and the true, namely, that indicated in the last paragraph, the existence of apostles to confer the power, and the right sort of believers to receive it.

It may be of interest to add an extract here from the Edinburgh Review on Dr. Newman's essay on Miracles.

The Reviewer, Edinburgh Review, points out several facts which are worthy of being noted. They are in substance as follows: (1) In the earliest remains of antiquity the traces of miracles are the faintest and the claims to their performance least decisive. (2) Chrysostom affirmed that miracles had ceased. In one place he says, as quoted in the Edinburgh Review, "Why are there not those now who raise the dead and perform cures?" In another, "Argue not because miracles do not happen now that they did happen then. In those days they were profitable and now they are not." (3) It was a maxim of many of the most eminent churchmen of the early centuries, expressly defended by Clement of Alexandria and by Jerome, that fraud was sometimes justifiable for a holy end. Mosheim says, "We would willingly except from this charge Ambrose and Hilary, Augustine, Gregory, Nazianzen and Jerome; but truth which is more respectable than these venerable Fathers, obliges us to involve them in the general accusation." The Reviewer says, "We may add also that it was probably the contempt of this pernicious maxim that engaged Sulpicius Severus, who is far from being in general a puerile or credulous historian to attribute so many miracles to St. Martin." (4) Such was the credulity, carelessness, the indiscriminate appetite for wonders which characterize even the recorders of the best attested and most venerated of these miracles, that there is not one of them who does not relate ten times as many as even the most egregiously credulous of these times can by any possibility receive."

Dr. Newman's craving for some authority outside the Scriptures may be seen in the following. The Quarterly Review, in a notice of John Henry Newman's "Development of Christian Doctrine," gives the substance of that work in these words: "There are no better grounds in the Scriptures and in the earlier Fathers for some of those doctrines which are most universally received by the great mass of Christian believers, beyond as well as within the pale of Rome, than for the more peculiar doctrines of that church; that the testimonies are equally vague, dim, precarious, ambiguous and contradictory; for the Trinity and the Inspiration and authority of the Scriptures as for the worship of the Virgin Mary and for the supremacy of the Pope. Original sin and Purgatory stand and fall together." Vol. lxxvii. p. 406.

I must now leave this branch of the subject for the consideration of the readers, hoping on some future occasion to say something on the destruction of this power by the brightness of the Lord.

J. CAMERON.

AN OCTOBER MORNING TALK.

Yesterday morning I came from West Farms, riding in a stage, which was merely a little wagon drawn by a sorry little horse, that had its courage stimulated by frequent clips about the ears and forelegs by the driver's lash. I did not enjoy the belaboring. But worse than this, was the speech of a young man sitting on a little box. Finally I said to him, "You and I are not alike in one thing. You swear and I don't. I don't enjoy hearing that kind of language, and if you will hold on until I get to my journey's end, I'll be obliged to you." He assented and refrained, and I had a ride in peace, even though it rained.

Now is apple-gathering time in New England, and many a man climbs into high trees, but let him climb carefully. Two things are needed in picking apples, viz., care and confidence; not one alone, but both. Confidence speaks or thinks thus, "the thing can be done," and care whispers emphatically, "yes, but every moment be vigilant, and step slowly and cling tightly." One must stand firmly on sound limbs, and have the ladder-top leaning securely. So all through life, what a needful combination, care and confidence! When I say care, I don't mean foolish and ugly worry, but healthy and perpetual vigilance. This work of apple picking is often much hindered by an excessive growth of small limbs. A knife and saw were much needed to clear the way. So in any important enterprise, it often happens that preparation must come first, or there is great waste of time and opportunity and vitality. And those treacherous dead limbs! We are to look out for them and trust them not. Let no one lean on false supports.

Here are my good aged farmer friend and his wife. In spite of the rocks on their place, they thrive. And what a glory in the dashing brook that comes fresh from the mountain-top and goes foaming and roaring through the orchard. I say a brook is a perpetual miracle. It never fails. Think of that. It illustrates the perpetuity of God, who never tires and fails. And into the kitchen comes a pure stream for all good and useful culinary purposes. It is infallible, it comes forever. And in fact there are miracles everywhere, the world is full of them in nature. And do we long for miracles still, when we are surrounded by them? We would suspend some law which is itself a wonder, and that suspension we call a miracle, and perhaps it is, but the law itself and its working excite our admiration if we stop to consider.

Perhaps it is no miracle when through lack of vital force, or violation of wise and divine natural law, disease is present. How precious and welcome then were some reinforcements of vital energy whereby the malady were rejected and recovered from! That gift to give Jesus had, and he gave it to his apostles, but it is all too doubtful and uncertain in our day. Some glimmering of it may now and then be seen around us, but it serves to me only or mainly as a reminder of what God can give again in its plenitude if he will. It is a matter of God's will and wisdom, whether any man on earth can ever again heal instantly with a word. But while we are about it, we may as well include the power to live long, as the patriarchs did. Why need people die. Why must they die, so commonly and often at a comparatively early age? When God reinforces the vital force with a breath, and when men obey the laws of life then, then they may live to be as old as the oldest of the venerables before the flood. If the Lord could blow the breath of life into our first father's nostrils, he can surely add to it with a mite of infinite breath, or I may rather say, spirit-power.

I think of things in these days by their qualities. In fact every thing has its virtue and even existence, by its qualities. Suppose you are invited into a room where a man lies. But he lacks one thing, that is, life, and he is a dead man, or practically nothing at all. There is another who has life, but he has no intelligence, and he is a mere drivelling idiot. There is another who has life and intelligence, but he entirely lacks truth, and he is accordingly a miserable liar. Or here is another who has life, intelligence and truth, but he lacks love, and he is still a fatally defective creature, and adapted for little usefulness or happiness. But in God all these things and more, exist together in grand and absolute perfection. What a being to be glorified then, is he! He is great by his qualities or attributes. And so the attributes make the title to adoration. Think of this, that God is love, and how much this means. That he is truth, and how much that means. Add to these life, and what a sum of perfections! And with them of necessity must go intelligence, for how, or where, can the others be or abide, unless the last is included?

I would that the world were full of industrious, honest farmers, at least until something better is provided or ordained. Alas, what sinks of iniquity are our American cities! Not totally, but deplorably. How vice thrives in indolence and thriftlessness! What infamy in stealings by sundry officials, as well as thefts by the grovelling poor and vicious! Moral reform may do great things, but we can never give up thinking and hoping of that administration of power that, if need be, will compel men to do right for the time, until that age when high and right choice shall supersede all need or sense of necessity from without. The necessity from within, or the perfect choice, is the perfection of things indeed. But for now, give us law and order, give us power and authority that will put an end to the villany and misery of the times. Give us the strong hand of the greater David, with the wisdom of the wise in that glorious perfection of the perfect man.

My farmer friend is busy as a bee, and he is a thinker, too. And his wife, who is nearly seventy, moves with almost youthful briskness over her kitchen floor. She is a keeper at home, and her eyes are open on her work. There are a hundred or less lively fowls on the premises, and quite often one of them comes to the table. How pure and tonic is the autumn air among the apple trees! But it is an autumn of copious rains, even to lavishness. When was such a September, or such an October? But today the sky is pure and blue, and who ever saw anything lovelier? In that vast immensity there is not a sign of anything to view, as I look up. Yet we know there are countless thousands of worlds out of sight. So everywhere, though we, guided by our weak sight and sense, may say there is nothing, there are nevertheless wonders on wonders. We may say there is nothing beyond electricity in nature, nothing interior to that, or more potent, but how little we know! In fact we know nearly nothing. So much we know. We know there is God and he fills immensity. God is spirit, and spirit rules. The invisible is at the head and heart of things. Nothing can resist the operation of the Spirit; silent, steady, invisible and irresistible, in all the realm of created things. The blue of the sky is sweet, and thanksgiving from the heart is a sign of character, an inner hue, in harmony with the hue of heaven.

"He to Rescue Me from Danger."

I suppose nearly every one is familiar with the hymn,

"Come thou fount of every blessing,
Tune my heart to sing thy praise, etc."

I have been singing this hymn for many years, sang it a few nights ago in a company of eight or nine men, in what we Methodists call a class-meeting.

I was struck with the inaccuracy of the words, "for the first time," which heads this letter. I told my brethren there and then, what I thought of the author's conception of our Lord's mission. "Rescue me from danger?" Danger of what? Shipwreck? Yes, he did rescue some once on the Sea of Tiberias, and saved sinking Peter; also Paul and his trembling fellow passengers, near the shores of Malta; (there was no blood shedding required to effect this rescue). But how about the others who have perished all through the centuries and are still perishing on land and sea? Are the brave men and women rescued from danger, who leave home and home comforts, to minister to the stricken ones of Jacksonville, Florida? Are believers on the battlefield shielded from the enemy's shot and shell any more than their unbelieving comrades? I think not. No, no. The work and mission of Jesus the Christ means infinitely more than a rescue, an exemption from danger. The greatest danger is the (so far) unconquered enemy, close on our rear. Mounted on the fleetest horse, we cannot hope to escape his lance. No matter how long we may elude this monster, he is sure to run us down at last. No city of refuge were we may escape from this pursuer.

News has just reached me, that my dear old father, near Limavady, County Derry, Ireland, had to yield on the 15th of last month to this enemy. He was a God-fearing and upright honest man. He was about 104 years of age, and nearly half of that time was a great sufferer, in mind as well as in body. Myself and the rest of his children, at a time when he needed our society and help, left him and came to this country. We told him as we had nothing but what we worked for it was better for him and ourselves that we leave that poor and misgoverned country. While it is true that we always aided him in a pecuniary way, we could not rescue him, save him from a painful sense of isolation and loneliness. Has he ever experienced, because of his belief in Christianity, a rescue from danger, from loneliness, from helplessness, pain and death?

No, no, he has had all these in full measure, pressed down, shaken together and running over. Now when is this dear old prisoner and sufferer for nearly seventy years, to experience a rescue? Why according to the sacred book, when the time comes in the divine order to break death's prison bars, and the ransomed are brought back from the land of the enemy. Before I saw THE RESTITUTION I knew next to nothing about the teaching of God's word relative to the heart consoling doctrine of restoration, resurrection. The only comfort I got from the church was a muddled symposium on ghostology, namely, that all good ghosts would, immediately after getting out of the body, meet in heaven and have a real pleasant time talking over the dangers they had gone through, and the marvellous difference between ghost life and mortal life. I praise God in my heart of hearts, that I have learned the rescue Jesus brings to us who have fled to him for help, is more, far more than a rescue from pain, loneliness, poverty, bad men, or bad ghosts. It is a rescue from the grave, from death, from corruption. I had hoped to visit father before death made him his prisoner; but I will see him after resurrection, the time set by the author of our salvation for earth and sea to give up, surrender, their dead. My Methodist brethren scarce ever speak of resurrection. They have no particular use for it. Like the Presbyterians, after death, "they do immediately pass into glory." The grave digger is only a myth. If this delusion ministered any comfort to those who mourn, it might perhaps be harmless, but it don't. The friends who have "immediately passed into glory" are mourned as though they were dead. Blinds are closed. Crape fastened on the front door, and other indications to mark the place as "the house of mourning." There is a vast lack of harmony between creed and conduct in our "orthodox" churches.

The preacher who stands in the presence of death, and deals out pious blarney to the mourner, will surely have to answer for his religious lies. We sneer at Romish mummery, how is this for Protestant twaddle. (Ghosts bearing dispatches from earth to heaven!) Look at it.

"Our friends that death takes from us are every way better off than we, certainly in respect of knowledge. They hear from us, I am sure, for while there are no arrivals from their bright home to us, there are constant arrivals from us to them, from whom they gain intelligence that makes them, I imagine, love us more, and so we may expect, when it comes our time to go, the warmer welcome. I leave to your imagination the meeting that has now taken place between the father and the son, and the sweet story the latter has to tell the former of the other loved ones he is waiting for. Think of the greetings of the new arrivals by those who have gone before, of how their happiness is enhanced by joyful meeting, etc."

This is a part of what the preacher said a few days ago, standing by the coffin of a dead friend and brother minister of the gospel. "I leave to your imagination the meeting that has now taken place between father and son." (The father was "taken up higher" some time ago.) That God will rescue his own at the time he has appointed, I fully believe; but I do not believe the divine programme will be changed to gratify our whim.

ISAAC MCCORRY.

Up-lifting the Nation.

"Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself: thou shalt give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto an alien; for thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God." Deut. xiv. 21.

It is true that many of the requirements of the Mosaic law are not up to the standard of the Christianity of today; but it is also true that the highest requirements of the Christianity of today are the outgrowth of the teachings of the Mosaic law, and are in accord with the inner spirit of those teachings. The first of these truths can be seen by all of us. The second of these truths we are liable to lose sight of....In the days of Moses the flesh of animals which died of themselves was eaten freely by wellnigh all the peoples with whom the Hebrews had to do; as indeed it is by a large share of all the primitive peoples of the earth at the present time. It was God's purpose to raise the Hebrews to a higher standard in this particular; therefore he told them to leave it to other peoples to pursue this custom, but to refrain from it themselves. If, indeed, God had commanded them not to allow other peoples to eat such flesh when they preferred it to any other sort, he would have seemed unreasonable, and even unkind. The wisest measure at that time was to teach the Hebrews that the higher standard, the standard for God's peculiar people, was an abjuring the use of such flesh, while permitting that use to those whose tastes and level were below their own. While travelling in the desert of Sinai, the writer of this note rejected a lot of rotten eggs from the supplies that had been brought from Egypt by his dragoman. At once the dragoman gave those eggs to the Arabs of the caravan, who, with a full knowledge of their condition, devoured them with as hearty a relish as an American epicure devours his portion of Limburger cheese. It would have been cruel to deprive those Arabs of the enjoyment of their epicurean feast; as it would have been unworthy of a person trained to Bible standards of purity so far, to have been a sharer in that feast. It is to be noted that God did not command the Hebrews to deceive the stranger and alien, by selling to them this flesh as if it were of fresh-killed animals, but he simply authorized them to dispose of it to them as it lay. Even at the present time, while there are strict laws against the exposing of such meat deceptively in the markets, a man may sell a dead cow, or dead fish, to a customer who has a use for it, and who understands its condition. There is, of course, no sin per se in the eating of the flesh of an animal that died of itself, or in the eating of rotten eggs and Limburger cheese. It is simply a matter of conformity to the "present ideas and customs" of those whose practices are conformed to the highest standards indicated in the upreaching of the Mosaic laws.—The Sunday School Times.

Good Advice.

It is better to tread the path of life cheerfully, skipping lightly over the thorns and briars that obstruct your way, than to sit down under every hedge lamenting your hard fate. The thread of a cheerful man's life spins out much longer than that of a man who is continually sad and desponding. Prudent conduct in the concerns of life are highly necessary; but if distress succeed, dejection and despair will not afford relief. The best thing to be done when evil comes upon us is not lamentation, but action; not to sit and suffer, but to rise and seek the remedy.

OUR DAILY BREAD.

Close beside us stands the tempter,
And his voice comes low and sweet:
"All these treasures will I give thee,
Only worship at my feet."
And our hearts so weak and wayward,
Long to prove what he has said:
Father, in our hour of danger.
Give us then our daily bread.

In the day when ruthless sorrow
Kills all joy within the heart,
When bright hopes that we have cherished
Slowly from our life depart;
When the storm cloud o'er us lowers,
And our hearts sink low through dread;—
Father, in this time time of trouble,
Give us now our daily bread.

When the sunshine brightens round us,
All our friends seem warm and true,
And the future with caresses,
Woos us as we still pursue;
Father, let our joys and gladness
Still from heavenly founts be fed:
In the hour of joy's sweet trial
Give our souls their daily bread.

At all times and in all places,
Under bright or clouded skies,
Framed in words of Christ's own choosing
Does this same petition rise.
May both we and all thy children
Ever by thy hand be fed;
Father, in thy love and pity
Give us all our daily bread.

Selections.

Rescued By Infidels.

Few people in lands of religious freedom have any knowledge of the amount of persecution to which Christians are still subjected in foreign countries, of the insecurity of Protestant converts in Mexico, France, Spain, Italy and other lands where the Roman Catholic Church has lost its power but not its spirit. The devout Romanist is especially bitter towards those heretics with whom he has associated, and who have been reared and instructed from childhood in his own faith. For such there is little mercy. Within the past ten or fifteen years it has been unsafe to attempt the burial of an Italian "heretic" in a Protestant burial ground in the city of Rome; corpses having been torn from the bier on which they were carried through the streets, and stamped into the ground by an infuriated mob, who attack funeral parties, bruising and wounding the company with clubs and stones.

The following account, related a few years since in the Pearl Street Congregational Church, in Hartford, Conn., by a well-known Protestant minister from Rome, himself an Italian, is another verification of that promise, "I will be with him in trouble: I will deliver him."

"About seven years ago, (1876?) I was engaged, as I have been since, in missionary work in the city of Rome. I found it exceedingly hard to obtain any building or rooms suitable for holding religious meetings. I would find a building to rent or for sale in a desirable location, but before the bargain was closed with the owner, the question would arise, 'For what purpose do you propose to use this building?' And when the answer came, 'to hold Protestant meetings' the face of the affair was changed, and I was sent on my way in quest of another room. At last after many disappointments, and when I was becoming entirely discouraged, I succeeded in securing a small building, on one of the narrow Roman streets, which opened upon a 'square,' in the form of a new moon, the horns of the crescent embracing the sides of the building. I am particular in describing the situation of this building in order that you may understand the circumstances connected with the story which I relate. The main entrance was upon the wide portion of the 'square,' but there was a side door opening upon one of the points of the little enclosure. The room in which we held our meetings was plainly but conveniently furnished, well lighted, and on the whole, a source of much encouragement to myself and others interested in the work of saving souls. I was prepared for disturbances and anticipated some disorder, but after preaching there for about a week, as everything remained quiet and the congregation steadily increased until the room was crowded, I began to lose all suspicion or fear of our enemies, and entered the pulpit with a freer mind and greater liberty of speech.

One evening, as I was speaking of the love of God toward sinners, I became so engrossed with my subject that I did not notice a cry outside, until my congregation had become so startled by it that they rose and rushed in great excitement into the street. I then perceived that a crowd had gathered around the house and were shouting in the Italian tongue: 'Death to the heretic! Death to the heretic.'

I knew what that meant. I had not lived in Italy all my life to be ignorant of the fact that that cry threatened butchery to me. I saw too, that, humanly speaking, there was no deliverance for me. There was nothing, even, behind which I could hide for the moment. And for that moment I lost all emotion save that of abject terror, and could compose myself to think of nothing but the loss of my own life. In the blind extremity of my terror, I even tried to crowd myself into the little box which served as a pulpit. As I was endeavoring to do this, my little Bible which lay thereon, fell open, and my eyes rested mechanically upon these words, "It is I; be not afraid." The Spirit of God sent those words home to my heart; and as suddenly as my fear came upon me, it departed, and I rose to my feet, calm and fearless. All this had transpired of course, in a very much shorter space of time than it has taken me to tell it, and at this point, two men entered the narrow side door of which I spoke to you, which was the only entrance except the one in front at which the mob were already assembled. In their hands were drawn daggers, and as I saw the glistening blades, I supposed that the assassins were about to end my life; but as they approached me the foremost one said.

'Don't be afraid! we are friends, follow us.'

Bewildered by this sudden change of circumstances, I descended from the platform, and without fear or hesitancy, passed with them out at the door through which they had entered, and, walking between them, went through the midst of the maddened crowd without the slightest notice being taken of me. The two young men were artisans and infidels. They had no personal interest in my welfare, but had heard of me and my work, and could see no reason why I should be butchered because I was a Protestant. They wore the costume of the workingman, and whether their dress and weapons led the mob to regard them as belonging to their own party, or whether the angel of the Lord blinded their eyes so that they might not know me, I never knew. I returned to the scene of riot next day and found the seats broken in pieces, the windows demolished, Bibles and hymn books destroyed, and confusion reigning. One small Bible remained. It was the little book that brought God's message of love to my heart, when I was on the dark waters. It had been thrown from one corner of the room to the other and caught upon the points of daggers, and was cut and hacked in many places; but I still carry it with a thankful heart, and have exhibited the book and told the story many times in my own and other lands, as my own testimony that the Lord is yet with us as he was with his disciples in the storm."

The young men who rescued M——, were afterwards converted, and one of them has since labored with him, doing mission work in the city of Rome.

The Pool of Bethesda.

"We have generally an announcement to make, but not often of so much importance as that of this day. It is the discovery of the Pool of Bethesda." So writes Mr. Walter Besant in the Quarterly Statement, issued by the Palestine Exploration Fund recently. He is jubilant, as all Palestine enthusiasts are likely to be, that a vexed question in regard to a site is apparently settled forever. As the papers contributed to the Quarterly Statement by Herr Schick, Sir Charles Wilson, and Capt. Conder are of an exceedingly technical character, and seeing that the organ of the Palestine Fund has only a limited circulation, it may, perhaps, be of interest if we try to set out in brief space the nature of the important discovery that has so recently been made.

Bethesda is mentioned only by the fourth Evangelist. In the fifth chapter of his gospel, John says: "Now there is at Jerusalem by the sheep market [or gate] a pool which is called in the Hebrew tongue Bethesda, having five porches." The word translated "pool" in the authorized version is given by some authorities as "swimming bath," and the phrase "pool by the sheep market" is possibly better rendered "sheep pool." Eusebius explains the occasional red color of the water of this "sheep pool" as being a trace of the carcasses of sheep washed in it before sacrifice; hence the name. There were, according to the Evangelist, five porches, or porticos, around the pool. These, Dr. Geikie thinks, charity built for the accommodation of sufferers. It seems to us, however, equally probable that they formed part of the original scheme for the bath. Five porticos would seem to imply a pentagonal structure; but this is by no means essential. A rectangular pool with a portico on every side, divided by one across the middle, would answer the description. "Bethesda," by the way (a Hebrew name which was very probably invented by St. John) may mean either "house of mercy," or "the place of the pouring forth" [of water].

At the northeast of modern Jerusalem, close to St. Stephen's Gate, stands the Church of St. Anne. At the time of the Crimean war it was a ruined mosque, but when the French came into possession of it, they restored the church and handed it over to the Algerian monks. It is near this church of St. Anne, and in connection with excavations made around it, that the real Pool of Bethesda has recently been discovered by Herr Conrad Schick. There is a court-yard to the northwest of the church, which leads through a newly-opened passage into another court yard, some fifteen feet square. At the north of this latter court-yard there was at one time a small church. Beneath the floor of this sometime church are vaults, and through the floor of these vaults a cistern is reached, cut into the rock to a depth of thirty feet. This cistern is a portion of the original Pool of Bethesda. There is still water in it, but it is difficult to say whence it comes. This, in brief, is Herr Schick's report of April 5. Since then further excavations have been made, and he has prosecuted more extended inquiries. A twin pool has been discovered. Further examination will bring more details to light; but it may now fairly be assumed that the two pools, tanks or cisterns, thus discovered, really constitute the Pool of Bethesda, "having five porches," where Christ healed the paralytic of eight and thirty years' standing.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A place is prepared for each one of us; a place fitted to our distinct character; a separate work fitted to develop that character into perfection, and in the doing of which we shall have the continual delight of feeling that we are growing; a place not only for us, but for all our peculiar powers. Our ideals shall become more beautiful, and minister continually to fresh inspiration, so that stagnation will be impossible. Feelings for which we found no food here shall then be satisfied with work, and exercised by action to exquisite perfection. Faint possibilities of our nature, which came and went before us here like swallows on the wing, shall then be grasped and made realities. The outlines of life shall be filled up, and the rough statue of life shall be finished.

We have made arrangements with the importers, by which we can supply our patrons with the following works, at the prices named:

"Light for the Last Days;" by H. Grattan Guinness, price $3 50.

"The Last Prophecy" by Elliott, price $2.00.

The Coming Age—Its Nature and Proximity. By J. P. Weethee.

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live to the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

The Coming Age is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the Coming Age, whatever can be learned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand is the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in cloth, Price $3 00. Send to this office for this work.

The Eastern Question

In its various phases,—Egyptian, British, Russian, Ottoman, Hebrew, American and Messianic, by J. P. Weethee. The title of this book gives a good idea of its contents, and the reputation of the author is a guarantee of its worth. The subject as a whole, and in its different divisions is handled in a masterly manner, and the reader is convinced at once that the author has spared no labor in the study of his topics. The work is thoroughly done and any one who carefully reads the 610 pages of this book will be well repaid. It is just the book for the time in which we live. Cloth binding, clear, pleasant type to read, and good paper. Price $2.50. Send to this office orders will now be promptly filled, as we have received an invoice of the book, and will send direct from here. The two books, "Coming Age" and "Eastern Question" if ordered together, $5.00.

Dr. Smith's Bible Dictionary.

A Dictionary of the Bible comprising its Antiquities, Biography, Geography and Natural History, with Sixteen full-page Engravings, numerous smaller Illustrations, besides Maps of the Holy Land in the time of David, the time of Christ, and General Map of the Countries mentioned in the Bible. It contains every name in the Bible concerning which anything can be said. It gives an account of each of the books of the Bible; explains the civil and religious institutions, the manners and customs of the Jews, as well as other nations alluded to in the Scriptures. This work by Dr. Wm. Smith, is just the "aid" to Bible study that you need, and every thorough student should place a copy on his table—you cannot read a chapter in your Bible without coming to some question on which you wish more information, and the best help you can get is Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary. Bound in cloth, 776 pages, price $1.50.

"The Gospel of Our Salvation and kindred doctrines—as Life only through Christ—Resurrection of the dead—Second coming of Christ—The Kingdom of God, etc., will be faithfully preached every Sunday morning at 10:30 a. m., to which services we heartily invite the seeker after divine truth. This service will close at 11:30, after which the church will meet for conference, "breaking of bread and prayers." 116 Grand st., 2nd first door, Brooklyn, N. Y.

ROMANISM:

THE DANGER AHEAD. THE REASON WHY A GOOD ROMAN CATHOLIC CANNOT BE A GOOD CITIZEN OF THIS REPUBLIC.

—BY—

A. J. GROVER.

The writer has given to the people of America statements of facts and figures which they will do well to reflect upon. The prospect for the future of the United States is not encouraging. "Romanism has votes to be cast as a unit. These votes are necessary in national elections, and in most local elections, to party success; whichever party will promise to do most for Romanism, will get them. Here lies the danger. Politicians have already silenced or subsidized the Protestant pulpit and the partisan press. As in the days when slavery ruled, everybody interested in the success of a party caters to Romanism. The national policy as to slavery almost cost the life of the republic. There is ten times as much danger to our free institutions from Romanism now, that there was from slavery in 1861."

The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. By L. C. Thomas.

Title page.—"The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. Also an Epitome of the Great Salvation; and an Appendix including various other subjects, in brief.

The perfect unchangeable moral law is considered and shown to be the basis and spirit of the old Sinaitic law, now dead in its entirety. The law of Moses and law of Christ are compared and contrasted, and the relation of both to the old and new covenants is treated at some length. The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the state of the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 350 pages, Cloth bound, Price $1.00,

—BY—

FATHER CHINIQUY.

ITS REVELATIONS ARE APPALLING.

Painful and horrible are words too weak to express the things which he relates — things enough to rouse the stones to cry out against a system which brings forth such apples of Sodom and deadly poison to the Church, the family and society.

Cloth, 16mo 144 pages, with Portrait and Biographical Notice of the Author; Price $1.00.

FIFTY YEARS

—IN—

THE CHURCH OF ROME.

—BY—

CHARLES CHINIQUY.

A handsome volume of 832 pages, printed in clear type, on fine tinted paper. It is bound in strong cloth, marbled edges, and gilt stamp on side and back. Contains two portraits (one representing him in priestly robes) of the author.

There is no book upon the Romish controversy so comprehensive as this. It is a complete picture of the inner workings, aims and objects of Popery. It is from the experience of a living witness, and challenges contradiction. It is a large but very valuable work, and is fast becoming a standard authority. Six editions were sold in one year, and large orders are being daily received for the present and 8th edition. The book commends itself to the American people, and to lovers of liberty everywhere.

The book contains, among other startling revelations, thrilling chapters on, The Bible and the Priests of Rome; the Confession of Children; Festivities in a Parsonage; Protestant Children in Convents; the Trade in Masses; Rome and Education; the Miracles of Rome; Murders and Frauds in Quebec; Papineau and the Patriots; Perversion of Dr. Newman; Grand Dinner of the Priests; the Abomination of Auricular Confession; Some of the Thousand Acts of Folly and Idolatry which form the Life of a Monk; the Vow of Celibacy; the Impurities of the Theology of Rome.

We have secured a supply of this book, and can fill orders direct. If you wish to inform yourselves as to the inside working of Romanism, send us $2.25 and you will receive the book postpaid at once.

We can also furnish Mr. Chiniquy's other work, "The Priest, the Woman, and the Confessional." A cloth bound book of 296 pages; price $1.00 postpaid.

Also "Romanism—the Danger Ahead," by A. J. Grover; contains 136 pages; cloth binding, 75cts., postpaid.

The three ordered together we will send for $4.00.

Six Months - - 1.00.
Three Months - .50.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

NEW HEAVENS AND NEW EARTH: REMARKS ON 2 Pet. iii. 13.

No. 4.

The phrase, "the new," found in Isa. lxv. 17; lxvi. 22; 2 Pet. iii. 13; Rev. xxi. 1, is thus explained by Robinson in his N. T. Lexicon: "renewed, made new, hence, better, superior, more splendid. So the corresponding word of the Old Testament means as a verb, to make new, renew, repair, restore, as in 1. Sam. xi. 14; Job x. 17; Psa. lx. 12; Isa. lxi. 4; Psa. ciii. 5; 2 Chron. xv. 8; and xxiv. 4. Whence are derived the words new, i. e. renewed as in new moon, new heart, new creation," etc.

Another writer says, "Heaven signifies symbolically the ruling power or government; that is, the whole assembly of the ruling powers, which, in respect to the subjects on earth, are a political heaven, being over and ruling the subjects, as the natural heaven stands over and rules the earth."

It seems to be generally admitted among learned men, in regard to the usage of symbolical language, to make "heaven a figurative representation of the ruling power, and earth of its subjects."

In Heb. i. 10-12, we read, "And the heavens are the works of thy hands: they shall perish; but thou continuest: and they shall wax old as doth a garment, and as a mantle shalt thou roll them up, as a garment, and they shall be changed." No more seems to be implied here than a thorough renovation, or a making of the old into new. While we have the word perish in the former part of this passage, it is qualified in the latter part by the word changed. "Changed is put as a parallel to perish. Hence Dean Alford explains the phrase, "shall perish," to mean so far as concerns their present state. And Fausset says, "Perish does not mean annihilation; just as it did not mean so in the case of the world that, being overflowed with water, perished" under Noah, 2 Pet. iii. 6. The covenant of the possession of the earth was renewed with Noah and his seed on the renovated earth. So it shall be after the perishing by fire, 2 Peter iii. 12, 13.

After John sees "a new heaven and a new earth," he says, in verse 5, "And he that sitteth on the throne said, Behold, I make all things new." This seems to refer to existing things that are to be made new. As Dr. Litch observes, "It is not that he makes all new things; but makes old things new. It is not extinction, but renovation of the old earth." Alford's notes on this are exceedingly brief, but he says there is no trace of the idea that the earth is to be annihilated. "The flood," he remarks, "did not annihilate the earth, but changed it" and as the new earth was the consequence of the flood, so the final new heavens and earth shall be of the fire."

In "The Messiah," Eleazer Lord says, "The course of things eventually to be realized on earth will be such as would have taken place from the beginning, had no apostasy occurred. The apostasy and the curse on man and the earth will be overcome. The antagonism between the Mediator and the adversary will cease. The earth, freed from the curse and from all enemies, renovated, restored to its original beauty, will be the perpetual scene of holiness and happiness."

What a blessed thought is it that in the new earth there will be neither sickness nor death. Is there one in the present state who does not suffer more or less either from personal sickness, or the sickness of loved ones in the family, or in the social circle? And who has not lost a relative or a friend by the hand of death? What changes, what desolations, what heart-rendings, what sorrows have been caused by this enemy. But what a wonderful contrast will the new earth present, where sickness and death will be unknown; where graves, and funerals, and mourning, and tears shall find no place; where they shall belong to the forgotten past!

Those words of Peter, then, are to be understood literally to some extent, for though the apostle makes a contrast between the heavens and the earth that now are, and the world that then was, that perished, being overflowed with water in the time of Noah, we have seen that the world, in the sense of the earth, did not literally and finally perish; and hence we infer that the present heaven and earth, though stored up for fire, or stored with fire, being reserved against the day of judgment, will not be burned up, or made an end of, in the literal sense. And then, these words, to some extent, are to be understood figuratively, otherwise they will not harmonize with the prophets. No interpretation of a difficult passage can be the true one, which sets the writer in antagonism with other inspired writers on the same subject.

After the new earth is introduced in Rev. xxi., we have in chapter xxii. 2, seasons introduced; we have "the tree of life, bearing twelve manners of fruits, yielding its fruit every month." John gives no hint that the nations, as such, will ever cease. After he sees the new heavens and a new earth, which is after the thousand years, and after the judgment of the great white throne, he speaks of the nations walking by the light of the city. Some think John may be here taking a retrospective view, and that this may refer to the period of the thousand years; we ourselves long thought it referred to the Millennial period; but the connection of the passage and its grammatical construction are against this thought. The passage and the context seem to point to the existence of nations in the everlasting state; and the leaves of the tree are for the healing of the nations. Dr. Seiss has some remarks on the use of these leaves well worth our attention. He says, "As the fruits add to the joys of heaven, the leaves add to the joys of earth.... Nations are then to be who eat not of those fruits, though benefited by the leaves in connection with which the fruits are produced. Two classes of people are thus distinctly recognized in the new heaven and earth;—a class in glory who get the fruits of the Tree of Life, and a class in the estate of "nations" who get the leaves; but, whether fruits or leaves, a great and glorious blessing. As there will always be need for the ministrations of these celestial king-priests to those dwelling on the earth, so will those ministrations also bring them the healing leaves from the Tree of Life. As the Life waters are not wholly shut up in the city, but descend in a form to men on the earth; so the Life-tree, in a form, yields its benefits to them too. The meaning is not that the nations are full of sicknesses and ailments; for those remains of the curse are gone then, though it may be from the virtue of these leaves. The meaning rather is the preservation of health and comfort, and not that maladies then exist to be removed. The Life-leaves are for the conservation and augmentation of Life-blessedness of men on earth, as the Life-fruits are for the joy of the saints in heaven."

From the connection of these words, it is quite clear that by heaven, Dr. Seiss means the holy Jerusalem,—and the New Jerusalem will indeed be heaven to the saints,—but for ourselves we would have preferred the use of the phrase, the New Jerusalem, because that will be the future home of the saints, and because Scripture clearly distinguishes between the two places,—between heaven where Christ now dwells as our Mediator, at the right hand of the Father and the holy city Jerusalem, for this New Jerusalem is to come down out of heaven from God.

Brethren, if the dignities and glories and blessings of the new earth and the future kingdom occupied our thoughts as they ought to do, we should think far less of the honors and pleasures of the present world. Seeing that such great changes have to take place, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy living and godliness. What humility, what sincerity, what fervor, what earnestness, what faith ought to accompany our prayers, our teachings, our exhortations, and our labors.

To the Faithful in Christ Jesus, Greeting.

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul." Gen. ii. 7.

This a brief, yet very concise history of our progenitor Adam. Nothing has come from mortal pen uninspired by the Divine mind that can compare with this, and it leaves far in the wake—all presumptive predictions as to man's evolution through the by-gone ages. The material of which the bones, muscles, ligaments, tissues—nerves, brain hair, etc., etc. were composed is told in the little word dust. And this dust was of the ground—the earth on which it was designed that man should live. When this dead matter was moulded into a man perfect in form there was something wanting. There was no life there. Man was but a dead soul, (according to Webster that which is destitute of life is dead) life had not yet been imparted by his Creator. The second act was to impart to him the life principle. This was done by breathing into his nostrils the breath of life, or lives. Thus it was that the air, the all-surrounding atmosphere, was made to act on the already perfect human mechanism and the effect thus produced was called life, and man possessing that life, or having been acted upon by that vitalising principle was called a living soul, and while that condition prevailed he remained a living soul. But as soon as either of the combined causes which produced life ceased to act the effect ceased and man became a dead soul. The body or mechanism in due time returned to dust, while the breath, or the spirit of lives, or the vitalising principle returned to God who gave it. It was breath when given, it was breath and only breath when given back to God. In death the breath of life is simply exhaled or breathed out and on account of weakness of the mortal frame it is not inhaled or brought back into the lungs, and so respiration ceases; and death inevitably follows. There was nothing in the form or constitution of our first parents that would sustain them in endless existence, because the very substance of which they were formed was in itself subject to change and decay. They were undeveloped beings. They knew neither good nor evil. They were free agents and given full permission to choose for themselves, either the way of life or the way of death, both of which were set before them in the tree of life and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil.

To the tree of life they were given free access. But they were forbidden to eat, or even to touch the tree of the knowledge of good and evil with the terrible threat that "in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," Gen. ii. 17.

Much foolish quibbling has been indulged in by the skeptical on this text, and it is contended that they did not die on that day else it could not have been recorded that Adam lived nine hundred and thirty years and then died. Taking the same latitude for the language of Scripture that we do for any other style of writing there is here no over-reaching the truth. Take an illustration. When a city is besieged by an opposing army we say it is a doomed city, doomed to death, and that doom is sealed the very day that the army encamp round about it. Why is it doomed to death? Just because the besieging army cut off all supplies of water and provision that would sustain life. The inhabitants can get no supply from any source and hence when the supply which they have on hand when shut in becomes exhausted they die, or the effect of the siege is manifested in the victory of the foe. Thus when our first parents sinned they were put out of the Garden; though not shut up in a besieged city, they were shut out from the tree of life; and the reason for thus excluding them from this source of life, inspiration tells us was lest they "put forth the hand and take also of the tree of life and eat and live forever."

Now it is very plain from these Scriptures that man at the beginning was mortal, for had he been immortal he could not have been threatened with death, nor could he have died, for that which is immortal cannot die. The only source of life everlasting then manifested was the tree of life. From this they were excluded lest they put forth the hand and take and eat. But thanks be to our ever gracious Father, his mercy toward our race is unbounded, and here in man's hour of darkest gloom he gave the promise of a life giver as recorded in Gen. iii. 15, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed. It shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel." This is the foundation of all hope. This is to us the germ of a future life. This is the promise which the righteous Abel took hold of by faith. By faith, or in exercising faith he offered to Jehovah a more excellent sacrifice than his brother Cain. By faith he saw the promise (of the Christ) afar off and was persuaded of it, and hence is he enumerated with the faithful of past ages who likewise were persuaded of the promises, and embraced them by faith. The Christ is our life giver. He came to bring life and immortality to light through the gospel. He came that we might have a more abundant, a fuller life than our progenitor lost through transgression. But this life comes only through faith. By faith we hide our life (future life) with Christ in God. Without faith it is impossible to please God. Christ teaches us this grand truth when he says, I am the resurrection and the life—and again, And this is eternal life to know thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.

Man when created was wholly mortal, and he failed to attain to any higher nature through means of the tree of life. Transgression did not change his physical nature. It only developed a sinful character. Had he died before the promise of the Life Giver, no gleam of hope would have lighted the darkness of the tomb, where he would have rested in an eternal sleep. The penalty pronounced for the transgression would have been inflicted in the fullest sense when he would have returned to dust. There was nothing more in the sentence. There was no intimation given that he would be brought back to mortal life just to be again re-moulded back to dust. When the promise of the Life Giver was made known, it did not change man's nature. It had no effect upon his physical constitution. It did not reach that. It was only another opportunity given to man whereby he might develop a character such as he choose. The means by which character might be developed was by the exercise of faith. Faith in the given promise. In the entire revelation of God's purpose to his creature man, there is no mention of life beyond the tomb save only that which is attained through faith in the Christ, and that life is immortal, and those who attain thereto can die no more.

"Mortal resurrection," or a resurrection to mortal life is not in Jehovah's plan. "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return," is the extreme penalty pronounced upon the guilty.

Dear Restitution:

I am in receipt of a number of letters from brethren and readers of THE RESTITUTION, who have propounded a number of questions relative to the "Big Bend" of the Columbia, and especially of Douglas County. Some have requested that I answer through THE RESTITUTION, that they and others may have the benefit at the same time.

The character of the questions can be gathered from the answers:

There are many persons living east of the Rocky Mountains who are tired of cyclones, tornadoes, blizzards and electric storms, and who desire to go to some new country where they can get cheap homes where such extremes are strangers. Then to the task before me.

1. I am living east of the Cascade Mountains and also east of the Columbia River.

2. Crops are grown here without irrigation. The plateau or prairie lies from 1500 to 2000 feet higher than the river, and the river at this place is several hundred feet above the ocean.

3. The earth receives most of its moisture from the snows of winter.

4. The farming lands are prairie covered with the noted bunch grass and rye grass, and in many places sage brush also.

5. The timber is on the Badger Mountains and on the breaks of the Columbia. I live now at the foot of the mountain, and am only three miles from timber and saw mills, planing mill, etc.

6. Most of the prairie is gently rolling and is quite rich. There is but little water on the surface; some streams come from the mountain but soon disappear in the earth.

7. There are opportunities to take up lands yet, but of course the choice places have been taken; I mean by choice those places near the mountain where timber and water are easily obtained. In some localities the drill is used to obtain water. By this means the difficulty about getting water will probably be overcome. Most of the settlers have found water by digging from five to sixty feet.

8. The expense of getting a homestead of 160 acres is about $30.00; preemption for 160 acres is $1.25 per acre.

9. A man reaching here with $500.00 or $1000.00 can start in very well; of course more would not be in the way. The prices of horses vary according to the quality, and well-broke ones cost from $100.00 to $300.00 a span for farm or draft. Range cattle bring from $20.00 to $40.00 per head; good milch cows from $30.00 to $75.00—good stock.

10. There are some pretty large bands of horses and cattle on the stock ranges, where the land is not suitable for farming. The ranges are pretty heavily stocked, and that enterprise is likely to be overdone. Most of the farmers keep a few cattle and horses.

11. This part of the county between the Grand Coulee and the Columbia River is rapidly filling up with settlers.

12. It is expected that the cars will reach here from Spokane Falls on the Seattle, Lake Shore & Eastern R. R. next year, and between here and Seattle the road is being built as rapidly as possible in a mountainous country. Waterville is the county-seat of this county, and it is growing rapidly. Some people come here and are not suited, stay a short time and leave. There is no country on earth at present that will suit every one. In a newly settled or settling country there are many privations and those who come here need not expect to find a paradise, or luxurious living.

13. I am the R. Corbaley who some years ago wrote some letters to THE RESTITUTION.

14. In coming here from the east by R. R. the nearest point on the R. R. is Ellensburg in Kittitas Co. If, however, a person has a team and wagon, Ritzville or Spokane Falls would be preferable, as it would shorten the distance.

15. I have lived here portions of the time since May, 1884, and in many things I like the country. The climate in winter is more even and pleasant than Indiana and other western States, but not so pleasant as California. I have no disposition to advise any one relative to coming to this or any other country. This is a matter each one must settle for himself. Persons who are comfortably situated with good homes and among friends, in the enjoyment of good health, will do well, perhaps, to consider the matter of a change very seriously. We are living at a time when the very elements as well as the people are changeable. Many move for the purpose of gaining in wealth, others for health, etc. So the world moves. Insert this if you deem best. In hope,

RICHARD CORBALEY.

Dear Restitution:

As there are some readers of the paper who are new beginners and are investigating the Scriptures, and would like some light thrown upon some passages in the Bible, I thought that it might not be out of place to give my views on Matt. xvii. 1, 3, 5, 9, the transfiguration of Christ upon the Mount. "And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart and was transfigured before them; and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light; and behold there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him. While he yet spake, behold a bright cloud overshadowed them, and behold a voice out of the cloud which said, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him. And as they came down from the mountain, Jesus charged them, saying, Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead."

Some people affirm that Christ's kingdom was set up at the transfiguration, for in the preceding chapter he said unto his disciples, "Verily I say unto you, there be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom." Therefore say they the kingdom must have been set up at this time. To this we offer objections because in Matt. xvi. 27, Christ says, "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works." First, Christ did not then come with his angels nor did he reward every man according to his works at that time. Second, that coming does not answer to the description of his coming which is given by the prophet Daniel, who saw in the night visions one like the Son of man who came with the clouds of heaven, and there was given him dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all peoples, nations and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting one which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. See Dan. vii. Now Christ did not come then in or with the clouds of heaven, for he went up with his disciples on the Mount instead of coming down from heaven with the angels; he did not come in his kingdom at the transfiguration or we would see all people, nations and languages serving him instead of infidelity and unbelief increasing. Matthew xxv. teaches that Christ's kingdom is still future. Vs. 31, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them one from another." Vs. 34, "Then shall the king say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Well, says the objector, if Christ's kingdom is future and was not set up at the transfiguration, what did he mean when he said to his disciples, "There be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom?" I answer they saw just what our Lord promised them, the kingdom in vision, not in reality, as will be seen by reading the 9th verse of Matt. xvii., "And as they came down from the mountain Jesus charged them, saying, Tell the vision to no man until the Son of man be risen from the dead." Our Lord gave these chosen disciples a panoramic view of his coming and kingdom no doubt for the purpose of strengthening their faith in it. For Peter, one of the number, said, "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard when we were with him in the holy Mount." 2 Peter i. 16-18. Will some more able pen than mine please give their views on Paul's strait betwixt two, Phil. i. 20; also absent from the body, 2 Cor. iv. 18, for the benefit of learners. Your sister in hope of eternal life.

S. V. REGAL.

THE FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY.

"The Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth even unto the other," Deut. xxviii. 62-64. "I will scatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a sword after you: and your land shall be desolate, and your cities waste," Lev xxvi. 33. "And the Lord shall scatter you among the nations, and ye shall be left few in number among the heathen, whither the Lord shall lead you," Deut. iv. 27. These threatenings have been fulfilled to the very letter. Can a country be named where the Jewish race is not to be found? How striking are the predictions of the Scriptures in reference to the Jews! They are a standing proof of the authenticity of the Bible; a powerful argument to meet the scorn and taunts of infidels in the present day; a miracle which no subtlety, or reasoning can set aside. The voice which we hear is from heaven, ever proclaiming, "I am that I am." "The Word of the Lord shall stand and endure for ever."

Numbers of Jews has been found in Hindostan; in China, near Pekin; in Persia; the West Indies; South America, Great Tartary; Africa, eight hundred miles from the coast, found out by the celebrated traveller, Mungo Park; in Asia, where it appears they observed the essential rites of Judaism, and strictly avoided intermarriage with other sects; they had also in their possession parchments containing the different books of the divine law as given by Moses. Under all circumstances they are found to exist in climates where people of other countries cannot exist. This is a fact which we must not lose sight of, as foreshadowing the event ultimately to be ushered in, when they have become the heralds of salvation to carry the glad tidings to all the nations, and the prophecy fulfilled, "All shall know Me, from the least to the greatest of them, saith the Lord."

It is well known that in Africa, where the heat is so intense and scorching from the hot sun, the skull of the natives is of unusual thickness, to prevent the power of the sun's rays injuring the fine and delicate organization of the brain. They can endure the fierce glare of the heat without damage, when people of other climes become the victims of sunstroke. The Jews, however, possess a wonderful adaptation to all climates. They can live almost anywhere without in the least sustaining injury.

How important and instructive are the passages in the eleventh chapter of the epistle to the Romans: "And they also, if they abide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in: for God is able to graft them in again," verse 23. "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved." The latter passage is clear, distinct, and definite; that under the glorious dispensation which shall be ushered in, "all Israel shall be saved." It is a wonderful restoration, and one which should intensify the spirit of prayer, that God would speedily perform his great work, and gather from the harvest field an abundant reaping, to the praise and glory of his great name. We are exhorted to "give him no rest" until he has made "Jerusalem a praise in the earth." "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: they shall prosper that love thee." The signs of the times are encouraging, full of hope, and longing expectation. There is a growing and increasing desire in the Jewish mind to search the Scriptures, like the Bereans of old; old prejudices are fast dying out; inquiries after Gospel truths are multiplying; conversions are on the increase; the Gospel trumpet is awakening the dead from their slumber, and multitudes are flocking like doves to the windows, to find rest beneath the One, the Hope of Israel. "I will be as the dew unto Israel." When the hard soil feels the touch of the gentle dew, it opens to let in the sunlight, and reaches the hidden seed, that it may open, expand, and bear an abundant crop. "For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land.... And cause you to walk in My statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them," Ezek. xxxvi. 24, 27. "And I will put My Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in My statutes, and ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be My people, and I will be your God." verses 27, 28. "Thus saith the Lord; I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them."—Frederick H. Gervis.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

We send statements this week to all our subscribers whose time has expired. This means is taken to notify each person privately just how his account stands. We hope that each person who receives such statement of his account will see the necessity of responding at once. If you cannot send all you owe, send a part of it, but send something IMMEDIATELY.

Many subscriptions expire this month. The large majority of newspaper readers think that if their time is out the last of the year, they can wait till after Jan. 1st before they renew, and so put off sending for two or three weeks. This is annoying to a publisher, as he has no way of telling whether such subscribers intend renewing at all or not. So he goes to the expense of sending out statements telling his patrons of the condition of their account, and in a majority of cases is blamed for sending out duns, subscribers failing to see that they themselves are to blame for not telling the publisher in time—beforehand—what their wishes are in the matter. We would like to impress upon each one of our patrons that it is much more satisfactory to always have your subscription paid in advance, before it runs out, than to have it run even one week over time. Not that we are afraid or unwilling to trust you, but because we do not know what you are going to do. Remember, it is now one whole year since we heard from most of you, and the changes that a year may bring, you know as well as we do, are many. The fact that you may have been "a regular subscriber for thirty years" does not tell us your wishes for the coming year. Therefore we ask you to send in your renewals promptly.

We trust our friends will not forget the poor. We have calls every week for papers and books to go to persons too poor to pay for them, and we can only supply these as our charitable patrons furnish the means to do so. Those who are able can find no better Christmas Present to give to a poor brother or sister than THE RESTITUTION for a year.

THE RESTITUTION.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their Name, Post Office, County, and State plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co. Ind.

Remittances should be sent by Bank Draft Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk: money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

HOME FROM PHILADELPHIA.

We left Philadelphia on Wednesday, Nov. 28, at 4:00 p. m., central time, via the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. and reached Walkerton, Ind., where we left the train at 4:00 a. m., Friday, Nov. 30. Waited there till 9:38 a. m. for a train to Plymouth, and arrived at our own home—a distance of twelve miles—somewhere about 11:00 a. m. of the day last named. We were well all the time while at Philadelphia till Tuesday, Nov. 27, the day before leaving the city, when, from some change in the weather, and some exposure, we caught quite a severe cold, which made the long journey of two nights and an intervening day, on the B. & O. Road, and an additional delay at Walkerton and on the other road to our home, a journey of a very wearisome character indeed. As there was no opportunity to rest or have anything done to alleviate the cold, or check its progress, it simply fell to our lot to suffer all the depressive affliction as submissively and patiently as possible. It is now noon, Monday, Dec. 3, and we do not at all feel like continuing our contemplated Notes of Travel, nor like giving our readers some further brief account of the different meetings held in Philadelphia for business or worship. But while feeling quite poorly, we must not neglect to express our most sincere [illegible] thanks, to the kind friends of the household of faith in Philadelphia for all their "labor of love" in administering so freely and fully to the wants and comforts of all who were in attendance from abroad.

"We met as strangers ever meet,
Yet still to part was pain:
For o'er us came the thought perhaps
We ne'er shall meet again."

We have met and we have parted. From the land of the "Golden Gate," where the orange bloom exhales its incense of sweetness to be wafted on the soft incoming breezes from sea-ward over ever-vernal climes—from the prairies of the west where ripening harvests wave over slope and level in endless perspective—from the sunny south where Magnolia groves fringe the borders of perpetual summer lands—from where the Atlantic waves girdle the eastern shores with the white cincture of foam—and from the land beyond the lakes where leaves soonest fall, and flowers soonest fade in coming winter's chilly breath, we gathered to the "City of Brotherly Love." We met, and we talked of One whose "love was stronger than death." We gathered around that sacred table on which were placed the solemn emblems of an age-lasting remembrance. Together we wept as we looked back to the sorrows and sufferings of the Lamb of God, and realized, "it was for us he suffered; it was for us he died." "But O, he said, I'll come again," and we rejoiced in our tearfulness that he rose triumphant from the rocky tomb, and is now exalted our Prince, our Savior, at God's right hand. He is soon coming, our glory-crowned king—and he brings our crowns in his hands. Through the sheen and the shade, through the smiles and the tears, we parted once journey toward the ever-blooming paradises of the re-genesis when God shall have made "all things new." We have parted but it is to meet again—to meet amid the delectable scenes of the heavenly Beulah land.

"O Beulah land, sweet Beulah land,
Our souls cry out for thee."

So to the church which is at Philadelphia we write,

"God be with you till we meet again."

THE CHRISTIAN APOSTASY.

"Rome or Reason" and "Robert Elsmere" are two very significant straws in the "Zeitgeist" of the present, showing which way two intelligent phases of public opinion are more and more steadily blowing. The average intelligence of the present day has finally discovered that there is something the matter with doctrinal Christianity both Catholic and Protestant. It neither harmonizes as Christianity with itself nor enlightened common sense, the standard which ultimately tests and tries everything else in the world.

The leading question, which this tribunal always asks is what utility is subserved? And when this interrogatory has been satisfactorily answered, the next query is invariably, and what relation does this use and utility sustain to other uses and utilities in the world of practical work and worth. And then comes such interrogatories as, how does it work practically? Is it a mere hypothesis or a hypostasis? Is it a theoretical abstraction merely of some philosophic "crank" or has it been tried and applied in practice? A telephone or an electric light even is a mere hypothesis in a philosophical labratory. You cannot borrow any money on it in this phase of its evolution. At this stage in its approach towards utility it is "faith without works." The same has come to be true of theological inventions and religous doctrinal abstractions analytically evolved by "Doctors of Divinity" and professors of knowledge in the future tense. The listener who has fallen asleep, wakes up with an impatient start and says, that may all be well enough theoretically perhaps, but what do you know about the now and the exigencies of today? Then comes the invariable answer and plea, "The trumpet blows with no uncertain sound" because it is God's breath that fills the horn. The breath of inspiration surely cannot err. Very true, granted. But what do you claim to be inspiration? "The Word of God" of course is the stereotyped reply.

Granted again, says the honest practical truthseeker. But what do you call "The Word of God?"

Stereotyped reply again, "The Bible" of course.

Which? is the next query. Why, the one recognized and accepted by the Christian church for the last three or four hundred years. Which do you call the Christian church, the Catholic or Protestant claimant? For they both [illegible]. And what is your Bible called in the way of distinction? The "Douay Version" has the imprimatur of the "Church," and, therefore undoubtedly is "The Word" in its integrity. And you Mr. Protestant, what do you say to this? Oh, no, Protestantism by universal consensus has placed its imprimatur upon the "King James Version" as it is called and upon this Version only. What are these "Versions" as you gentlemen call them? Are they original documents direct from the "Grand Source" of inspiration? No. They are translations and compilations with a stamp of an "Index Expurgatorius" on them. What do they purport to be translated and compiled from? The same original documents? Yes. Do they differ materially? Oh yes, as wide as the poles in some respects. Do they agree at all? Oh yes, in many respects. Were the translators in either case incompetent or dishonest? They must have been one or both, as they translated and compiled from the same original documents, as asserted in title-page and preface. Which am I to believe then? That depends upon whether you are a Catholic or a Protestant. You must start with one or the other of these two assumptions. But I am neither. I want to know the truth in this matter. Why? For the love of truth itself and for the reason that I see enough of valuable truth and utility in both Catholicism and Protestantism to want to know the whole truth.

I believe in God and the wisdom of God and I believe that if he has made a special revelation of it, this special revelation will harmonize with the general revelation we have of God in the works of creation.

Well, have you familiarized yourself with the wisdom of the "Versions?" Yes. What do you object to in them? Their contradictions and absurdities. They give one the impression of a fine piece of mechanism that has been tinkered at with bungling hands, a watch for instance that has been taken apart and put together wrong and won't go. There is esoteric evidence of this tinkering you think do you?

Yes. Enough to convince any earnest truth-seeker, to convince him of the fact at least. Have you discovered any corroborative exoteric evidence, any evidence in history perchance that such a thing has actually occurred? Yes, the fact is now well attested in church as well as secular history, and moreover is distinctly prophesied in the Scriptures themselves. By whom does history say it was done and when? By different interested parties and at different times. The first tinkering was done by representative leaders of the Old Jewish Apostasy in the second century of the Christian era. What was their object? To confound the Messianic prophecies and to mislead their brethren primarily in respect to the legitimacy of their application to Jesus the Nazarene, although there were other motives which make themselves apparent in the way they did their work, prominent among which was hatred toward the rising Christian Church of "the new covenant" and the text of its adoption and use, namely the Greek. How did they go to work to corrupt the original Hebrew text and change its reading and significance?

Through the vowel-points. And how could this be done? Very easily under the circumstances, and in the following manner. The original Hebrew until about this time was like all the Semitic languages in the early history of their evolution, a consonant language only in its written form, the vowel sounds being necessarily supplied to the ear of the hearer by the voice of the reader. For this reason reading in those days was a fine art, and confined to the learned few. See the office and employment of the class denominated "Scribes" in the "Versions." Moreover the Greek was the first of the Semitic languages to become vocalized in the sense of written vocalization.

The Hebrew was still a consonant language in its written form when the translation was made by "The Seventy" into the Greek; and between two and three hundred years later, when Hebrew, as a vernacular was fast becoming obsolete, an attempt was made to vocalize it. This imperfect attempt was later on in the latter part of the first century of the Christian era given another honest impetus through the "Massorets" (Traditionists) a school of grammarians who flourished about this time. The perverters of the Old Jewish Church at this juncture laying hold of the "Massorets" incomplete work, under the plausible pretense of improving and perfecting through the convenient medium of the vowel-points or the characteristic vocalization, tinkered the whole text of the "Old Covenant" Scriptures. This they did in great haste and with secrecy, and then destroyed all the copies extant so far as known; that varied from this spurious text. At least, no manuscripts have since been found except "The Massoretic fragments" which have been made the basis with inconceivable labor and tinkering since for what is now called the "Original Hebrew text." History moreover tells us that this deception and fraud of the Jewish Rabbis was made easy by the fact that there was absolutely no knowledge of written Hebrew or Hebrew even as a vernacular in the Christian Church of that day, the Greek Scriptures having been absolutely adopted as "The Word" and the Greek language having become the vernacular of that period in the Church's history.

Spurious editions of the Greek still extant afford evidence of an attempt moreover to corrupt the Greek also at a little later period. History confirms the fact too and tells us that it ignominiously failed because of the watchfulness of the church and the difficulty naturally attending so palpable a fraud as trying to corrupt extant writings in a vernacular that everybody was more or less familiar with. There is evidence also that, while the fraud attempted on the Greek text was discovered and thwarted, that the perversion of the Hebrew was not discovered until a much later period, and in fact, though suspected by a few during the revival of Hebrew letters and literature about the fifteenth century of the Christian era. The certainty of this perversion, and the way in which it was done as well as upon whom to fix the responsibility of the act has been made a matter of historical record only within the last fifty years, and the opening up of the "Vatican" archives to the research of modern inquiry. The Catholic translation into Latin of the "Old Covenant Scriptures," made by Bishop Gerome, a converted Jew, shows evidence of being made, if not entirely from this perverted Massoretic text, to follow it, credulously as authoritive; and strange as it may seem now, this Latin Vulgate of which his translation was the basis has ever since been the authoritive basis for all the translations since made even of the New Covenant Scriptures into the European modern languages, the English included. The pretense of translating from the original Hebrew or the Greek of the Old Covenant Scriptures has been in very large measure pretense.

And so great has theological bias and prejudice been since the advent of Protestantism that the same is true, though in a less degree, of the pretended translations of the New Covenant Scriptures from the original Greek in which they were oracularly delivered and handed down to us. Indeed the cloven hoof of the Latin Version or "the Vulgate" as it is called is still plainly to be seen in the "King James Version" and the later "Revised" of the "New." For example the pretended translation of the Greek word diatheke meaning "covenant" by the Latin word testamentum, anglicized to testament, or the Greek word for ability or force in action dunamis (dynamics and dynamite come from it into the English direct) by the Latin word miraculum anglicised to miracle. Now the Hebrew perversion was bad enough it would seem. But when it came to be filtered through the heathenish corruption of the Latin apostasy, the wonder (the miracle indeed) is that the wisdom of God has asserted itself to the extent it has in the world as well as the so-called church, and not that we have these contradictory and foolish absurdities asserting themselves in all sorts of sectarian cranky notions, which have about as much foundation in the word of God as Baalism ever had. But the wisdom of God and the truth of God is too large a quantity and too vital a reality to thus hide or ultimately hinder, and all this million-voiced protest of outraged common sense of late so distinctly heard is rapidly preparing the way for an honest investigation (no more "whitewashes"), a "Berean" inquiry that will sweep theological prejudice and learned assumption before it like chaff from off the summer threshing-floor. Faith will be found to be a hypostasis not a credulous hypothesis afraid of "ghosts;" and fear of "ghosts" will flee with the elimination of this idea from the word of God, there being absolutely no such concept taught in the text, but translated into the versions through the Latin and German.

The fact that "the Christ" and his immediate disciples placed their imprimatur upon the Greek Scriptures, ought alone to be sufficient evidence of their verasity, and nothing but an apostasy would ever have gone back to this imprimatur to dabble in the muddy waters of Hebrew perversion.

Thank God this Greek text of Christ's day has been wonderfully preserved and guarded for us; and it won't be long now before the intelligent laity will demand to know for themselves what it says in its integrity. If we have "the word of God" in the Greek with Christ's imprimatur upon it, we can afford to let the Hebrew stay lost till its appointed time to be revived in its integrity, namely "until the times of the Gentiles have been fulfilled."

The gospel was sent to us 'Gentiles" in the Greek and not in the Hebrew or Latin; and I for one can see the hand of God in this delivery "once for all" "to the saints in light." This promise once accepted, and the apostasy with all that has been said above and much more that could be added to it, follows as a plain sequitur; indeed is the only rational explanation of the varying and absurdly conflicting Christian professions of faith.

"Rome or Reason" and "Robert Elsemere" are the straws in the wind. An awakened intelligence set free from fear and bigotry is the new undercurrent that is coming in while the old gale of apostasy is sweeping over us with its nearly spent fury. God speed the day when the devotees of Christianity shall not only welcome enlightened intelligence, but sanctify it and harness it to the car of Christian progress. Then in the language of the Psalmist and not till then, will it "mount to ride to the heaven of heavens" and "all the earth be filled with the glory of God as much water once covered the seas."

The day has not yet passed though when "sons of God in promise" swear by "Jehovah" but bend the knee to Baal.

CHAS. GARDNER.

On a certain occasion while our Savior was upon the earth, when his disciples were in a ship, tossing about on the waves of the sea, our dear Lord in the fourth watch of the night, went walking on the water to the ship; and when he heard them crying out with fear (for they did not know him) he said, be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid. Then Peter answered and said, Lord if it be thou bid me come to Thee on the water, and he said come; and Peter got down out of the ship, and stepped out, and began to walk to his Master, on the waters of the stormy sea. What faith Peter had in his Lord to believe that he would not sink beneath the briny waves. But presently the wind grew boisterous, and his faith began to waver and he became alarmed, and commenced sinking and he cried out, Lord save me, and our Savior took him by the hand, and said, Oh thou of little faith, why did you doubt?

What a lesson of faith this is to us; although we do not expect to perform miracles through faith, as we do not live in the time of miracles, but we do believe, that every true Christian has the same faith in the Master's word that Peter had, when he stepped down out of the ship to walk on the waters of the sea. Our Savior has told us, that our Heavenly Father, knoweth that we have need of food and drink and raiment, and that if we seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, all these things shall be added unto us. Then let us believe what he has said, and if our faith in his word is unwavering, we know just as sure as he said this just so sure it will be so.

In order to be righteous, we must travel in the path of self-denial and sacrifice; and we must have charity, which is nothing less than love, but something more. And we are glad to know, that those who are able to give, and do give the most, are not always the most charitable; for we believe that the poorest peasant in his hovel, can be just as charitable as the richest millionaire in his mansion. Remember the widow's mites, worth less than half a cent, yet our Savior said, she had made a greater sacrifice, and had given more than all those rich persons, who had cast their large gifts into the treasury. The Apostle Paul in speaking on this subject says, But this I say, he which soweth sparingly, shall reap also sparingly, and he which loveth bountifully, shall reap also bountifully. every man according as he purposeth in his heart so let him give, not grudgingly, or of necessity; for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver. Every step the Christian takes in the Christian journey is by faith, for we walk now by faith and not by sight. Then let us have faith enough in God's word to be willing to make sacrifices for the gospel, and for the promotion of the cause of Christianity, realizing that everything that we possess belongs to the Lord, and that even we ourselves are not our own, for we are bought with a price; and that by and by he is going to come and reckon with us. Dear brethren let us as many as can take THE RESTITUTION, and may we not be so careless about paying for it in the future as some of us have been in the past. Let us not be unmindful of the perplexing cares of our dear Editor, and our faithful Publisher. Let us not only remember them in our prayers, but remember them financially by patronizing our much loved paper, and paying for it punctually. Let us instead of disobeying the command of our Father in heaven by laying up for ourselves treasures upon the earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and thieves break through and steal, be willing instruments in his hands to assist through the medium of our paper in heralding the glad tidings of salvation to a dying world.

LOUISA STEWART.

Dear Restitution:

We wish to say to the readers of THE RESTITUTION that Brother L. E. Conner commenced a series of meetings at Sugar Grove, about three miles southeast of Shoals, Indiana, Oct. 19, and continued with increasing interest until Wednesday night Oct. 31. Preaching in all fourteen discourses, three of which he preached at the Wirebaugh School house three miles north of Sugar Grove.

Good order was maintained throughout our meetings, notwithstanding they were held in the time when the political campaign had nearly reached its climax, with all its attendant horrid noisy din and uproar of a crazied populace, whose clang and clamor are so shocking to the sensibilities of truly refined and pious people.

Brother Conner greatly endeared himself to the brethren here, and won the kind regards of many others, by his Christian deportment and his earnest manner of presenting the truth in love without making any compromise with error whatever.

When our Conference selected him for the position of State Evangelist, it surely placed the right man in the right place.

When our Savior sent out preachers to preach the gospel, he told them to be wise as serpents and harmless as doves, and we are persuaded that these qualifications are just as essential now for a minister as they were then. We do not know how much good will be the result of the meeting, but we trust that the good seed sown may bring forth fruit in due season.

One dear sister put on Christ by baptism on the last Sunday of our meeting, and others like King Agrippa of old were almost persuaded to be Christians. One lady even started to go forward the last night of our meeting, to manifest her desire to obey, but from some cause her good resolve failed her and she remained back in the congregation. Dear trembling halting ones, may you yet take fresh courage and boldly out on the Lord's side before it is too late. Surely this meeting will ever live in the remembrance of our brethren here as a bright oasis in the desert of life. And Oh! how many times during our dear Brother's stay with us, and while our brethren so much enjoyed his society, was my mind carried forward to the time our blessed Master has told us about, when many shall come from the East and the West and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God. Yes that will be the happy time

When the saints of all ages in harmony meet,
Our Savior and brethren transported to greet.

Cheering thought that these few fleeting transient moments for happiness in this life, are as it were but drops in comparison with the great ocean of bliss in reservation for the people of God in never ending eternity. May success crown our dear Brother's labors is our humble prayer.

LOUISA STEWART.

Mr. Oscar S. Straus, United States Minister to Turkey, reached Washington for the purpose of conferring with Secretary of State Bayard, preparatory to returning to his post on September 29. Just before leaving Constantinople Mr. Straus made an argument before the Turkish authorities in support of the application of the American Bible Society of the Levant for permission to print New Testaments and Biblical tracts in the Turkish language. The privilege had been denied by the Minister of Public Instruction. Word has been received that the desired permission has been granted by the Porte, and the American Bible Society has already formally expressed its thanks to Minister Straus. The British Bible Society and similar organizations of other countries will unquestionably receive the same courtesy at the hands of the Porte, and Mr. Straus will be entitled to their thanks.

Minister Straus is a Jew; yet here we find him helping two Bible Societies to circulate the Old and New Testaments.

JEWS.

The Evangelical Review for April contains a valuable article on "The Jew." We give extracts from it which are of the most hopeful character.

"Have we any indications that the Christian religion is having any impression upon them? I think there is every evidence that a great work is being commenced in this direction. There are many agencies at work to this end, and amongst the number is the London Society for the Promotion of Christianity amongst the Jews. Its name defines its object, and its efforts are wide reaching. This society was conceived in 1809, when there were but 38 believing Jews in all England. In 1813, H. R. H., the late Duke of Kent, accompanied by members of Parliament and other high officials, in the presence of thousands of people, laid the first stone of the Hebrew Episcopal Chapel and Schools in Palestine Place, London. Since then the work has gone steadily on. The late Earl of Shaftesbury was deeply interested in it, and for 39 years only once failed to take the chair at its anniversaries. The society employs 140 agents, consisting of 24 ordained missionaries, 25 lay and medical missionaries, 44 school teachers, 47 Scripture readers, colporteurs, and other lay agents. Of this number 89 are Hebrew-Christians, and 17 ordained ministers of the Church.

"In very many places the Jews are anxious to hear the word of God as explained by the missionaries. In a Jewish paper in London, whose sole object is to oppose Christianity, the editor tells his readers that they 'cannot afford to lose great numbers every year,' that 'they (the Jews) are being caught in the net,' they are most anxious to attend mission hall, etc.

"At one of the society's anniversaries in Birmingham recently 400 Jews and Jewesses were present, and gave also liberally for the work of the society. Dr. Cassel, who has been at work in Berlin five years, reports 60 baptisms, 20 of which took place last year. The Haibrat, Jewish organ, is our authority for saying that in Vienna 248 Jews were converted last year to Christianity. Recently the Rev. Canon Bell made this statement: 'Ten days ago I was in Amsterdam, and went into the Portugese synagogue, which is one of the finest in the Netherlands. There are in that city 50,000 Jews. And a few years ago there were only a few Christian-Jews there, now they are counted by hundreds, and the work of conversion is going on rapidly.'

"The movement of Prof. Delitzsch, of Leipzig, is a wonderful step towards the conversion of the Jews. In nine of the German universities he is starting a movement for mission work amongst the Jews, and already over 300 students of the universities have enrolled themselves as members of a special school for training to this end.

"With the mention of the name of Joseph Rabinowitz, who was a lawyer and a Jew, but who has been converted to Christianity, I must close. He has given up his profession and preaches 'Our Brother Jesus.' It was his independent study of the Scriptures which led to his conversion. He is exerting a wide-spread influence."

Poetry.

IN MANUS TUAS, DOMINE.

Loose not thy hold, O hand of God!
Or utterly we faint and fall.
The way is rough, the way is blind,
And buffeted with stormy wind;
Thick darkness veils above, below,
From whence we come, to what we go;
Feebly we grope o'er rock and sand,
But still go on, confiding all,
Lord, to thy hand.

In that strong hold salvation is;
Its touch is comfort in distress,
Cure for all sickness, balm for ill,
And energy for heart and will.
Securely held, unfaltering,
The soul can walk at ease, and sing,
And fearless tread each unknown strand,
Leaving each large thing, and each less,
Lord, in thy hand.

O mighty Friend, forever near!
O heavenly Help! so soon forgot,
So oft rebelled against and grieved,
Unthanked, distrusted, disbelieved;
Forgive us all, and hold us fast
Till dawning lights the dark at last,
And looking back we understand
How we were kept, and knew it not,
Lord, by thy hand.

Selections.

THE MESSAGE OF THE PROPHETS.

The Old Testament, especially the prophecies, speak of a glorious period of blessedness and universal peace under the dominion of Messiah the King, and if that is not the personal and premillennial coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, then words fail to express the idea. Israel's expectation of that blessed period began in the reign of Solomon, when the kingdom of Israel was at its highest earthly glory. It was then that the prophets began to speak of a more glorious time to come, and of one greater than Solomon, himself a son of David who should sit upon the throne of David for ever and ever. That is the wonder of the Old Testament.

Then, when you come to the New Testament, and find you are standing in the light of much of the glory prophesied for Jesus as coming to redeem sinners from the power of sin and Satan, you learn of something more glorious yet to come, even Jesus as King of kings and Lord of lords in his eternal glory.

But what is comprehended in this millennial period, the "times of restitution" which holy men of God speak of from the foundation of the world? It comprehends the appearing and the glory of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ to accomplish the restoration of all things, the resurrection by him of his departed saints, and the rapture of his living saints to take part in his dominion over the living nations; the overthrow and expulsion of all forms of evil from the earth; the binding of him who was the source of evil; the repentance and restoration of Israel in honor and holiness to their own land; the outpouring of the Spirit on all flesh that should be spared from God's judgments sent upon the earth; the renewal of the earth to more than its original beauty as the blessed home of the race; and, finally, at the close of his millennial period, the resurrection, judgment, and condemnation of the wicked dead, the casting of Satan into his own place of punishment, the abolition, last of all, of death, and then the eternal years of God over all, blessed for ever. That is comprehended in the phrase, the times of restitution, the millennial period, the coming of the Messiah. Such is the uniform testimony of the prophets who testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ and the glories to follow.

From Isaiah to Malachi there were sixteen holy men from God who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost concerning these things. They sometimes appeared together, at other times at intervals, during a period of nearly 500 years. Of these sixteen prophets there is a three-fold classification. First, the prophets down to the seventy years exile, viz.: Isaiah, Jeremiah, Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Jonah, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, and Zephaniah. Second, those who prophesied during the Babylonish captivity, viz.: Jeremiah, who continued his ministry a few years into the captivity, Ezekiel and Daniel. Third, the prophets after the restoration, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi. Some of these prophets belonged to the Northern Kingdom, some to the Southern.

The turning-point in the history of Judah and Israel came when the prophets of Jehovah were rejected and ignored, and the prophets and priests of Baal were honored instead, and it was then that a change occurred from spoken to written prophecy. As soon as the days began to degenerate, then began the writing down of the utterances of Jehovah, through the mouth and pen of these writers inspired of God, indicating, as has been pointed out by another, two things: first, the withdrawal of Jehovah's presence from his people; second, a delay, longer or shorter, in the fulfilment of the Divine purposes concerning Messiah and his kingdom. Joel and Jonah were acknowledged to be the oldest of the written prophecies, Jonah probably the oldest as to his public ministry, but as his written prophecy was not given until later in his life, Joel probably came first.

In the book of Jonah, if it was the earliest of the prophetic books, you find this significant fact, that the Lord makes known the underlying truth in all revelation, and the whole purposes of God, viz.: that God is not the God of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles, and that grace and mercy are to be proclaimed to the Gentile nations as well, and in the name of him of whom Jonah himself was but a type.

Then Joel came and struck the keynote for all who followed him. His prophetic vision embraced the future down to the establishment of the millennial kingdom, when Jehovah shall have returned to Israel again in Mount Zion, Joel iii. 9-21. There you have the substance of all Old Testament prophecy, and it is that glorious declaration that appears again in the eschatological discourses of Jesus and in the Apocalypse of John. It is in Joel you meet for the first time the phrase, "to bring again the captivity," etc.

Turning to Isaiah the evangelical prophet, his prophecy is a vision concerning Judah and Jerusalem.

The main subjects of his prophecy are these: Israel's future in the millennial glory, with Jerusalem as the metropolitan city of the redeemed earth, the judgment of the nations and their blessings afterward in subordination to Judah and Jerusalem, and all in connection with the coming and kingdom of Messiah the Christ, and it is to be observed that Christ, and the apostles quoted this prophet more frequently than any other. The first twelve chapters have to do with the destruction of the Assyrian, the great northern power and political enemy of Israel, followed by the deliverance of earth from the curse, with the full redemption of Israel, and Christ the Messiah standing as an ensign to the people, to whom, as the centre of rest and of glory, all should gather, Isa. xi, 10. In this section occurred that magnificent promise of the coming King and kingdom, "Unto us a Son is born, etc." There was no possibility of denying the literalness of the other part, Isa. xxiv. 21-23; xxv. 7-9.

Three things certainly are proven by these two prophets, viz: first, that Jehovah Jesus will come again in glory as he once came in weakness and suffering, personally and visibly. Second. There is no hope for Israel, and no fullest blessing for the nations until this Jehovah Jesus shall come. Third. There will be no Millennium before Christ comes in person to bring it in. Meanwhile, the church, like the forerunner of the Messiah, of whom Isaiah spoke so definitely, is to proclaim the glad tidings, and make ready the way for the coming of the Lord. That gives us the distinction again between Israel and the church, between the past dispensation, the present, and the coming dispensation. The church is the antitype of John the Baptist, proclaiming the glad tidings of the coming One in glory, making ready the way of the Lord, and when he comes he will take up the line of prophecy, and fulfil that which is written.

Jeremiah, like John the Baptist, was ordained a prophet, unto the Lord before his birth. Two of his prophecies, xxiii. 5, 6, and xxxiii. 14-17, were exceedingly definite and distinct concerning the personal coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. Hosea, whose name meant salvation, or deliverance, prophesied in the long and brilliant reign of Jeroboam the second, in the northern kingdom. It was true he bewailed the apostasy, and in most tender and affectionate terms rebuked the people for their sins, but all through his prophecy of lament and rebuke there runs the blessed promise of hope and glory to come, of spiritual and of national recovery, of the time when Jehovah should return to his own again. (Take specially ch. iii. 4, 5)

Amos, contemporary with Isaiah and Hosea, spoke of Judah and Jerusalem, and of the Gentile nations. His great Messianic prophecy had a significant fact connected with it; it is the one which James at the first council in Jerusalem quoted as giving the Divine order of events, Amos ix. 8-15, compared with Acts xv. 14-17. If we had had no other comment in the New Testament on prophecy that that, it would be sufficient. Amos tells us of the dispersion of Israel, sifted among the nations as corn is sifted, and yet not a grain is to be lost, and then of a glorious time of recovery, a planting of them again in their own land. Amos knew only of the dispersion of Israel, and then of the gathering again, but when they turned over to the New Testament then came in this present dispensation, as James tells us. He said, first it was God's purpose to gather out a people for his name from all the nations, Jew and Gentile, and after this—after the gathering of the church out from among the nations—after this he would return (quoting from Amos) and build the tabernacle of David.

The other prophets filled out and confirmed these things. I have not touched the great prophets, Ezekiel and Daniel, and those after the restoration, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi. You are perhaps more familiar with them than with some of the smaller ones, but you see how constantly and increasingly, and with more definiteness, came out this line of revelation, of suffering and glory. There was an unfolding until the silence fell in Malachi's day. For 400 years the heavens were brass over the earth, no voice broke the stillness, no words came to comfort the hearts of men. Then suddenly the stillness was broken, the brazen heavens parted and filled with light, and there came the words, "peace on earth, good-will to men," and the revelation of a Savior, Jesus the Son of David according to the promise made to the virgin mother, "He shall be great, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall rule over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

In conclusion, you find in these prophets, who is to come, when he is to come, why he is to come, how he is to come. You find these characteristics of the kingdom: it is to be universal over all nations, in righteousness; in it Israel is to have the first place among the nations; it is to be administered by one of the seed of Abraham, and of the family of David: and it is to be the kingdom of Messiah the Christ, the ideal Prophet, Priest and King. Your hearts must therefore certainly yield to the blessed influence and teaching of the prophetic Word if you believe that God is a God who has a purpose to accomplish, and who will assuredly accomplish that which he has spoken. All lines run forward and gather together, and are consummated in glory in the person and the coming and the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.—Albert Erdman,

WHAT THE BIBLE CONTAINS FOR THE BELIEVER.

The Bible is not a book to be studied as we study geology and astronomy, merely to find out about the earth's formation and the structure of the universe; but it is a book revealing truth, designed to bring us into living union with God. We may study the physical sciences and get a fair knowledge of the facts and phenomena of the material universe; but what difference does it make to us, as spiritual beings, whether the Copernican theory of the universe is true, or that of Ptolemy? On the other hand, the eternal things of God's word do so concern us. Scientific knowledge and the words in which that knowledge is conveyed, have no power to change our character, to make us better, or to give us a living hope of a blessed immortality; but the word of God has in it a vital power—it is "quick and powerful"—living, and full of divine energy, Heb. iv. 12, and when received with meekness into our understanding and heart, is able to save our souls, James i. 18-21, for it is the instrument of the Holy Spirit wherewith he accomplishes in us regeneration of character.

The word of God is a living seed, containing within itself God's own life, which, when it is received into our hearts, springs up within us and "brings forth fruit after its kind;" for Jesus Christ, the eternal word of God, is the living germ hidden in his written word. Therefore it is written, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life," John vi. 63; and so it is that "he that heareth my words," that is, receiveth them into an honest and good heart—heareth the word and understandeth it—puts himself in personal relation to it—"hath everlasting life." Matt. xiii. 23; John v. 24. Of no other book could such things as these be said. Hence we say the word of God is the instrument in his hand to work in us and for us regeneration and salvation: for "of his own will begat he us with the word of truth....the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls." James i. 18, 21.

This leads us to say that we are related to God and the eternal verities revealed in this book, not through intellectual apprehension and demonstration, but by faith. Not by reasoning, but by simple faith, do we lay hold on those verities, resting one faith on God, who is under and in every saving fact in the book. 1 Peter i. 21. It seems to me, therefore, supreme folly for men to be always speculating and reasoning about these spiritual and revealed things; and yet we constantly meet even good people who are thus dealing with God's word. First of all they treat the revelation as though it were only an opinion expressed concerning the things revealed; and so they feel free to dissent from it, or to receive it with modification, and to deal with it as they would with the generalizations and conclusions, more or less accurate, of the scientists, and the theories, more or less true, of the philosophers. If the word commends itself to their judgment they accept it; thus making their judgment the criterion of truth, instead of submitting their opinions to the infallible word of God. And it is not seldom that we hear people say they believe the word of God to be true, and then the very next instant, when pressed by some statement or declaration of that word they fly off and say, "Ah! but then I believe so and so,"—something entirely different from what God has declared. Then again, many people who profess to believe God's word seem never to think of putting themselves into practical and saving relation to it. They believe that Jesus Christ is the Savior of the world; but they never believe on him or in him; in other words that he is a Savior to them.

God's book is full of doctrines and promises. We declare them: and some one says: "You must prove this doctrine or that promise to be true." The only way to prove a doctrine to be true is by personal experience of it through faith in Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ says, "Ye must be born again." Should you attempt to master the meaning and power of that doctrine by mere speculation, you would presently land just where Nicodemus did, and say, "How can these things be?" Instead of doing so, suppose you attend further to what is said, namely, "Whosoever believeth is born of God." 1 John v. 1; John i. 12, 13. In obedience to this divine teaching, not knowing how it is to be done in us, we take that word and yield ourselves to Jesus Christ; and lo! there dawns upon us an experience that throws light upon all that which before was a mystery. We have experienced no physical shock; but a great change is wrought in us, especially in our relations to God. "Old things are passed away; behold all things are become new." 2 Cor. v. 17.

Thus we come into an experimental understanding of the doctrine of the new birth. So every other doctrine pertaining to the spiritual life is by God's grace transmuted into experience. For just as a word stands for an idea or thought, so the doctrines of God stand for experiences; but the doctrine must be received before the experience can be had. And, moreover, we are to receive all doctrines, all truth, through faith in him; for Christ and his word are inseparable, just as a man's note is only current and worthful because the man is good. A banknote is received in the faith of the bank it represents. Should the bank fail, the note instantly becomes worthless.

But there are some things revealed in the word of God which we believe without experience. For instance, we believe that this "vile body," Phil. iii. 21, dishonored by sin, and upon the neck of which death will soon put his foot, will in the day of Christ's "appearing and kingdom," 2 Tim. iv. 1; 1 Thess. iv. 16, be raised, changed, and fashioned like unto his glorious body. Phil. iii. 21. Do you know how we can so surely believe these things? We answer, because God has proved to us so much of his word that when he announces something yet to be made true, we, on the basis of past experience reach out toward and accept as true the promise of the future things. Indeed, he always makes it true in our hearts, for "faith is the substance of things hoped for," Heb. xi. 1. For even here we have a present spiritual experience which is as an earnest to us of the culmination yet future. For we are already risen with Christ. Col. ii. 13; iii. 1; Eph. ii 5, 6; Rom. viii. 11.—"In the Volume of the Book."

SUNRISE BESIDE THE JORDAN.

Moonlight was still in the air, as away from our tenantless beds fell the folds of canvas there beside the Fountain of Elisha on the opening of that memorable day when we had our first sight of the Jordan River. The ride was to be long, the start must be early. So the thin tents were struck while we were dressing ourselves for the saddle.

Wierd and strange appeared the scene; for the embers yet lay unextinguished, glowing sullenly against the lazily smoking brands; deep shadows of the rocks were flickering under the flashes of flame. Most of our company awoke pensive and thoughtful. For one, I admit I never found myself more painfully imaginative; things seemed unreal. Still, there grew to be a kind of subtle sympathy between those scenes around me and my own excited feeling. We cherished a common memory and hope. Gilgal was close by somewhere; Naaman came down this way or that to be cured in the Jordan yonder over behind the bushes; these hills and low reaches of plain looked as if they felt desolate at the departure that was imminent, rather sorry that somebody, who knew that they had surely seen better days, did not offer them some kind of pitying help. It struck me that mute nature, in that singular morning beneath the starlight, was asking our best offices of intercession at the throne of an upright God, who understood that she had been more sinned against than sinning; indeed, I never had so touching a sense before of the meaning of the apostle when he made the familiar statement: 'For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now." In the midst of these suggestive surroundings, one learns to appreciate the poetic sensibility of Goethe: "When I stand alone at night in open nature, I feel as though it were a spirit and begged redemption of me; often have I had the sensation as if nature in wailing sadness was entreating something at my hands." Nowhere on earth does this lonesome and pitiful emotion away one's mind as it does in Palestine. The land appears waiting—waiting for something it seems to expect.

The atmosphere was moist and warm when we arose, betokening with prophetic warning a fiercely hot day before us. So it concerned us to be off ere the sun could kindle the hills. All the Passover week the moon was just at the full, and the white light mingled with the ruddiness of the fire, flinging sharp shadows upon the lithe Arabs and muleteers as they hurried their preparations in vociferous and altogether unmelodious confusion. Queer shapes were fashioned in their mysterious twilight, so that the entire scene was full of supreme romance. A moment sufficed to catch a mere morsel of food; then we were on the slow horses, our canvas houses borne on the mules' backs behind us, long in advance of the day-break coming over the mountains of Moab.

I look upon that tranquil transit across the plain of Jericho as one of the precious things of all my remembrance. The ineffable sense of peace and quiet, the unparalleled beauty of the heavens overhead at the time, the deep meaning of the associations through which we passed along the way, the slight little spice of danger from Bedouins out before us among the shadows,—all these combined to inspirit the imagination to its highest exercise. How striking then appeared the comparison employed by the friend of Job as he recounted the tokens of God's immaculate purity: "Behold, he putteth no trust in his saints; yea, the heavens are not clean in his sight"! Up over us in the serene, cloudless, ever brilliant sky, there was not one gloom of darkness; an open reach of uncontaminated blue, of immeasurable depth and richness, positively shown with the silver of the moonlight; and yet God was holier than that was pure. And then the voice of another friend pressed that bewildered patriarch: "Behold even to the moon, and it shineth not; yea, the stars are not pure in his sight; how much less man, that is a worm? and the son of man, which is a worm?" And yet I do aver that one could not conceive of a purity more untarnished and untouched than this sapphire clearness which was in the body of the heavens that morning.

Full of high exhilaration, which such splendor would be likely even to the tamest heart to kindle, we pushed on our way, drawing nearer and nearer the border of Jordan, but often thrown back a good deal in amusing disappointment just at the instant when we imagined we were close to the stream. A curious series of deep and abrupt ravines seem to lie like corrugations across the traveled path, resembling lines of cultivation left by some giant's harrow in the plain, mere ruts in the soil, dry and sandy; each looking as if it contained the rushing river, it only we could get to it, and each suggesting that though it was not the Jordan, it was the forerunner of it, the bed of a torrent one ought to reach in the next half-hour, and each, when attained, offering only a dusty level of a few rods' extent, and proposing farther on another endeavor if we would be patient. We learned to laugh at the continuously absurd deception, and rode on still in excellent spirits. At about seven o'clock we finally came to the real river side, and sat down, glad of a brief repast and repose among the heavy willows fringing the margin of this wonderful stream, before opening our books for study.

If there were nothing more than the striking physical characteristics of the Jordan to be considered, it would be visited almost like one of the curiosities of the world. Here is a vast river starting at the ocean-level as the highest point which it ever touches; commencing to flow where every other river known to geography commences to empty; then from that low source plunging along headlong through a course actually rent by its own violence out from divided rocks, till at last a pool receives its volume more than twelve hundred feet below the Mediterranean, a depressed reservoir without any outlet for itself, sullen and bitter as gall, and for its name fitly called a Dead Sea. The infant stream begins where the snow-clad peaks of Lebanon rise in sight; it ends where the dry air smokes with concentrated heat, as if it were yet burning with the fires of Gomorrah and Sodom over which it lies.

But one has to couple with these peculiarities all the wonderful historic associations likewise. I recollect that the earliest of what were the stories of my childhood in constant repetition had its locality fixed here. My first awe struck notion of a miracle was received, I suppose, because in New England I understood the qualities of an axe perfectly, from the tale of the prophet who caused such a thing to swim; and that was in the Jordan, and he did it with a mere word. I thought of that the instant I looked over the bank down into the water; and so, of course, I thought next of Naaman, sent there by the same prophet to be cured of his leprosy. Seven times up from and out of the current I was gazing upon came the proud head of the Syrian captain, before he opened his eyes once to see his flesh clean like that of a child.

The first sight of the stream does not produce any very inviting impression. It is tortuous enough to be quite romantic, but then fair dealing requires one to admit there is no picturesque beauty in its meandering curves. The water is as yellow as that of the Tiber in Rome; but while the Tiber is sometimes golden, glistening exquisitely in the sunlight, the Jordan is dull, looking as if it were oily and dirty by reason of the sand and soil it tears away from the banks in its career down through the gorges. Beyond, there are some mountains, blue, with delicate markings of indigo lines; but there is no landscape proper to give this river a picturesque setting. The verdure of plains, as well as the populousness of quays, is wanting; so the Jordan has its homeliness unrelieved by thoughts of either prospects or profits. To me the stream looked like one of the familiar "roaring branches" I used to be afraid of in Vermont, augmented to the last degree by an extraordinary and somewhat violent summer shower until it was opaque and muddy.

There is another verse in Job's history that was illustrated exquisitely by the sunrise, with which that most irreproachable day came in. The whole phenomenon as we saw it on this occasion, from its out-leading ranks of beams to its full blaze of completeness, was one continuous surprise of splendor; it constituted the most glorious spectacle our eyes ever witnessed. The singular effect of the dawn flashing high over our heads until it suddenly struck upon the ragged hills behind us, before one gleam had made its appearance ahead, was exhibited to us (Occidental people every one) for the first time in our lives.

One magnificent line of purple, dissolving into violet and scarlet, with a beautiful and indescribable play of palpitation in it, almost like phosphorescence, lay along the black hills to the west,—the emaciated crags of the Quarantania, which we crossed the evening before our encampment. Wilder pinnacles of rocks, or deeper gorges, or heavier ravines desolate with shadows, surely cannot be found on the planet than those thus thrown into view. Lines of gloom were drawn with hard distinctness almost inconceivable, by that peculiarly sharp moonlight a passover week always brings in the Orient. Now, these were yielding the place they had held to the equally sharp light of the sun; only in hue the one of the mysterious jets of illumination played yellow, while the other played white,—and neither of those jets could we discover now.

Over those ridges of rough and splintered rock finally swept the full radiance, as the sun lifted his golden face above the horizon line running along the summits of the mountains of Moab, across on the distant territory beyond the Jordan. And when that spectacle was completed, so sudden, so resplendently beautiful as to make us all fairly exclaim with irrepressible emotion of wonder and delight, then, at last, we understood an old verse that we had quoted and sung before. We knew what the enthusiastic and hopeful Zophar meant when he said, "For then shalt thou lift up thy face without spot; yea, thou shalt be stedfast and shalt not fear: because thou shalt forget thy misery, and remember it as waters that pass away: and thine age shall be clearer than the noonday; thou shalt shine forth, thou shalt be as the morning."—Charles S. Robinson, D. D.

Statistics of Illiteracy.

S. M. L., Charlottetown.—The proportion of illiterate persons is as follows in the countries you indicate: In England and Wales in 1885 the number of those who could not read or write was about 10.7 per cent. of males, and 12.0 females. In Scotland in 1884, 6.16 per cent. males, 11.33 females could not read or write. In Ireland, in 1886, 23.4 per cent. of the men and 26.3 per cent. of the women were illiterate. The United States census of 1880 showed that the number of people over fourteen years of age who could neither read nor write formed 13.4 per cent. of the total population, while those over 14 who could not write formed 17 per cent. of the population. The Canadian census of 1881 showed that the number of people over the age of twenty-one who could neither read nor write formed about six per cent. of the total population, while those who could not write formed about nine per cent. of the total population. Statistics relating to the formation of the United German army show that of all military recruits for the year 1886 only 1.06 per cent. could neither read nor write. In East and West Prussia and in Posen the percentage ranged from 5.80 to 7.56 and in most of the other states the number was less than one per cent. In Queensland according to the census of 1886, 28.44 per cent. of the population could not read nor write. In Victoria in 1881, 92½ per cent. over fifteen years old could read or write and only 3½ per cent. were wholly illiterate. In Tasmania in 1881, 27 per cent. were returned as unable to read or write. In France among the 299,934 men on the conscription list of 1884, 11.7 per cent. could neither read nor write. The percentage of ignorance varies from six per cent. in the department of Doubs and 61.8 in Haute Vienne. In Russia in 1869 only two per cent. of army recruits could read. In 1882, 19 per cent. In the Grand Duchy of Finland the whole of the inhabitants are returned as able to read or write.

Poetry.

PITY FOR THE FALLEN.

Sometimes I grow tenderly sober,
As I look at the faces defiled,
And the sorrows that all the world over
Strow the path of the prodigal child.
I think of the pain and the trouble
That attend all the pathways of sin,
Of the sadness the years but redouble,
Of those who have entered therein.

I think of the sorrows unspoken,
Of the fallen that long for the light,
Of the sad eyes, and hearts that are broken,
Of the tears that are kept out of sight,
Of the pleasures that end but in sorrow,
Of the sadness that fades not away,
Of the hopes of a brighter tomorrow,
That should banish the cares of today.

And my bosom grows tender with pity,
As I ponder the woes of the world:
Then I think of that jasper-walled city
Where the banner of peace is unfurled;
And I think of the Savior, all-seeing,
His nature as loving as when
Long ago, in the streets of Judea,
He carried the sorrows of men.

And O, would I take to the Savior
Those who struggle 'mid sorrow and loss,
I would tell them their sinful behavior
Has caused him to die on the cross;
I would plead that their hearts be not hardened,
I would tell them the Savior said "Come,"
Accept of his grace, and be pardoned,
Then rest in the gladness of home.

To the Faithful in Christ, Greeting.

The Lord is my strength and my shield, my heart hath trusted in him and I am helped, Psa. xxviii.

Perhaps some of our brethren and sisters to whom I have not had time to write for a long while may fear that health has failed me, or that the "world in its busy round" has so entangled me in its deceitful meshes that I have forgotten them. No, neither of these misfortunes have come upon us. My health is vastly better than it was a year ago, and my life much more active. Husband's health is also excellent and we are both better pleased with this far off region, having now been here a year, than we were at the first. San Diego has its advantages and its drawbacks but we think its advantages far out number its inconveniences.

The climate I believe is unsurpassed by any in the wide world. For the months of July, Aug. and Sept., the thermometer registered a fraction over 60 degrees mean temperature. Oct. is equally pleasant, the mornings and evenings slightly cooler. We had a slight thunder shower about the 17th of Sept., and another about a month after, which is all the rain we have had since I think, away back in March. Of course the hills and plains are mostly dry as in the fall, that is where irrigation is necessary, but this is not the case in all regions even of San Diego, Ca. As to the soil. So far as we have seen the fruits and vegetable products thereof we cannot doubt that it is equal to the climate. Such fruits and vegetables I have never before seen, and in most cases the quality quite equals the size and abundance. The raisin grape which is the finest that grows has been on the market now nearly three months and have sold from one to four cents per. lb. Pears are very large and of the best varieties, also apples. Apricots are very choice and in season very plentiful and cheap. Plums are excellent and in great variety and so are all the fruits you can desire. But the surrounding country has not yet been developed to any very great extent. Rail roads are multiplying and this is the one great feature of enterprise required to give an outlet to the productions of a rich soil. The water lack is being gradually remedied by water systems inaugurated and carried out by men of both means and enterprise. I am told that it costs just three dollars an acre to have all the water you require for cultivation.

So much for the country of whose innate beauty and wonderful wealth I might fill the paper with description but time and space forbid. This city, "Our city by the sea" and on the bay is a modern wonder to every one who saw its nucleus a few years ago and now sees what it has grown to. There are as fine stores of all kinds as you can find in any eastern city of its population, and these stores have as great, and as good a stock of goods as any you will find elsewhere. Educational institutions are numerous and first class. Some are fully equipped others in various stages of progress. The people as a class are intelligent and enterprising and in a worldly point "society is very good." Many new branches of business are springing up which will as they proceed give a general and lasting impetus to business in general. The present outlook is for a large influx of people both of health and pleasure seekers as well as actual settlers. But with all this I would not advise anyone to come here without means sufficient to keep them a year. It takes time to adjust matters all round. The little band of believers who reside here meet as advertized every Sunday both for the breaking of bread—worship, and searching the Scriptures. We find each meeting a season of refreshing and trust we are becoming more and more thoroughly established in the ever blessed truth that leads to eternal life. In the blessed hope your sister,

Mrs. Carrie Williams.

Jesus Christ, His Paternity, Genealogy, Nature and Character, in the Light of the Covenants.

This work is now in press, in Pamphlet form. It will include solutions or answers to many questions and things of difficult apprehension in the Scriptures; at least generally so considered: such as, how the Messiah could be a Son of David, and yet his Lord; how he could be a Son of David and yet a Son of God from his birth; how he could be born of a woman and yet not begotten by man; how he could be David's Son, and Son or seed of Abraham, and yet not begotten by either of them; how he could be the fruit of David's body and yet come down from above; how he could be "the seed of David according to the flesh," and yet not begotten by David; nor born after the flesh, but after the Spirit, Gal. iv. 23, 29; how he could be the Word made flesh; how he could be "made of a woman" in the "likeness of sinful flesh," and yet be without sin; how he could be before Abraham and yet the Son of Abraham; how John could say, he was before me, and yet he was not born until six months after John was; how he could be equal to the Father and yet could say my Father is greater than I; how he and his Father could be two persons—Father and Son—and yet he could say I and my Father are one; how he could say I am in the Father and the Father in me; how he could say, the Son can do nothing of himself and yet he could raise the dead; and many more seemingly paradoxical Scriptures.

Including also a brief historical sketch of the Jews—that Nation "of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came."

Also a brief consideration of Anglo-Israelism: and other interesting matter never before published.

Portions only, of it, have been published in a series of articles in The Restitution; and many have written me in high commendation of them.

The Editor of The Restitution wrote me as follows:

"On the Genealogy of Jesus your articles are capital; the best exposition I have ever seen: and on the Josephite heresy, in my view unanswerable."

Eld. J. B. Cook wrote, "It is clear and seems exhaustive. As yet I see no need of more, except to note the vital import of the subject."

Bro. Samuel Wilson wrote, "I am pleased with your articles in The Restitution, and they are not a day too soon, as the leaven of untruth on this subject was being widely disseminated."

Bro. H. Davis of Philadelphia, wrote, "I have been reading your articles opposed to the Josephite theory, as to the paternity of Jesus, and I must say I have been greatly edified. They show evidence of an immense amount of laborious research in the matter, and the studious array of facts and arguments in support of the Divine paternity, are to my mind fully sufficient to overthrow all that can be produced to the contrary."

H. Hoyes of England wrote, "Bro. Thomas, I will express to you my satisfaction at the publication of your articles on the Divine Sonship. Thank God for it."

G. B. Stacy, of Amelia, Virginia, wrote, "I have been delighted at every step, as I progressed with the reading. You seem to me to have covered and exhausted every point and phase of the question, and completely annihilated every position assumed by the Editor of the Millenarian, and Day Star, and all of that School of whom I have met with. Your articles are a triumphant vindication of the Scriptural testimony against all rationalistic attacks. I wish they could be issued in pamphlet form and have a broadcast circulation wherever the human mind is interested in the study of the Scriptures."

Other letters of a similar character might be quoted, but I deem these sufficient. The price of the Work will be 30 cts. Orders now being received. To all who order soon—while the Work is being published—I will send that and my Work, "The Law, the Covenants," etc., a dollar Book, bound in cloth; and my Work—"The House of Many Mansions," a 15 cent book—all for $1.00. Address, Box 8, Dover, Delaware.

L. C. Thomas.

Hasty Words.

Half the actual trouble of life would be saved of people would remember that silence is golden—when they are irritated, vexed, or annoyed. To feel provoked or exasperated at a trifle, when the nerves are exhausted, is perhaps natural to us in our imperfectly sanctified state. But why put the annoyance into the shape of speech, which once uttered, is remembered, which may burn like a blistering wound, or rankle like a poisoned arrow? If a child be trying, or a friend capricious, or a servant unreasonable, be careful what you say. Do not speak while you feel the impulse of anger, for you will be almost certain to say too much, to say more than your cooler judgment will approve, and to speak in a way that you will regret. Be silent till the sweet "bye-and-bye," when you shall be calm, rested and self-controlled. Above all, never write a letter when you are in a mood of irritation. There is an anger which is justifiable, there are resentments which are righteous; it is sometimes a duty to express indignation. But if you consider the matter the occasions for putting such feelings on record are comparatively few. They come once in a life-time, perhaps, and to many fortunate beings they never come at all. Upon the whole, people—our friends and neighbors, and the community of which we form a part—are trying to do the best they can; and in hours of good temper and health life wears a bright and sunny aspect.

Much of the friction which makes the machinery of living move rough and discordant is caused by things too petty to be noticed if we were in our normal condition. The hasty word spoken in petulance may be explained, forgiven, and forgotten. But the letter written in an ebullition of wounded feeling is a fact tangible, and to be conducted. There it lies with a certain permanence about it. You have sent it to a friend, who, reading it half a dozen times, will each time find it more cruel and incisive than before. Letters once written and sent away cannot be recalled. You cannot be sure that your friend (or enemy) will burn them. Hidden in bureau drawers or in compartments of desks, folded up in portfolios, locked in boxes, they will, it may be, flash up again in sudden feud and fire, months after you have ceased to think of the folly which penned them. Never write an angry letter when you are angry.

All heated feelings seek the superlative as an outlet, and superlatives are apt to be dangerous. So long as we cling to the positive in speech we are pretty safe.

We all need to be cautioned against undue haste in speech, but mothers most of all. It is so easy to misunderstand a child; so easy to grieve a little person who is forbidden to answer back; so easy to leave a picture of yourself in the plastic memory which will be photographed there for the remainder of life, and of which you would in coming days be ashamed.—Mastery.

The Coming Age—Its Nature and Proximity. By J. P. Weethee.

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

The Coming Age is the product of laborious researches covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the Coming Age, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth, Price $2.00. Send to this office for this work.

The Eastern Question

In its various phases,—Egyptian, British, Russian, Ottoman, Hebrew, American and Messianic, by J. P. Weethee. The title of this book gives a good idea of its contents, and the reputation of the author is a guarantee of its worth. The subject as a whole, and in its different divisions is handled in a masterly manner, and the reader is convinced at once that the author has spared no labor in the study of his topics. The work is thoroughly done and any one who carefully reads the 640 pages of this book will be well repaid. It is just the book for the time in which we live. Cloth binding, clear, pleasant type to read, and good paper. Price $1.50. Send to this office; orders will now be promptly filled, as we have received an invoice of the book, and will send direct from here. The two books, "Coming Age" and "Eastern Question" if ordered together, $3.00.

Dr. Smith's Bible Dictionary.

A Dictionary of the Bible comprising its Antiquities, Biography, Geography and Natural History, with Sixteen full-page Engravings, numerous smaller Illustrations, besides Maps of the Holy Land in the time of David, the time of Christ, and General Maps of the Countries mentioned in the Bible. It contains every name in the Bible concerning which anything can be said. It gives an account of each of the books of the Bible; explains ... civil and religious institutions, the manners and customs of the Jews, as well as other nations alluded to in the Scriptures. This work by Dr. Wm. Smith, is just the "aid" to Bible study that you need, and every thorough student should place a copy on his table—you cannot read a chapter in your Bible without coming to some question on which you wish more information, and the best help you can get is Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary. Bound in cloth, 776 pages, price $1.50.

"The Gospel of Our Salvation and kindred doctrines—as Life only through Christ—Resurrection of the dead—Second coming of Christ—The Kingdom of God, etc., will be faithfully preached every Sunday morning at 10:30 a. m., to which services we heartily invite the seeker after divine truth. This service will close at 11:30, after which the church will meet for conference, "breaking of bread and prayers." 116 Grand st., on first floor, Brooklyn, N. Y.

ROMANISM:

THE DANGER AHEAD. THE REASON WHY A GOOD ROMAN CATHOLIC CANNOT BE A GOOD CITIZEN OF THIS REPUBLIC.

—BY—

A. J. GROVER.

The writer has given to the people of America statements of facts and figures which they will do well to reflect upon. The prospect for the future of the United States is not encouraging. "Romanism has votes to be cast as a unit. These votes are necessary in national elections, and in most local elections, to party success; whichever party will promise to do most for Romanism, will get them. Here lies the danger. Politicians have already silenced or subsidized the Protestant pulpit and the partisan press. As in the days when slavery ruled, everybody interested in the success of a party caters to Romanism. The national policy as to slavery almost cost the life of the republic. There is ten times as much danger to our free institutions from Romanism now, that there was from slavery in 1861."

Cloth 16mo. 130 pages, paper, with portrait of the author; Price, 75 cents.

Instructive Reading for the Young.

The above is the title of a book of over 350 pages, made up of short stories and other instructive reading, both poetry and prose, for the young. It is illustrated with many fine engravings, is handsomely bound in cloth, and makes one of the most useful as well as pretty gifts for a young person that can be selected. Price $1.00

The Emphatic Diaglott. B. Wilson.

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an Interlineary word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christianity have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on large paper. Cloth $2.50 Library binding $[illegible].

The Unspeakable Gift. J. H. Pettingell.

With an Introduction by Mr. Edward White, of London, England.

This is a book of 320 pages, neatly printed and bound in cloth. This work conclusively proves the doctrine of Life only in Christ, and we most heartily commend it. Price 50c

The above price is for those who want this work for their own use. If you want to use one or more in mission work, or for a gift to a friend we will send them for only 30 cents each.

The Gospel of the Kingdom.

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses, by Wiley Jones. A book of 278 pages, clear type, cloth binding; price, 50 cents single copy, or 10 copies for $4.00. While devoted mainly to a systematic statement and defence of that gospel which the Lord Jesus and his apostles preached, this book contains also a prophetico-historical chart of the empires, and a key or outline of the Apocalypse. Pages 225 and 250. It shows the nature of future rewards and punishments, and points out the prophetic "signs" among the nations—Russians, British, Jews, Turks, and Roman Kingdoms—which portend the speedy and personal coming of Christ to raise the dead; judge the world, destroy the wicked, and establish the glorious and eternal Kingdom of God on earth. For sale at this office.

Key Words, or the Englishman's Hebrew and Greek Concordance to certain words which throw important light on great doctrines; a reference manual. By Wiley Jones. 176 pages, cloth bound, for 15c.

The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. By L. C. Thomas.

This book,—"The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. Also an Epitome of the Great Salvation; and an Appendix including various other Subjects, in brief."

The perfect unchangeable moral law is considered and shown to be the basis and spirit of the old Sinaitic law, now used in its entirety. The law of Moses and law of Christ are compared and contrasted, and the relation of both to the old and new covenants is treated at some length. The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the state of the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 350 pages. Cloth bound; Price $1.00.

FIFTY YEARS

—IN—

THE CHURCH OF ROME.

—BY—

CHARLES CHINIQUY.

A handsome volume of 832 pages, printed in clear type, on fine tinted paper. It is bound in strong cloth, marble edges, and gilt stamp on side and back. Contains two portraits (one representing him in priestly robes) of the author.

There is no book upon the Romish controversy so comprehensive as this. It is a complete picture of the inner workings, aims and objects of Popery. It is from the experience of a living witness, and challenges contradiction. It is a large but very valuable work, and is fast becoming a standard authority. Six editions were sold in one year, and large orders are being daily received for the present and 8th edition. The book commends itself to the American people, and to lovers of liberty everywhere.

The book contains, among other startling revelations, thrilling chapters on, The Bible and the Priests of Rome; the Confession of Children; Festivities in a Parsonage; Protestant Children in Convents; the Trade in Masses; Rome and Education; the Miracles of Rome; Murders and Thefts in Quebec; Papineau and the Patriots; Persecution of Dr. Newman; Grand Dinner of the Priests; the Abomination of Auricular Confession; Some of the Thousand Acts of Folly and Idolatry which form the life of a Monk; the Vow of Celibacy; the Impurities of the Theology of Rome.

We have secured a supply of this book, and can fill orders direct. If you wish to inform yourselves as to the inside working of Romanism, send us $2.25 and you will receive the book postpaid at once.

We can also furnish Mr. Chiniquy's other work, "The Priest, the Woman, and the Confessional." A cloth bound book of 296 pages; price $1.00 postpaid.

Also "Romanism—the Danger Ahead," by A. J. Grover; contains 130 pages; cloth binding, 75 cts., postpaid.

The three ordered together we will send for $3.50.

THE RESTITUTION
TERMS { One Year, - - [illegible]
Six Months - - [illegible]
Three Months - - [illegible]

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

AGENTS WANTED.

We wish to engage some brother or sister in every locality to act as Agent to solicit subscriptions and look after the interests of "The Restitution." We know there are thousands of brethren in full sympathy with the truths we advocate who do not take our paper, and many of them can easily be induced to become subscribers if the matter is brought to their notice, and they are personally solicited. If some one in each locality where The Restitution now goes will take hold of this work we can have ONE THOUSAND new names added to our list immediately.

Who will take up this work with a will, and make it go? Show your paper to a brother who does not take it, or to a friend in whom you are interested, and ask him to try it for a year. It will not take much exertion or time to ask your neighbor to take our paper—and there are few who cannot afford to help the cause we are all laboring in that much—but we do not ask you to do even this for nothing. We will pay you a liberal Cash Commission for your work. Send for terms to agents and samples.

NOW is the time for the friends of The Restitution to show their good will by adding to our list, and thus enable us to give you a better paper. We will enlarge it, and give it a new dress of clear, bright type, just as soon as we possibly can. Would you like to see the change? Do you want to see it bad enough to induce you to try and get at least ONE new subscriber? It depends entirely on how much YOU are willing to do. Do not think this is meant for some one else than you, dear reader, for it is written for you INDIVIDUALLY—no one else is meant. The success of the "dear old Restitution" depends as much on YOU as it does on Editor or Publisher.

Who will send the largest list of new names?

Discourse by Geo. E. Kramer, of Brooklyn, N. Y., at the Blessed Hope Chapel, Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 18, 1888.

Dear Brethren:

I invite your attention to the first chapter of the gospel according to St. Luke, first verse; also to the last clause of the thirteenth verse, nineteenth chapter.

"Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us." "Occupy until I come."

The clause to which I call attention in this first verse of the first chapter of St. Luke, is this, "Set forth in order, a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us." "Occupy until I come."

These two texts from the same evangelist, bring before us a unity of idea, in that the persons who set forth the declaration of the things most surely believed among them, constitute a body, illustrated by the parable of our Lord as occupying the territory claimed by the departed nobleman. That body occupying the territory occupied it in this way, by setting forth in order a declaration of the things most surely believed among them. No one, it seems to me, who is an earnest student of the Scriptures, can question the fact that this earth belongs to Jesus Christ. As it is written, "Ask of me, and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." And it is said of the Messiah, that he shall have dominion from sea to sea, from the river to the ends of the earth. When our Lord was about to enter the city of Jerusalem, they supposed that the kingdom of God would immediately appear. Then he spake the parable of the nobleman, by which our Lord taught that there would be a kingdom on earth, but that the kingdom would not be at that time.

The manner in which the church of Jesus Christ is to occupy until that King returns, I believe we have in these words, "To set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us." And is it not significant that this same evangelist who brings before us this record of setting forth these things in order, and the parable of the returning nobleman, is the same who gives us the history of the organized church. So that we see the armies of that body, we see its fortifications, and we see its banner over the ramparts, "displayed because of the truth," as we read in the book of Psalms. We see the manner in which this body occupied this territory which belonged to the nobleman, believing in his return, when he would give the most splendid assertion of his authority in putting down all power against him, and causing all nations to acknowledge him.

My dear brethren, I am thrilled with this occasion, and I cannot find words adequate to express my feelings. I feel that I am in the presence of a most stupendous theme, and I am impressed with the fact that this may be a very remarkable occasion. I have read in the book of Acts, recorded by this same evangelist, who gives us the parable of the nobleman and the setting forth of the declaration of things believed—I have read in this book of Acts, the account of the Church of God coming together, and we see how they occupied the territory when that matter of circumcision was considered. The apostles and elders met to consider the matter, and when their views had been expressed they reached a conclusion, and that conclusion was the conclusion of the whole Church of God, and it was accepted. It was recognized, and all the churches everywhere accepted the decision of that church council as the expression of the faith of the Church of God. Now what I wish to impress upon you is this, and I ask that you pray we may have the Holy Spirit with us, and the name of God glorified in the expression of his truth, for that is the way to glorify God.

What I want to impress upon you is this, that the body occupying this territory or earth until the return of the Lord Jesus, and setting forth in order a declaration of those things most surely believed, is the Church of God. In connection with this, I ask attention to this Scriptural fact, that Jesus Christ organized a church. He says when Peter made a confession of his faith in the Christ, the Son of the Living God, "Upon this rock will I build my church." Now in the face of that language, can we deny that the Lord Jesus Christ organized the body, and not only did Jesus, who is the truth, say "I build my church," but we read in Matthew, Mark, Luke and John the work of the Lord Jesus in building his church, he and his twelve apostles, and he looked upon them as those working with him in order to establish a body on this earth. A body to witness to the truth; to preach the gospel; a witness to the truth down to the time of his own epiphany, when in the language of Paul "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven."

Does any one suppose that when the Lord Jesus said, "I build my church," when he called his apostles to declare his truth, that he intended that that church should cease to exist after the apostolic age? If so, what are we to understand by his words, "Occupy till I come?" Now if we look into this matter, we shall find that that church existed after our Lord's ascension to heaven, that he left this church on earth in order that it might witness through every age to that magnificent truth that he had given to them. Jesus said to the Father in reference to these apostles, "I have given them thy words, and they have received them." And to show that they were constituted authorities to teach the word of God through all time, Jesus said, "I pray not for these only, but for all who shall believe on me through their word." And he prayed that, and he expected that word to be received down through all generations, and I say to you this evening, that I believe from my very heart, that if there be any people who have the apostolic testimony, the belief of the gospel preached by the apostles, it is you assembled in this meeting to declare the great truth of the coming of the Lord and immortality only through him.

We have the apostolic faith. Now I would impress upon you, as you have the apostolic faith, the importance of perpetuating the apostolic church to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us, and in this way to occupy until the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is written in reference to this church in the epistle to the Ephesians, "Now therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints and of the household of God." And then he says, "And ye are built upon the foundation of the apostles and the prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." There we have the church which Jesus built, and what about those apostles and prophets. There are some who may think that these prophets are the Old Testament prophets. While I believe and found my faith on those Old Testament prophets, yet I do not believe that the epistle referred to them at all. In the first place they are mentioned after the apostles, and we have the same expression in this epistle wherever read, the things which are now revealed were not known, but it is said they are now revealed to the apostles and prophets by the spirit. Before the ascension of the Lord Jesus, the spirit was not given because Jesus was not glorified. And then this church organized by Jesus Christ was a visible, tangible church. I know that there are a number of persons constantly speaking about an invisible church; and what they call a spiritual church, consisting, they say, only of those who love the Lord Jesus, and so far as organization is concerned there is no such thing as the real organized church of God, but that the church of God is an invisible church.

My dear brethren, it is not an invisible church that marches before us in such splendor, in the book of Acts, it is a church that can be seen and recognized, and is no invisible church, but a visible, tangible, organized body, and such a body met on the occasion I have read in Acts xv., and that church was a visible, tangible body upon which Jesus Christ built. "Upon this rock will I build my church." It is no ghost that walks before us in the book of Acts, no invisible body. And, after all, is not that a contradiction of terms? Is not the baptism or the Lord's Supper visible, and is it not said, "As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup ye do show the Lord's death till he come?" And cannot baptism be seen and recognized? Is it not the expression of our faith in a tangible way? As surely as we have the Bible, that Bible teaches that the church of God is not an invisible body, but a visible body, and it is intended that it shall be a visible body, in order that it shall witness properly the truths of the Bible, and set forth the things believed by that church.

"Ye are the light of the world," says Jesus Christ, but he said, "As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world." But he gives us to understand that when he leaves, we are the light of the world. And Paul says, that "Now as the sons of God, we are to witness in the midst of a perverse generation, and hold forth the word of life." Hold forth the word of life, that is a visible witness to the truth of God. What is holding forth the word of God, but declaring the things believed among us and thus testifying to the truth as it is in Jesus? This is a tangible organization to which men may unite themselves and from which men may be separated, and though there may be wicked men and hypocrites in it, these persons do not affect that church so far as its visible organization is concerned. The church of God exists, and it had evil men in it in the days of the apostles, but they did not disband the church. They did not tear down the church and say, let us have no visible organization.

Another remark I wish to make in this connection. Not only was the church an organization, but no matter how many distinct organizations there were necessitated by locality, it was one organization, one organized church, so that the church in Corinth was the same as the church in Thessalonica, and the church in Thessalonica the same as the church in Ephesus, and the church in Ephesus was the same as the church in Jerusalem, and while there were these different bodies, they were parts of a component whole. Jesus did not say, I build my churches, but I build my church. And it is said that we are one body with many members, and one body in Christ; and if I have a church that is utterly distinct and separate from the churches standing by it, and has no connection in any manner with any other church, such a thing may be by necessity sometimes, because there may be some who do not express the truth and faith. It is unscriptural to have any church in any city or town so independent of any other churches, that they have no connection with them whatever. And I say that such a condition of things is directly opposite to the holy teachings, and is not in harmony with God. And when Paul said, "I have the care of the churches," he meant not the church of Corinth, or the church of Thessalonica, or Ephesus, but he meant all these churches, and he recognized them all as the church of God, and he spoke of that church as one body, when he said in reference to God's glory, "That now unto the principalities and powers in the heavenly places might be known by the church, the manifold wisdom of God," so that it is one body, and when it is said that Jesus loved the church and gave himself for it, there is reference to one body.

The apostolic church, notwithstanding its comparative feebleness to the colossal powers of this world, was a felt power because of organization. Felt by Pharisee and Sadducee, felt not only by every sect in Judaism, but by the Empire of Rome itself, and this power was recognized in the church because of her unity and visibility. Therefore you see that the word of God is incompatible with individualism and separation. Isolation has nothing to do with any organization whatever, belonging to nobody and belonging nowhere. All this is antagonistic to the word of God, and if everyone took that position, God would be without a powerful witness on the earth, and there would be no organization to impart faith and declare his truth.

Now let me call attention and impress upon you the meaning of the occupancy of this earth until his coming again. What is the best way for this organized visible body to occupy this territory until the return of the nobleman? I claim from the authority of the word of God, that it is to assert the claims of that nobleman and to be a witness to the truth. Just before our Lord went away, his disciples asked him, "Lord wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" And he said, "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you and ye shall be witnesses unto me." Ye shall be a witness to me in Judea, Samaria and unto the ends of the earth.

Now let me call attention to some things in connection with this matter. Very true but not essential, good brethren will express it. I know that there are some good brethren who are afraid of having a church, and very much afraid of having a creed. And what does the word creed mean? It comes from credo, I believe. But what is taught in the word of God is not what I believe as an individual, but what the church of God believes as an organic body, and the church of God has not been afraid through ages to express her creed. And when the apostles preached it, they taught not only as individuals, but what the church of God believed.

As there are so many different bodies and churches from the east to the west, and each dear brother has his opinions, I would say this, that let there be independence of thought to study the Scriptures, and let there be such a thing as an individual right to study the word of God, and each man to study the word for himself, but I would say in this connection, who are we and in what do we believe? And while there may be a difference of opinion amongst us, are there not some things that we all believe? And are there not some things that not only we all believe, but some things most surely believed among us, and which we believe, no matter how much we may study the word as individuals, can never be shaken?

Let me glance as briefly as possible at some of these things. There are some things believed by the church of Brooklyn also believed by the church in Philadelphia. We are one on a great many things, and no matter how much we study as individuals, and no matter how we may differ, we believe that these things can never under any circumstances be antagonized, and I say as these things are most surely believed amongst us, let us set them forth and be a Scriptural church. I believe in God the Father. Now there may be, and I think there are, a great many differences as to the mode of the divine existence. I may have some idea and you may have an idea that antagonizes mine as to the divine existence, but you and I both believe this. We believe that the God of this universe is our Father, and we can say from our hearts that we believe in this God who created the universe, and believe that we may be his children. Then again. We believe in the divine sonship of Jesus. Now some may say in reference to Christ, "I believe he is the divine Son of God, and I believe that this Sonship began at the birth of the Virgin Mary." Some may think differently and say, "No, I believe that before this, in some way, Jesus existed with the Father, before what we call his incarnation." Well we say, dear brethren, you believe that way and I believe this way. Now it is not necessary for us to antagonize each other, but I tell you what both of us believe, that Jesus is the divine Son of God. That is one thing most surely believed among us, and whatever may be our differences of opinion, as to some other things connected with the relation of Jesus Christ with the Father. Let it be set in order and declared, and let it be known that we are the people who believe in the divinity of Jesus Christ as well as his humanity. And we all believe this, that Jesus is not only the Son of God but we believe also that he is the King of Israel. Now that is a matter that distinguishes us from a great many other people, let us say so and be understood, That Jesus is the King of Israel. In the word of God, the confession of Jesus is not only the confession of his divine Sonship, but also the confession of his kingship. A great many denominations are satisfied to stop there, but let us have it distinctly understood and believed that Jesus Christ is the King of Israel.

I know that you never expect to reach a conclusion to antagonize the fact that Jesus is a King. And therefore, I do not think that we ought to hesitate to say, and to set it forth as one thing most surely believed among us is that Jesus is a literal king, and is to make a personal advent, and that when he comes, his kingdom will be established on the earth. Set it forth, make it plain, so that when men ask "What is your belief?" Say this is one of the things believed by everyone of us, namely: That Jesus is the Divine Son of God, and that he is coming back to this earth. Make it plain, that we believe in the literal kingship of Jesus. Raise the banner and say this territory belongs to Christ; he is the King who has the right to it, and we intend to occupy it by our faith, and assert that fact, until his coming again. We all believe in the atonement. Set it forth that this is most surely believed among us, that Christ died for us, that he made an atonement for our sins, and rose from the dead.

There is a great deal of thought going on in the churches, and men are inquiring in these days, what is the truth? Let us set it forth in the covenant that shall be agreed upon in the Church of the Blessed Hope in Philadelphia, Chicago, and everywhere, that as a people we most surely believe that there is no life outside of Jesus Christ, and that immortality is conditional upon faith in him, and I am not ashamed to say so, and let us set it in order, as one of the things believed among us, that their is no immortality outside of Jesus Christ, and that this is recieved at his second coming. If this will not honor Jesus Christ, I do not know what will.

This is one of the things most surely believed amongst us; set it forth. And now my brethren as to the Holy Spirit. I think I may say we all believe in the Holy Spirit.

Now some person says I do not believe that the Holy Spirit is a person. We do not believe the doctrine of the Trinity, but that the Holy Spirit is an influence coming out from God. We can say whatever our difference, we do believe in the Holy Spirit one and all; let us set that forth.

A creed was handed me some time ago, and it read this way: I believe that the Bible is one thing and the Holy Spirit another, that the Bible is an instrument and the Holy Spirit an agent. Mark my words dear brethren, I do not know what may be done, but mark my words, that if this organization will recognize the Holy Spirit, I tell you the Holy Spirit will recognize you. Now take these facts. The Holy Spirit always seeks a body in which to manifest himself, always. Now what we want is a visible tangible body, or organization for a recognition of the Holy Spirit, and the Holy Spirit will work through the body. Man works through the body of man, and as James says, "The body without the Holy Spirit, will be a dead body. No matter how much we may believe in the Holy Spirit, unless we have a visible, tangible organization or body through which the Holy Spirit can work, there will be nothing done. It has made the Methodist Episcopal Church what it is today. And you ask me why the Holy Spirit has not come and recognized the truth more and comforted more people. I say it is because the Holy Spirit has found no body through which it could manifest his power. And just as certain as you organize a scriptural church of God, and set forth in order, the things most surely believed among you, you will be a power. People will understand what you believe, and a witness will be felt by the communities in which you go.

I met a very intelligent, cultured lady in the city of New York, and I spoke to her on the doctrine of conditional immortality, and she said that she had not heard of it; did not know it was preached. Just think, did not know it was preached.

You ask a man "What do you believe?" "O," he answers, "Our creed is the Bible." Well now he is just as wise as before, and he asks you what you believe, and you tell him what you believe, but you do it as an individual, and not as an organized body. Put it in the covenant and say, "That is what I believe," and hand him the printed covenant. I say in the name of God, do not be afraid of forming any ecclesiastical body, for that is what you want, and do not be afraid of forming a creed, but be afraid of the opposite, and you will have a more powerful influence on mankind in teaching them the truth. O, is it not discouraging to go from place to place, and teach the truth of God, and have no organization united in the same expressions of belief?

I feel, as I said before, that this may be a very great occasion. God has had a hand in bringing you all together, and I have only to say to you, if you do not do the work, then God will raise somebody else to do it. My dear brethren, there is a great work for us to do; great fields opening for usefulness. There is a great field opening in the South, for the propagation of the truth. People there are congregating in places to hear the truth of God preached, as far down as Florida, and near Augusta, Ga., the ministers are finding most remarkable audiences. Now I say, let us set forth the things that we believe, and let us have authorized and ordained preachers, and have men amongst us recognized by the Holy Spirit, having authority to preach the word of God. What we want is this; to have one organized body and have men who have the confidence of that whole body, so that when a man comes to me he shall have his credentials, not because he says so, but because you all say so. Suppose I make myself a preacher, then there is only one man who has had a word in the matter, and in the other case a number of good men have had something to say about it; in other words the one thus ordained is recognized by the Church of God

One of the glorious truths that is presented to us in the text that I have just read, one of the things as set forth and most surely believed amongst us, is that Jesus is coming back to this earth. O, my dear brethren, what a precious truth is that, that Jesus is coming again. What a privilege it is to meet with you this evening, who believe that the Lord Jesus is coming back again. I thank God that this truth was revealed to me, that Jesus is coming again. And Jesus says to you and to me, "Occupy till I come." Work for him, and the best way to do it is not to stand on some hill with our arms folded, and wait for something to occur in nature; studying the newspaper; and seeing what European powers are going to have war, but go to work and help build the church and spread the gospel. It will be better for you to be found at work when Jesus comes. Another precious truth taught by this text is, that this body of the church shall occupy the territory of this earth down to the time of the coming of Jesus. O, my dear brethren, that is a glorious truth, a glorious thought. When Jesus said "Upon this rock will I build my church and the gates of hades shall not prevail against it," he meant that the members of his church shall continue in steadfastness of purpose, in spreading the holy truths, under his protecting guidance. He meant that that church should never go into the grave, that is what he meant. He meant that all the members of that church who went into the grave should come out, but he meant also that that church should never go into the grave, because if it went into the grave there could be nobody to take the Lord's Supper for the church would be dead. "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup ye do show the Lord's death till he comes." And Jesus meant this when he said "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." And he meant just what Paul meant when he said, "We shall not all sleep." And so when Jesus said occupy till I come he intended to teach us that there would be a visible organic church on this earth, down to the time of his coming, and how do you know, but what you have been called together upon this occasion, to do a most remarkable work. I do not say that you will convert the world, but why not believe that there is to be a body to witness to the great truth of the Lord's coming, and eternal life through him. How do you know, but that you will commence a work that will be a germ, and go through the process of evolution, finally attaining the grandest proportions? The church shall never die. She has been too powerful for defeat. Although every where spoken against, she never failed, and her powers were felt and recognized, though the fishermen of Galilee were her doctors of divinity; she lived not only to see Jerusalem in desolation, but the colossal Roman Empire divided, and she lived through the middle ages and infidelity of the French Revolution. And whatever difficulty she shall meet with in the future, she shall outlive them all. The church of Jesus Christ shall always rise above the storms of time. And over her fortifications is seen the banner of faith, and though it is a body, it is a powerful body. And on that banner is the daring inscription expressing her faith, and it asserts the claims of the King Jesus, and at the same time the grandeur of her mission, and the worlds are seen welcoming his advent and asserting his authority as the King of kings and Lord of Lords. "Till he comes."

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

Plymouth, Indiana, Dec. 19, 1888.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, Post Office, County, and State plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co. Ind.

Remittances should be sent by Bank Draft Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk: money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

Bro. Samuel Wilson's discourse will appear next, and others preached at the Philadelphia Conference in following numbers of our paper. Do not neglect to read them all.

Absence from home, a severe cold, the approach of the holiday season, and other circumstances have caused us to defer some articles. Be patient, dear contributors; we hope to be in better working order soon.

Two pamphlets have come to hand of which we can only give brief notices. One is "The House of Many Mansions," by Dr. L. C. Thomas; and the other is entitled, "Bible Chronology," by Mrs. A. C. Hanchett. Both very good.

To our young readers we have to say, that we conclude the story of Isaac Levinsohn this week. It is a reprint from the Hebrew Christian, and has been read with a great degree of interest. With the coming year we hope to make the Youth's Column specially worthy of perusal.

At the opening of the coming year we contemplate making some changes in conducting The Restitution. Long obituaries of persons unknown to our readers are seldom or never read, it is therefore of no use to publish them, and we must rule them out. While short letters relating to personal experience, church progress, and the spread of the truth are more than welcome and eagerly read, it would by no means follow that a long, prosy account of all the trivial incidents connected with the whole past life of an individual would prove equally interesting, or that it would even be read. Some hobbies have been ridden to death; let them now be buried out of sight by all means, as in these fast times we can scarcely delay long enough to read their epitaph, and there is enough of the world to weep over without stopping to shed tears on their graves. The pathetic inspiriting theme, the monthly musings prompted by the scenes of real life, the piquant illustration of Scripture, the lesson from history, exhortations to prayer and a holy, consecrated, sacrificing course of life, very condensed reports of ministerial labor among the scattered churches and in evangelical fields, and similar topics of interest are the themes to make a live newspaper in this last age. We want living topics treated with something like living energy for a living class of readers, a great deal more than we want matter to merely fill up our columns with. We want our brethren to write, but to write both pointedly and briefly about some living issue.

THE LAST TEAR.

And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away. Rev. xxi. 4.

From cradle to coffin the pathway of life is moistened with falling tears. The first breath of the new-born extorts a wail of anguish, and gray hairs go down sorrowing to the grave. The mother's soft hand wipes tears from the infantile face, and if smiles play upon the ruddy cheek of growing childhood, they are only like the sunny spots in shadows of gloom, and the gleamings of joy from youthful eyes are too often, like rainbow hues, reflecting glistenings from drops falling from deep sombre clouds. The pathway of manhood and womanhood is through the valley of weeping. Even when the bride departs, the home kinship imprints the farewell kiss on a tear-bedewed countenance, and grief chokes the parting adieu in its utterance."

"Holy and pure are the drops that fall,
When the young bride goes from her father's hall."

The dying never weep — the icy hand freezes the fountains of sadness and its streams stand still. We recently read of one lone tear that stayed in the eye-lids after the heart had [illegible] of the Christian religion. "When Haldane, that eminent servant of the Lord, sat by the dying bed of his wife, as he closed her eyes a single tear gushed out, and ran down upon the pale face. He said, 'I wiped it away, and I thought it is the last one, for God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.'"

"The eye that faded look'd through gathering haze."

O cold drop of sorrow! last memento of an affection not born of clay-mold. On earth it is but a pendulum beat between the smile and the tear, and through our mortal life Sadness and Mirth go hand in hand—inseparable in their strange companionship. O, ill-assorted pair, ye are bound by ties that death alone can sunder.

"Ye meet at the bridal with flower and tear;
Strangely and wildly ye meet at the bier!
As a gleam from a sea-bird's white wing shed,
Crosses the storm in its path of dread;
As a dirge meets the breeze of a summer sky,
Sadness and Mirth! so ye come and fly!"

But the last lone tear was wiped from the pallid cheek, and her "days of mourning are ended." The saintly sleeper will weep no more. In the glory-lands beyond the dark river the voice of weeping and the sighings of anguish will never be heard. Grief will never suffuse the love-lit eyes of the Lord's redeemed ones with tears of streaming agony.

The rosy-dawn of the resurrection morning will soon crimson the eastern skies, and the blood-washed and white-robed shall then live again. The Lamb, himself, "shall lead them to fountains of living waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." The eye of sorrow drops its last lone tear outside the New Jerusalem.

"Thou hast wept mournfully, O human form!
E'en on this greensward; night hath heard thy cry,
Heart-stricken one! thy precious dust above,
Night and the hills, which sent forth no reply
Unto thine agony!
But he who wept like thee, thy Lord, thy guide,
Christ hath arisen, O love! thy tears shall all be dried."

Farewell, an eternal farewell, to the last lone tear, when we reach the sorrowless shores. Eternal are the raptures there. Like angels, the children of the resurrection from out the dead ones never weep.

A NECKLACE AND A THRONE.

Towards the close of the last century, 1782–1786, the court jewellers of France, Messrs. Boehmer & Bossange, who also were reported to be the best jewellers in the world, undertook to fashion a necklace that had never been surpassed for value and beauty. It was composed of the most costly gems, gathered regardless of expense, from all parts of the world. It is claimed that not less than eight-hundred diamonds, arranged in nine rows, and distributed into loops, festoons, and clusters, where crosses, crowns, and lilies shone in all the marvelous radiancy of these glittering pendents entered into its composition. The worth of this paragon of art was 1,600,000 francs. At this time Marie Antoinette, the wife of Louis XVI., was Queen of France. She was beautiful of person and endowed with all the charms of gentleness and feminine grace. The old monarch Louis XV., while King was well pleased with her vivacity, although his mistress, Mme. du Barry, and his daughters were unfriendly to the Austrian princess. Her dislike of the restraints of court, her natural liveliness and freedom of manner, and a powerful anti-Austrian feeling, brought upon the impulsive and young princess the scandal of her enemies, and, at the same time, alienated from her all the rigid upholders of etiquette among the nobility. She was, consequently, left to drift along in a social set which included many persons of inferior moral culture, who encouraged her in indiscretions which were so misconstrued as to injure that popularity that her youth and fascinating manners had gained for her. Unfortunately for her she became desirous of becoming the possessor of the wonderful necklace. At this time a profligate Cardinal, named Rohan, was grand almoner to the King. There was also in Paris at this same time a French adventuress, Countess de La-Motte-Valois, who had succeeded in being introduced to Marie Antoinette, who took some little interest in her and to Rohan the King's Almoner. Rohan had been bending all his energies and efforts for ten years toward winning the favor of the Queen, but all in vain. Madame Lamotte persuaded the Cardinal that she could conciliate for him the Queen's favor, who, as she told him, was very desirous of getting that magnificent diamond necklace. Accordingly she induced a Mlle. Ollive, who resembled Marie Antoinette, to personate the Queen at a midnight interview with Rohan in the gardens of Versailles. With the real signature of the Cardinal, and a forged one of the Queen, the necklace was placed in the hands of Madame Lamotte, Feb. 3, 1785, which she sold in London, but yet pretended she had delivered it to the Queen. The Countess succeeded in concealing the robbery for several months by producing forged autograph messages from the Queen. On the demand of the immense price of the necklace by the jewellers, which had been purchased in the name of the Queen the fraud was discovered, and a public trial before the parliament resulted. In the examination, which the Queen demanded, it was proven that she never ordered it. In the trial Rohan answered vaguely and unsatisfactorily, and he was arrested and imprisoned in the Bastile, August 15, 1785. After a year's proceedings he was acquitted, and released, but at the same time was exiled from the court and deprived of his grand-almonership. Madame Lamotte was sentenced to be whipped, branded on the shoulder, and imprisoned for life. After being incarcerated for two years she escaped, June 5, 1787, and fled to London where she published libels against the Queen. Notwithstanding the Queen's non-participation in this fraudulent infamous plot, her enemies succeeded in casting a stigma upon her, and credulous people laid every public calamity to her charge. Of this affair Allison says, "This intrigue revived all the old stories, which the economy of recent years had somewhat lulled into oblivion, of the prodigality and extravagance of the court; and the Abbe Talleyard Perigord, then a young man, but whose penetration nothing could escape, early discerned its importance. 'Attend narrowly' he said, 'to that miserable affair of the necklace; I should be nowise surprised if it overturned the throne.'" Speaking of this "unutterable business of the diamond necklace" Carlyle says: "The throne has been brought into scandalous collision with the treadmill. Astonished Europe rings with the mystery for nine months; sees only lie unfold itself from lie; corruption among the lofty and the low, gulosity, credulity, imbecility—strength nowhere but in the hunger. Weep, fair Queen, thy first tear of unmixed wretchedness! Thy fair name has been tarnished by foul breath; irremediably while life lasts. No more shalt thou be loved and pitied by living hearts, till a new generation has been born, and thy own heart lies cold cured of all its sorrows." Thus by a swindling trick, done in the name of the Queen, though without her knowledge a jewelery firm is defrauded of a diamond necklace of immense value, and the throne is disgraced in the popular estimation. True, the Queen resides in a palace most beautiful to the eye, but darkness, as of the tomb, pervades the royal halls. The year 1787 has come, and the nation finds itself fast verging toward an abyss of bankruptcy. The annual deficit of the revenue below the expenditure is found to be 140,000,000 francs. To intensify the sorrows of the Queen Lamotte, the necklace Countess, makes her escape from the Salpetriere, and the hope that Paris might forget her, and this scandalous and ever-widening lie, and multiplied lies broached about the necklace, proved vain. Lamotte-Valois, with a V. (for voleuse—thief) branded on her shoulders has got to England, and from thence, with her falsehoods, defames the queenly name; and these unfounded lies the French people, in their present humor, are more than willing to believe.

Early in this year the Assembly of Notables was convened, but as it proved itself both parsimonious and refractory, there was little or nothing done to alleviate the public exigencies although the state of the finances excited the greatest alarm. After passing a few resolutions and rules the Assembly dissolved, and the members carried with them to every part of France the information they had received as to the embarrassment of the finances, the faults of the ministers, and the prodigality of the court. At this crisis the French Revolution, the bloodiest and most frightful drama ever enacted upon the stage of time commenced its terrible career. As an avalanche, scarcely poised upon the mountain's icy declivity, needs but a reverberating sound, or a jarring tremor to precipitate itself downward, sweeping forests and fields, cots and palaces, homes and hamlets into one dire abyss, so the jarring echos about court extravagance, culminating, as was believed, in this affair about the necklace constellation of precious stones, started an avalanche of horrors that crushed onward over King and kingdom, over crown and throne, over priest and noble, and stayed not till one undistinguishable ruin had engulphed all. The whole nation was poisoned to madness by the virus of infidelity and Popery, and the solemn day of retribution for the oppressions and martyrdoms of a thousand years had come. On Aug. 24, 1572, the Romish Papacy had its St. Bartholomew massacre, and now a Camille Desmoulins harrangues the mobs of Paris, urging a "St. Bartholomew of the patriots." It came. Aug. 10, 1792, arrives and the revolutionary mob besiege and take the royal palace of the Tuelleries, the royal family make their perilous escape to the National Assembly, find doubtful security there for a few days, and thence, Aug. 13, 1792, are borne in Petion's carriage to the compact prison of the Temple; its gates close; French royalty vanishes; and Louis XVI., and Marie Antoinette, who, as his fair young Queen, was a vision of beauty, and the cynosure of all eyes, are discrowned, treated as prisoners—as felons—and as such severally meet the malefactor's death by the guillotine. The throne is lost, and the beautiful neck instead of being encircled with the constellation of brilliants is severed by the descending blade of cruel steel. So closes this sad episode of history—the necklace and the throne. It is only an episode however, in a terrible drama that deluged Europe with blood. The end is not yet. The scenes of a drama far more terrible will soon open upon the gaze of an ungodly world. O, church of God, watch and pray.

The following address is sent out by the Committee appointed at Philadelphia. The report was published in our issue of Dec. 12, 1888.

To the Churches of God throughout the United States and Canada, by whatever names called,—Greeting.

Dear Brethren:

Our first National Conference is now a thing of the past, and a full report of the proceedings will be published in due time; but knowing the anxiety of the brotherhood at large to learn the result of our deliberations and labors, we the delegates and honorary members of this Conference assembled from California in the West to New York State in the East, from Canadian Ontario in the North to Florida in the South, feel impelled to communicate with you on the subject.

We have worked earnestly, prayerfully and harmoniously; and have every assurance that our prayers have been answered, and that Divine wisdom has guided our deliberations and moulded them into definite form.

Without restricting the liberty, or binding the consciences of the Children of God, and without lowering the glorious Divine standard, the Word of God, as the only guide for his people; a plan for work, education, co-operation and protection has been formulated, which we submit with full confidence that it will meet with the unanimous approval of the Churches, as it has of the delegates.

To carry into practical operation the result of our labors we have appointed an Executive Board as follows:

President, J. W. Willey, of Indiana; Vice-President, Samuel Wilson, of New Jersey; Secretary, A. J. Eychaner, of Iowa; Cor. Sec'y, Jas. W. Wilson, of Austin, Illinois; Treasurer, Geo. F. Work, of Pennsylvania. L. C. Chase, Michigan; S. A. Chaplin, Indiana; J. L. Wince, Indiana.

Honary Vice-Presidents, S. A. Chaplin, of Indiana; Benj. Wilson, of California; Wm. Brookman, of Toronto, Ont.: Peyton G. Bowman, of N. Carolina; N. J. Morgan, of Virginia.

These brethren you will recognize as practical and successful business men and Elders whose names are as familiar as household words; "Old men for council and young men for war,"—and we earnestly request for them your hearty support and prayers. And now dear brethren, a few practical words with you.

The responsibility for the success or failure of this movement rests with you, individually and collectively. This is God's work, but it is your work also for "Ye are workers together with God." God works through agents, and holds them responsible to the full measure of their abilities, morally and financially. When Israel of old lived at careless ease in the land, they allowed the Ark of the Lord to dwell in tents. Are we not in the same position? The light of Divine Truth that has been committed to our care has been almost hidden from view, only flickering at intervals in a spasmodic and indifferent manner, and the warfare against the forces of evil and falsehood has been of the guerrilla character, from behind the rocks and trees, conducted without order or discipline. You now have an opportunity to assist in lifting on high a beacon light no longer a flickering character, but increasing in intensity; and of organizing and equipping trained battalions who can do effective work in breaking through the serried ranks of enmity to the truth of God.

Will you do it? We have confidence in you that you will. The time for action is now. It is useless to mourn over the past. It can never come again. The future is in God's hands, but today is both his and yours. The present moment while in your possession covers the measure of your responsibility to God. Seize it and hold it for his glory! "The King's business requireth haste;" let us work "while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work."

Our Lord demands of us the sacrifice of time and money; not only to burn upon the altar, but to consecrate for the salvation and edification of others, to the glory of his Name. Your delegates have laid before the Lord one-tenth of their incomes in the full confidence that you will follow their example; and if this is done, an impetus will be given to the spread of Truth that will surprise us. Let us profit by the wise and successful example of others, and many now in darkness will see "a great light." "Honor the Lord with thy substance;" "He loveth a cheerful giver," and so shall we learn to share in his Divine nature of Love, ever overflowing for others.

We appeal to you not only for financial support for the cause of truth, but also for your personal support. Become active workers, study carefully the suggestions for practical work given in our Report. Organize in churches and District conferences; establish Sunday schools, neglect "not the assembling of yourselves together as the manner of some is," stir up the gift that is in you; study the Word of God; care for the poor and afflicted, and by prayer and praise, and in every other divinely appointed way, endeavor to build each other up in our most Holy faith.

Recognizing as a truth that "In union there is strength" your delegates, as one united body have grasped each other by the hand, and now appeal to you to join and swell the circle of workers, that "knit together in Love," preserving the "unity of the spirit in the bond of peace" we may with one accord work together in spreading abroad the Truth, to the glory of God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Respectfully submitted by your Committee,

S. A. Chaplin,
Samuel Wilson,
W. Brookman,
Committee.

I would like to have the various churches whose reports I have not received, send me statistics of membership and officers, also form of worship and organization, frequency of meetings and of communion, and any other information which will aid me in compiling the statistics of the church, ordered by the conference. I also would like the names and postoffice addresses of clerks or corresponding secretaries of the various churches and conferences, also the names of isolated brethren who are connected with no regular church organization so that I can correspond with them in relation to the work of the General Conference, and send them reading matter for distribution, etc. Jas. W. Wilson,

Cor. Sec. General Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, Austin, Ill.

TO STATE AND DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

The following offer from Bro. Geo. F. Work, of Philadelphia, explains itself.

To the Corresponding Secretary of the General Conference:

Whenever ten or more churches united together in a State or District Conference shall pay unto that Conference the sum of $100.00 for the work of that Conference I will also pay $100.00 to each of such Conferences on above conditions.

Geo. F. Work.

This is an offer the State and District Conferences cannot afford to neglect. Jas. W. Wilson, Cor. Sec. General Conference.

Report of Labor.

Commenced work as evangelist for the Iowa conference June 18. Worked for them till some time in August, the exact date I don't seem to have. By request I stopped till after conference, which was to convene Sept. 13. The work done was in Benton Co., where we held eleven meetings. Our meetings were hindered or stopped over two Sundays by rain. We made twenty-seven visits. Found in this county the following brethren who seem to be steadfast in the faith: J. Remington and wife, George Titus and wife, A. L. Mitchell and wife, Wm. Meridith and wife, Oliver Bunker, Alva Stillierd, Aida Hilliard, Ike Stephenson and Natta Todd. These we visited and found them steadfast in the faith. We found it impracticable to organize churches on account of their scattered condition, there being no one among them that had self-confidence enough to take the lead in anything, except Brother Hilliard who has some courage, but he is young in the cause and lives away to one extreme from the rest. There was a good interest manifested in his locality and we are to return there as soon as possible to hold another meeting which we shall do soon, no preventing providence. For labor done here we received from the evangelist fund $29.00.

This closed our work as evangelist till September, when we, at the call of Brother Fox, proceeded to Nebraska. Some account of our meetings there we gave in The Restitution some time ago, hence we pass over till the conference which assembled Sept. 13. Had a good meeting and baptized four willing souls into Christ, and here let me say that three of them were [illegible], one son, one daughter by law. On the 22nd of Sept. I resumed work as evangelist and have worked two months except one week during which my wife was sick so that I had to stop to take care of her. I find that I have held thirty-five meetings, made forty visits and baptized six willing souls into the Anointed One. I find that there are forty-six baptized believers and some others who hold the faith and many of them openly confess they believe it. I have visited nearly all of them in the last two months. These brethren and sisters are situated in Beuna Vista and Pocahontas Counties, Iowa. I sent their names to the secretary in last report. For this work I have received from the evangelist fund $45.00.

In looking over my record I find that it is twenty-nine years this month since I began preaching the gospel of the kingdom. Although I am called a hobby-rider, yet the record shows that I have baptized 173 persons into the all-saving name of Jesus the Anointed One, and yet the most of this twenty-nine years I spent on the farm and supported myself and family mainly with these hands of mine. Three years ago my effects for keeping house were consumed by fire, my land being heavily mortgaged was taken by the mortgagee and I left to the world without anything. I then determined to devote my whole time to proclaiming the coming kingdom, since which time I have been in the field and expect to be there till the Lord comes, if the old monster death don't lay me by to wait in the dust for the Lord.

And now, before I close, let me say to the brethren scattered abroad, if you desire me to come to see you let me hear from you, as we are informed by the Treasurer that the fund is running low and work for them will soon close. When that is done I am ready to go anywhere that the truth is wanted. I have engagements to Jan. 1. As this has ceased to be a report and become historical now, we wish to change again and exhort the scattered ones to faithfulness. Put on the whole armor of God and do not be busybodies in other men's matters; and lay aside envy, malice, railings and backbitings, and let us love with a pure heart fervently that we may be kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last times, and may the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect to do his will through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory for ever and ever, Amen.

MESSIAH'S ADVENT.

He came to his own in the fullness of time,
But him they knew not nor his mission sublime;
They read not his signs, they saw not his star,
Yet strangers discerned it and came from afar.
Through dimness of vision they strained for the light,
But heard not the Bethlehem song of the night;
They knew not the infant that lay in the stall
Was child of the Virgin, and Monarch of all.
They looked for his coming, great David's great Son!
But knew not already his time had begun.
That the lowly degree, by prophets foreshown,
And the mission of love was the base of his throne.
They stumbled before him, and over their fall
Came riches and fullness of blessing to all:
The babe in the manger is born to the race,
And he, the rejected, has magnified grace.
"Despised and rejected of men" was he then,
But when he shall come in his glory again,
The Jew and the Gentile, the bond and the free,
In glad adoration shall bow down the knee.
Meanwhile at his feet, as the sages of old,
We bring him our homage for spices and gold,
We worship him lowly, the child in the stall,
And hail him Redeemer and Savior of all.

Editor Christadelphian Advocate:

I wrote you some time ago on the subject, "Was Christ a Descendant of Adam?" which you acknowledge having received, in the November number of the Advocate. And you in that number say that it is unnecessary to publish the letter in full, as it consists mainly of what was contained in the letter to the brother, and reply thereto, published in the May number of the Advocate. But you quote a few passages from my reply, and arrange them in such a manner as to make them appear puerile, to say the least. If you had published the whole reply and then made your strictures upon it, I would make no complaint, because your readers would be able to judge as to whether or not my arguments were sufficiently conclusive to settle the point of discussion against you. I do not feel satisfied to leave the matter in the condition that your editorial in the November number of the Advocate puts it. If my conclusions are not correct, I will be only too glad to have the fallacy shown, that I and others may be set right on this subject.

You denounce the view that I take of the subject as heresy, for you say to me, "The brother, to save himself—rather, to lose himself if he does not change—snatches, etc." Now I deplore the idea of being lost, therefore if I am in error that will cause my loss I will certainly abandon it; but I cannot consent to turn away from what I believe to be Bible doctrine and accept directly the opposite because you or any one else says that my view is heresy and that your view is orthodox, without giving me a Scriptural warrant for so doing. You conclude your editorial with the following sentence, which shows the real subject at issue, viz: "We are pleased, however, ... and hope that our brother who has been led astray by the pernicious heresy of Free lifeism may retrace his steps and return to his first love for the pure, unadulterated truth of the Living God." The subject, "Was Christ a Descendant of Adam," comprehends what you are pleased to term "the pernicious heresy of Free lifeism." The question to be discussed is, was Christ in the loins of Adam? and the logical deductions drawn therefrom. You hold that he was, while I say that he never was, and we each try to prove from the Scriptures our position. To prove that he was in Adam's loins shows that he was as much under the condemnation of death as Adam or any of his descendants; while to prove that he was not in Adam's loins, shows that he was not under condemnation of death, but was as free from death as Adam was before he sinned and came under the condemnation.

It was sin that brought death to Adam and his children. He was of a flesh and blood nature, and was not subject to death as long as he obeyed God; therefore continuity of life was natural to flesh and blood, and death was brought by Adam's sin and God's judgment upon him. Had Adam never sinned he no doubt would be alive today. His sin, however, did not change his nature nor that of his descendants, neither did the judgment passed upon him by his Creator, for the flesh and blood nature of Adam has continued with mankind. Sin was not in the world until brought by Adam upon himself and all his descendants who were then in his loins, and he and them were condemned by God's judgment passed upon them. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." "Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation." Rom. v. 12, 18. What was the condemnation to? Why death, most certainly. If Adam's nature was subject to death before he sinned and judgment was passed upon him, did his sin and the judgment of condemnation, really bring death to him? If it did not he eventually would have died. Death would then have been natural to him, and his descendants would have the same nature; therefore they would all in like manner die. But the Scriptures prove that death was not natural to man but was brought by man's sin and God's judgment of condemnation upon all men.

The Scripture shows that our Lord Jesus Christ was of flesh and blood, that he took it on, that he was made like unto his brethren; that he took on the seed of Abraham; that he was made of a woman who descended from David and from Adam. Because he was made of a woman, who was of the same substance as Adam, does not prove that he was in Adam before he was made, any more than that Adam was in the ground before he was made. But if you cannot say, that the portion of the ground of which Adam was made was Adam, neither can you say that the woman of whom our Lord was made was Jesus. Again, if Jesus Christ was in the loins of Adam, he was a sinner, according to the authority of Rom. v. 12; and according to vs. 18 he was under the judgment of condemnation as much as any of the race of Adam. But the Scripture says that he was without sin, he was not under condemnation, therefore he was free from death until he should sin and thus come under condemnation; or until he should voluntarily lay down his life, even unto the death of the cross in obedience to his Father. His death did not come through disobedience as did that of Adam and his children, but through obedience—disobedience is sin, obedience is righteousness.

He said, "Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take (receive) it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take (receive) it again. This commandment have I received of my Father." John x. 17, 18. This shows a voluntary death on his part, in obedience to his Father's command; and not an involuntary death through disobedience, like Adam and his children; in their case death came by judgment on account of disobedience; but in his it came by command on account of obedience. Although he was not subject to death, he did not have eternal life while he was in flesh and blood nature. The body must be changed to spirit nature before it has eternal life, which took place at his resurrection Rom. i. 4.

Now we will pursue the argument in another line to see if it can be shown that our Lord Jesus Christ was not in Adam's loins. The Scriptures show that the father is the progenitor of the child, as, Abraham begat Isaac, Isaac begat Levi; thus showing that the child descends from the ancestor through a line of fathers. Take any of the genealogies given in the Bible, and it will be found that descent comes from Adam through fathers. In Heb. vii. 9, 10, it is said that Levi paid tithes while in the loins of his great grandfather Abraham, thus attributing action to Levi before his grandfather Isaac was born. The Scripture goes further and shows that all men sinned in Adam, thus attributing action to all while in Adam's loins, and all were condemned to death while still in his loins. Then no one could descend from Adam except by begettal, and every one begotten was a sinner condemned to death.

This fact proves that the father is the progenitor of the children. So if our Lord Jesus was in Adam's loins, Adam must have begotten a son, and this son another, and so on down to one who was the father of Jesus, this being the only way of exit from the Adamic loins. If our Lord Jesus was of divine begettal, he could not have been in Adam's loins, for the reason that he could not be transferred from Adam to God, and then begotten, by the Holy Spirit, of the woman. Jesus said, "I came down from heaven." "I am from above, ye are from beneath; ye are of this world, I am not of this world." We find in the first chapter of John it is said, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." Now, if Jesus was created in Adam as all his children were, he was of the earth, earthy, and did not come down from heaven any more than did Adam. Jesus said that he had glory with the Father before the world was; could this be true if he was created out of the earth with Adam?

You take the promise to David, recorded in 2 Sam. vii. 12, "When thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom;" to prove that Jesus was in David's loins when this promise was made to him. You will not say that this seed was David's son, but you must admit that he was to be a son of one of David's descendants; and also, that this seed could only be a son of Mary, to fulfil the prophecy. Then if this seed, Jesus, was begotten of Mary, it is clear that he was not in Mary until begotten, and, if not in Mary, neither was he in David's loins when the promise was made. Jesus was son of David because he was son of Mary, who was a descendent of David.

Do you say, can you say, or will you say that Jesus was in David's loins as the Scripture says that Levi was in Abraham's? If you do, can, or will say so, then you must admit that he descended from there in the same manner that Levi descended from Abraham, by David begetting a son, who begat another son, and this son another on down to one who begat Jesus, just as Jacob begat Levi. Then if you do not say this, you must either abandon your position, or the proof you try to deduce from that premise. You must not try to answer this interrogatory, as you heretofore did, by saying this is a two-sided question, and that both sides must be kept in view in order to arrive at the descent of Jesus.

In your reply in the November Advocate you say, "Brother Bendy seems to have entirely lost sight of one side of the question. Let both sides have their places and there will be no conflict. No reasonable person will deny that Jesus had his paternity in God; but that fact does not conflict with the other, namely, that he was of the seed of David according to the flesh." Let me say that I have never lost sight of either side of the question as my letters to you amply prove. Now I ask you, Do you mean to say that Jesus was in David's loins because his mother was? And that he was in his mother before begettal by the Holy Spirit? You seem to make so much of the mother's side of the question, that one would think you meant to hold that Jesus proceeded forth and came from Adam simply because his mother did. If that is your view, I must beg you to read what Jesus said about where he came from, viz, "If God were your Father, ye would love me; for I proceeded and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me." John viii. 42. Again, "And have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me." John xvii. 8. You may reply that you do believe that he proceeded forth and came from God. Then I would ask you, which do you believe was Jesus, he who proceeded forth and came out from God, as he says, or he who proceeded forth and came out from Adam as you hold? It is evident that both cannot be correct, for he proceeded forth and came out from one alone, either God or Adam. If he was in God he was not in Adam; but if in Adam he was not in God. Jesus said again of himself, "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world;" again, "I leave the world, and go to the Father." John xvi. 28. Does this testimony show that he was in Adam?

You say, "Why will men struggle against reason and common sense to evade the simple, plain, and positive language of Scripture? God himself has declared to David, Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne; and Peter says that God had sworn with an oath that of the fruit of David's loins he would raise up Christ; and Paul tells us that Jesus was made of a woman; and that the flesh and blood of which the brethren were partakers, Christ was partaker of the same, and therefore he was the seed of Abraham, and the seed of David according to the flesh."

Do you mean to prove by the foregoing citations and quotations of Scripture that our Lord Jesus was in David's loins as Levi was in Abraham?

Do not the Scriptures show that it was of the fruit of David's body that he would set upon David's throne? Does it show that it was the fruit of David's body that he would set upon his throne?

Peter says that it was of the fruit of David's loins he would raise up Christ. He did not say that Christ was fruit of David's loins. Now let Peter's saying be examined in the Greek. Acts ii. 30, and it will be seen that the particle 'ek' is used, and, which may with equal right be translated out of, as in Matt. xxvii. 53, where the saints are said to have come out of the graves after his resurrection; and many other instances might be cited to show that the particle ek, would be correctly translated out of, as any one may see. Then it appears that the idea conveyed, is that, out of fruit of David's loins, he would raise up Christ. It does not say that Christ was of David's loins, or, out of David's loins, or fruit of David's loins; but that he was ek, out of fruit of his loins. You are entitled to all the comfort you can derive from any little smile of merriment provoked by your treatment of my use of the Greek particle ek; as well as every other little criticism used at my expense.

Now let me ask you a few questions, to which your reply is demanded, viz: Do you hold and teach that, Jesus had no existence as part of his Father before his begettal? Do you deny that the spirit substance was put in the womb of Mary which became flesh and blood, thus taking on the seed of Abraham, and being made like unto his brethren? Do you hold and teach that Jesus had no existence previous to his begettal, and that Adamic substance in Mary's flesh was simply energized by spirit action, and that this Adamic substance so energized became Jesus? Is it not because you hold this view you teach that Jesus was in Adam's loins, and so condemned to death in him? If you hold that a part of the Divine Spirit was put in the womb of Mary and became flesh and blood and took on the seed of Abraham, could you then hold that Jesus was in Adam's loins? Does not this last view agree with the Scripture teaching concerning the origin of Jesus?

Did he not say to the Jews? "Ye are from beneath; I am from above; ye are of this world; I am not of this world." "For I came down from heaven." "I am the living bread which came down from heaven." "What and if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend up where he was before?" "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made. He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not. And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us. John bore witness of him, and cried, saying, This was he of whom I spake. He that cometh after me is preferred before me; for he was before me." This quotation from Jno. i. was written by John, not said by Jesus. The New Testament, shows John to have been some older than Jesus, then according to your view John was mistaken when he said that Jesus was before him. Again, how could Jesus have had glory with the Father before the world was? I might cite many other Scriptures to show that Jesus had an existence previous to his begettal, but these are sufficient. As Levi is said have paid tithes while in the loins of his great grand Father Abraham, may we not say that, Jesus while in his Father did the works that are ascribed to him?

Now if you will state your view of the origin of Jesus, and that he was in Adam's loins; and sustain it by Scripture, reason, and common sense so that I and others may see that my view is wrong and yours the correct one, you will have done a good work for those in darkness seeking light. I write an open letter that all may see what I say and be able to judge from the whole letter whether I have sustained the position I hold. I trust I have said nothing to give offense. I am truly your brother seeking more Scripture light.

THE STORY OF ISAAC LEVINSOHN.

This story must now be brought to an end, and the reader will please bear in mind that, between this chapter and the last, several years have passed by. Isaac Levinsohn is no longer a youth; he is a happy father of five children, and has a loving partner in his wife. The desire of his heart is realised, for his present position enables him to go to all parts of the kingdom, preaching Jesus Christ and him crucified, and gives him the opportunity for relating God's gracious ways with himself, and with many, yes, very many, of the nation of Israel.

Thus far has the Lord led me, and as I cast a retrospective look over the years that have gone by, I thank my God for every difficulty and every sorrow I have undergone, and for his peace which passes all understanding, which, even this day, fills my heart. He has made my dangers, adventures, journeys, hungering and weariness, yes, my every trial to become an occasion of thanksgiving. I cannot cease to thank God for enabling me to settle in this land of civil and religious liberty, and in delivering me from a country of cruel despotism. But what is this compared with that great liberty into which I have been brought, even the sweet freedom of the Gospel of God's Son, which he gave to all who come to him, whether they be Jews or Gentiles. Oh! how I long that my Jewish brethren might learn to put aside every form of selfrighteousness, and, casting aside the burdens of Rabbinism, simply trust in Jesus who is abundantly able to save.

But this chapter is especially written in order to recount some of God's gracious ways with my family in Kovno. Great changes have taken place there during the last three years, caused by the bitter persecutions against the Jews, which have broken out in various parts of the Russian empire. Thousands of Jews have been driven out of their homes and from scenes of comfort and affluence, to perish in misery and want. Great fires have been maliciously ignited, and the houses of many Jews—indeed, at times whole villages inhabited by Jews—have been burnt, and the poor people have been cast out, almost naked, to starve and to perish. Around the burning ruins cruel mobs have gathered, and while witnessing the conflagrations they have mocked the cries of the innocent children and tears of their mothers as they were driven out, where, they knew not. In the face of this wickedness, let English Christians ask, "How can the Jews in Russia have any kinder thoughts of the Christian religion than I used to have?" for these persecutions are inflicted upon the Jews simply because they are Jews!

Yet "the wrath of man shall praise Thee." Psa. lxxvi. 10.

Ten years had passed away since I heard from my dear family, and at length my longings, my yearnings, my prayers for news from my home were answered. But, alas, what news! My father had died a victim to the persecutions, my precious mother was a widow, and, with my two young sisters, was brought to desolation.

How to act or what to do I know not! Would my mother accept any help from me? Would she so much as receive a letter from her son, who for ten years had been cut off, cursed, and considered as dead? However, my duty was plain, and I wrote:

"My dear mother,—I have heard of your terrible calamity. Remember, that God is wise, loving, and righteous. Oh! if I knew how to comfort you, how gladly would I do so, I would then endeavor to cheer you.

"My dear mother, for ten years I have been compelled to be silent. Will you now allow me to offer you a few words of sympathy, for my heart bleeds for you?

"How mysterious are the ways of God. He has called you to be a widow. May it not be, dear mother, for some wise and good purpose? When I think of you, my precious mother, and my dear young sisters, whom I cannot help, I feel sure that he, who is a Father unto the fatherless and a husband to the widow, will not allow you to live unprotected and unprovided for, but will give you succor.

"I am very anxious to help you, will you allow me the pleasure to do so, and let me do my sacred duty to you as becomes a son? Of the little that I have you shall have a part. You shall not want. I will rather deny myself in order that my precious mother may be provided for. If I only have one penny you shall have half of it, and I am sure that my God will supply all my needs. I enclose....notes, which you will be able to exchange anywhere, and will joyfully send you ....every month."

I was impatient to receive a reply. At last it came, and with what feelings did I read the words written in my mother's handwriting!

"My dear son,—Your sweet letter came to hand when your sisters and myself were at prayers over the grave of your sainted father. We were there for several hours, prostrate, and crying that his holy soul might intercede for us, three lonely women. My eyes were nearly blinded with much crying as we lay prostrate upon the sacred soil, under which rests your precious father, and my sweet companion, husband and all. Oh! what am I without him? Life is not worth living. Oh! why has not God taken me first?

"Opening your letter, your dear sisters read it with me. We were all overcome, and we all burst out crying and lamenting, and when we came to ourselves we three vowed that the God of your fathers should be our God.

"Your letter, my dear child, has almost made me brokenhearted. It is a mystery to me that you should show me such kindness, when I think that you are a Christian and have been one for years. I never thought that a Christian would show such kindness to a mother in distress, more especially in my case, as I consider how we have acted towards you, and erased your name from our family register, pronouncing you accursed and a meshamad.

"If we had seen you on the streets of Kovno starving, and in the greatest misery, we should have naturally rejoiced—we should not even have offered you a morsel of bread or a cup of water, and yet, as soon as God has visited us with trouble you are coming forward to be a saviour unto us. You certainly, I must confess, exhibit a better spirit than what any of us would have shown.

"My dear son, whom I considered dead, is after all alive! I thank you for your sweet words of comfort and offered help. The notes are at hand, and they are indeed a most acceptable gift. God himself reward you.

"Yet, oh! how I wish that I could be sure that my son Isaac still feared God, the God of Israel. I fear you have forsaken him. Seek his face now. There is no God like unto Jehovah, the God of Israel."

A fresh opportunity was thus opened to me for corresponding with my mother. I began to realize that although her terrible troubles were almost more than she could bear, probably they would become the means of her blessing. While rendering temporal help, I began at once to send her, in one form and another, the words of truth. I translated a sermon on "Christ our Passover," and sent it to her, with a letter from which the following sentences are extracted:

"I wish to explain, that which seems a mystery to you. You are surprised that I should want to help you. It is strange to you that I, your son, should show kindness to you, my own mother. Is it not the duty of every son to help his mother? especially is it not mine to help her who, from my earliest days, has brought me up with tears and prayers?

"I know you do not understand my profession of Christianity. You have no doubt an idea that the religion I have embraced is as the religion of the Christians whom you see in Kovno. These people are Goyim [idolaters], whose lives are unworthy. But I am not a Goi [idolater]; I worship the God of Israel; Jehovah is my God, and none other God do I serve.

"The Christian religion is a different thing entirely from what you see. True Christianity ennobles a man and makes him pure, true, and holy. It teaches people to love one another, and to forgive even their enemies, and although you have for years disowned me because I am a Christian, yet I have never forgotten to pray for you, my dear mother, and for all my kindred.

"Had I not been a believer in the Messiah, and influenced by his beautiful teaching, very likely the door of my heart would have been shut against even you, and others with you. The remembrance that I was cut off by you, and cursed, might, perhaps, have caused me to turn a deaf ear to the sad cry of even a mother, but were I guilty of such conduct, I should be unworthy to be called a Christian, a name you cannot understand, but one which, thank God, is known here.

"I have a magnificent example before me, when I think of the last words of the dying Jesus of Nazareth. When he gazed from the cross of shame and anguish upon the multitude who triumphed in his death, he prayed, 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.' When I think of him, and know that he is my Savior, how can I help loving him? This Jesus is the Savior of the world. To him every knee shall bow. The more I think of him the more I must love him. I cannot describe to you my joy through trusting and loving him."

My mother replied as follows:

"My dear boy,—A thousand thanks for your kind letter with the sermon by Rabbi Spurgeon. He must be a man full of earnestness, and I cannot help but think he is as earnest in his religion as your sainted father was in h

"My dear child, I never in my li thought the Christian religion co make men so good and true as you me they are.

"The sermon I have read and lent others who have read it with much interest. It almost bewilders me. Concerning the teaching and interpretation of the Passover as given in the sermon is it really true? Can it be true? It seems too good to be true. If it is true, how is it that the wise in Israel know it not? Why does not our God who can do wonders, reveal it unto us and somehow make us believe in it, so that we shall not doubt it?

"I should much like to enjoy the happiness and peace which you tell me faith in the Messiah gives. Pray for me, my dear child."

Such words, coming from my dear mother, filled me with gratitude and with hope that she might speedily be, not only as she seemed to me, near the kingdom, but in the kingdom.

Through my communications with my mother and sisters, much prejudice previously existing in the hearts of many of my Jewish friends and relations had been broken down. Nor is this all; my elder and only brother visited England with strong hopes of setting me right, and of bringing me back to the Jewish fold. But he soon became convinced of the truth of the gospel, and now, for Christ's sake, is ready to suffer the loss of all things, even to that of wife and children.

Beyond this, I have received visits from my two dear sisters, to whom I preached the gospel as well as I could. May God open their hearts to receive his truth!

Several old associates, friends, and distant relatives, having heard of my conduct to my mother, were so surprised at such behavior coming from a meshamad, that they came to see me, and expressed their desire to learn the difference between me as I was, and as I am now, and I now know of several among them who profess loyalty and love to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Now I must conclude, and as I meet with Christian brethren in various denominations, my heart triumphs in witnessing that Christ reigns among all who love him in sincerity, and I am encouraged in seeing so many Christians praying for the peace of Jerusalem, and rejoicing in what is being done for the conversion of the Jews. But still I cannot but mourn over many who, indeed, love the Lord Jesus Christ, and who wait for his coming, but who hardly ever gave a serious thought concerning the spiritual welfare of my poor brethren according to the flesh. I marvel why Gentiles whom God has made his children are not filled with a hallowed enthusiasm for Israel, and especially so on this day, when he is leading so very many of his nation to Christ—yes, when even the persecutions in Russia, which have driven so many Jews to England, have been used by God to the salvation of their souls and their everlasting reward.

Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved.

THE HYMNS THAT MOTHER SUNG.

Throughout the changing scenes of life,
  That shadowed vale of smiles and tears,
Where all is lost within the mist
  That hides the bygone years,
Some strains there are that linger still,
  And many hearts no longer young
Are thrilled with joy, again to hear
  The hymns that mother sung.

We used to gather at the hearth
  When darkness overcame the day,
And, dreamily, as children will,
  We'd watch the shadows play;
And sitting by the glowing fire,
  As to and fro the kettle swung,
We learned the songs we've always loved—
  The hymns that mother sung.

We seem to hear again her voice,
  So long remembered, clear and sweet,
As when, in days of long ago,
  We sat at mother's feet;
And gazing upward on the wall,
  When dearest father's picture hung,
We thought he smiled, for he, too, loved
  The hymns that mother sung.

On many snowy winter nights,
  When all without was cold and drear
We've clustered close around her chair
  In happiness and cheer.
No more for us the glowing fire,
  No more the cricket's chirping tongue,
And never more on earth we'll hear
  The hymns that mother sung.

To them we owe our happy homes,
  Praise be to God who reigns above,
For keeping ever bright and clear
  The lessons learned in love.
Outliving sorrow, beating hope,
  The dear old songs have always clung,
And never can the heart forget
  The hymns that mother sung.

UNIVERSAL SALVATION, AND THE LARGER HOPE, OR A SECOND PROBATION. No. 1.

There is doubtless a great deal of disquietude in men's minds,—far more than is acknowledged,—in reference to the future destiny of the untold millions of human beings who have passed away without so much as even hearing of Jesus Christ. Thousands of millions of heathen, down through the ages, have lived, have played their part on the stage of existence, and died; and yet they never heard that such a person as Jesus Christ ever appeared on the earth. Will these all perish? We cannot think so. True, it is said that there is no other name than the name of Jesus, by which men can be saved; but this can only apply to those who have heard his name. Those to whom Christ has been preached, if they will not receive him, must be lost. Such, on this point, is the uniform teaching of the New Testament. But the teaching is no less certain that whosoever, outside of the instruction and influence of Christianity serves God according to the light within him and around him, shall be saved. And he will be saved through Christ as the propitiation for sin, though never having heard the gospel tidings; just as those who die in infancy in Christian lands are saved through Christ, though too young to have any knowledge of the matter.

Now this subject is so important, and so much is involved in a right understanding of it, that no mere reasoning, however specious, must be allowed to set aside plain Scripture teaching.

If we would discuss, or endeavor to settle, any disputed point of doctrine, we must have a common platform on which to stand; we must have some standard of appeal. And until a better has been found, we claim the Bible, specially the New Testament, as that standard. We cannot allow human reason to be the standard, for reason may be perverted; reason in one man, according to the tendency or bias of his educational training, differs from reason in another.

Our appeal then shall be to the law and the testimony. Is universal salvation taught in the Sacred Scriptures? Do they hold out eternal life and happiness for all, irrespective of character? Or is the larger hope, or a second probation, which at present is being advocated more widely than formerly, taught there? We will endeavor to answer these questions in the order in which we have put them. First, then, in respect to universal salvation. What are we to understand by this? This doctrine, to give it in a few words, is, that all mankind are children of God, are part of his family, that every man and woman, however disobedient, are still his children, and that as he gave his Son to die for the whole world, so that death will be efficacious towards all, and all will be ultimately saved. We do not overstate this point. It is taught definitely and plainly that "all mankind will be exalted to a higher life," and that "this exaltation will not depend on whether the individual has lived well or badly in this life."

Now this doctrine we pronounce unscriptural; it was not known among the Apostles. And history gives no account of such teaching in the first century, nor in the second. It gives evidence of it, however, in the third century, Origen being the principal teacher. But what was not taught in the apostolic age; what was not known during the first two centuries of the Christian era, could not be a Christian doctrine. The early Christian Fathers were strangers to the dogma.

Universalism, as taught by Origen, "was strenuously opposed by Jerome and others, and was condemned formerly at a Synod in Constantinople in A. D. 544. "And it has been opposed generally by the wise and the good of almost every church as being without foundation in the Sacred Scriptures.

By whom, let us ask, will the song of the redeemed be sung in the kingdom of God? Will it be sung by all mankind, by all the nations, past, present, and future? As the answer to this question is important, let Scripture decide it. On the authority of the Word, then, we answer, No; but it will be sung by a people taken out of the nations. But a people gathered out of the nations are a select and distinct company from the nations. He who denies this is prepared, we think, to deny almost anything that stands in the way of his theory.

By whom will the white robes be worn in the kingdom? Will they be worn by every individual, whether good or bad? Nay, they will be worn only by the saints, the holy ones, "for the fine linen," Scripture declares, "is the righteous acts of the saints." This excludes the wicked, for having no righteous acts, they have no bright and pure linen in which to appear, and none can be admitted without the white garment of righteousness.

The advocates of Universalism make a great point of the fatherhood of God. We see this point insisted on more than any other. But it is misunderstood,—thoroughly misunderstood, and a false inference is drawn from it. It is taught that God is the Father of all men, that all men, without regard to character, are his children; and the inference drawn from this is, that however disobedient some of them may be, he will, as a Father, lovingly forgive them, and not allow one to perish. But this doctrine of the Fatherhood of God, in relation to the unrighteous and ungodly, is disproved by the following texts:

John i. 11, 12: "He came unto his own, and they that were his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he the right to become children of God, even to them that believe on his name." As the result of faith, believers have the right, not the privilege only, but the power and authority of becoming children of God, sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty by adoption. Receiving Jesus as the great Teacher, as the light of the world, and as the Christ, God gives them his Holy Spirit; they are born from above. They have a new moral and spiritual nature, and are conscious of a relation to God and of a union with God, never before realized. But it plainly follows from this that those who do not receive Christ, are deprived of this right and this privilege. They are not the children of God.

John viii. 4-44: "They said unto him, We were not born of fornication; we have one Father, even God. Jesus said unto them, If God were your Father, ye would love me: for I came forth and am come from God; for neither have I come of myself, but he sent me. Why do ye not understand my speech? Even because ye cannot hear my word. Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father it is your will to do." These Jews were the children of Abraham by natural descent, but they had this faith. They were the people of God in the sense of being descendants of Abraham according to the flesh, Abraham having been chosen as the head of the Jewish nation; but inasmuch as they departed from the faith of Abraham, they were not the people of God in the highest sense of the word. They were God's people in the sense that other nations were not; that is, God favored them in giving them the written law, and in establishing the theocracy among them; but lacking faith, rejecting the claims and the mission of Jesus, they were still in their sins, and were destitute of the moral likeness of God. Hence God was not their Father in the spiritual sense of the word. Had God been their Father in that sense, they would have had the Spirit of God, and they would have loved Jesus who was the Divine Son of God. In their disposition, in the spirit of their mind, in their feeling of hatred, they were imitators of the devil, and therefore, Christ speaks of the devil as their father. And the same thing is just as true today as it was in the days when Jesus was on the earth. They who have the temper of these Jews, and reject, whether in theory or in practice, the divine mission of Christ, are not the children of God, but are of their father the devil.

2 Cor. vi. 17, 18: "Wherefore come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch no unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be to you a Father, and ye shall be to me sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." Words like these, so very plain, need no comment. What a great dignity, what a wonderful honor is this, and how careful we should be as God's children to be obedient in all things to his will. But this high dignity is promised on certain conditions; hence those who do not fulfil the conditions cannot stand to God in the relation of children.

Gal. iv. 4-6: "But when the fulness of the time came, God sent forth his Son, born of a woman, born under the law, that he might redeem them which were under the law, that we might receive adoption of sons. And because ye are sons, God sent forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father." Now that we are redeemed from under the law, and are under the glorious dispensation of the gospel, if we heartily accept the redemption by faith in the Redeemer, we receive the adoption of sons, and have a title to the inheritance, where we shall dwell with him and share in all the privileges of his family.

Holy Scripture, then, teaches that believers in Jesus are the children of God in a sense in which others are not, that they are the children of God in a peculiar sense, having been spiritually begotten. Scripture teaches that God has a family, and that this family consists not of the natural seed of the first human pair of the Adamic race, but of the seed of the second Head of the race, the Lord from heaven, being all adopted sons and daughters. It is those who are the children of God in the Scriptural sense; they belong to the household of faith, and it is of these that God is the Father, for they have been begotten, born again of the Spirit of truth. This representation of God as the Father of all men, no matter how immortal or vile their character, which is now spreading among a certain class of writers and preachers, is a gross misrepresentation of the clear sense of Scripture teaching on this subject. The promise, therefore, that every child of Adam is the child of God, in the true, Scriptural sense, is a false premise, and the argument built upon it, that because every one is the child of God, God will never suffer one, however wicked, to perish, is equally false. It is a mere hypothesis, a man-made doctrine, which has against it the whole tenor of Scripture teaching.

SILAS HENN.

DECEMBER EVENING AND MORNING TALK.

There is a lesson yet to be learned. An easy lesson too, and yet somehow mysteriously difficult in practice. One is astonished to see how it is ignored. A lesson for sextons, ushers, deacons, stewards, or whatever else should be named those who care for churches, chapels, halls, assembly-rooms and auditoriums of every grade or sort in the civilized world. The lesson is that of ventilation. Even now, when the nineteenth century lacks but twelve years of joining its eighteen vanished predecessors, the care-takers of congregations, take but wretchedly poor care of them in a multitude of cases. Think of it! What a shame for human beings to be boxed up in a tight room, breathing over and over again their mutual respirations, with exhalations and emanations from bodies yet every whit mortal! Boxing up is for the dead, not the living. Who has a right to shut off the air of heaven from an assembled throng? Yet many a man does it. He may be a good keeper of fires. He may even make his cylinder or pyramid of iron, a conference-room (metaphorical) red-dragon, devouring oxygen in great draughts, and robbing the people that come to pray, or hear the gospel. Sextons, ushers and room-keepers, the world over! Hear my voice of protest. I charge you open a window or two, and let the people live. I do not ask you to kill them with deadly draughts of cold air, but give safe ventilation, aye, safe and reasonable ventilation. Some scientist has discovered an active poison in over-breathed air,—I mean, over and beyond carbonic acid, and the repulsive odor of air fetid with catarrhal expirations, or insensible perspirations. So I read the other day. Is it righteous or wicked to sit through meetings poisoned and contaminated with utterly bad air? Judge ye, who may and will and can—yes—judge ye! Whether yes or no. I do say it is grossly faulty, or wicked to refuse the people air.

Today I have seen and heard Gen. Armstrong of Hampton Institute. He is direct and pleasant, well-spoken and able. He has, I suppose executive ability, and love and zeal for his work. He has with him half a dozen young negros and Indians, who sang pleasantly and gave addresses. His mother, I hear, was reared in the little neighboring town of Russell, and with her husband went to labor as missionaries in the Sandwich Islands. The occasion was very interesting.

I presume it may be in order to append a column or so of newspaper readings and gleanings. Some things are read eagerly for the sake of their bearing on great questions and events of the near future.

The North German Gazette says the situation of France is full of peril and unbearable, or something to that effect. The national debt of France is over six thousand millions of dollars! What an abyss of indebtedness! Her annual deficit is over a hundred millions. So says the eminent financier M. Leroy Beaulieu. But France can bring three million fighting men into the field when she renews her war with Germany. And she has her army provided with a finished and sufficient weapon, the Lebel rifle.

The Berlin correspondent of the London Standard says that the repeating rifles of the German army must be discarded. The calibre is too large. The manufacture of a new rifle is to be carried forward with great energy at enormous expense. The Magazine rifle now to be thrown aside, was only perfected last spring, and the reserves are only just learning its use, when it must be abandoned. The existing rifles cannot be adapted as was the Magazine rifle. New frames and new barrels will have to be made.

The Countess Von Krockow writes that the cordiality which young Emperor William and his suit recently met with in Russia was quite conventional. They encountered proofs of the Russian inclination to France on every hand. There is mentioned, as a negligence that was probably prepense, the letting of portraits of Napoleon hang on the walls of the Emperor's apartments, side by side with those of the Czar.

"Self-indulgence, which is mainly associated with physical appetite and desire, is never more conspicuously seen than in one's creed, or beliefs, or habits of thought. Never was an age more eagerly self-indulgent, intellectually, than this. Men as a rule, believe what they desire to, not what the weight of argument demands." D. M. Pratt.

Said Mr. Carpentor of Lincoln's face during the dark days of the war. "In repose it was the saddest face I ever knew. There were days when I could scarcely look into it without crying." In N. York State, criminal executions will take place by electricity, after Jan. 1, in the case of crimes committed after that date. The Medico-Legal Society, suggests the following method which is likely to be adopted. "A leather rest holds the criminal's head, and bands across his forehead and face keep him from moving. A metal bar tipped with a ball for an electrode is fitted to the top his head. Another similar bar and ball, touch his bared back between the shoulders over the spinal cord. The first electrode is connected with the positive, and the second with the negative pole of the current. When the poles are joined, the current will pass downward through the head and go out through the pole at the back."

"In Europe the taxes are not only certain but crushing. Ground between the upper millstone of military conscripton, and the nether millstone of taxation, the estate of the people is pitiful, often tinged with dark despair. Berlin with its ever recurring drum-beats, its platoons of soldiers marching hither and thither, its officers thronging the beer gardens, its shop windows filled with pictures of generals and fields of carnage, its arsenal and army clothing establishments, its unceasing agitations in newspapers, in legislature assemblies, in public saloons and private houses, about the war crisis—with its emperor arrayed in military dress and making military speeches, seems to be little else than the headquarters of fighting men." Prof. Doolittle.

The Italians have just launched their great iron-clad, the "Re Umberto." Her displacement will be 13,298 tons or 1358 more than the largest English ships. The "Re" is 400 feet long, with 76 feet 0 inches beam, and will draw nearly 29 feet of water. Her barbettes have 19 inches of armor, she has an armored deck of 3½ inches, and her sides and bottom have three steel skins. Her speed is to be 18 knotts an hour. Her principal armament will be four 104 ton guns and twelve 4½ ton guns.

There is a furore of eagerness and interest about "Robert Elsmere" a book—a novel, written by Mrs. Humphry Ward of London, grand daughter of Dr. Arnold of Rugby, and niece of Matthew Arnold, who wrote books impugning some vital truths of Christianity. And as I understand it Mrs. Ward's book does the same. I have no desire to read it. Why should one read anything that assails the idea of our Lord's Divinity and the miracles he wrought? Yet the book is eagerly sought, and is discussed by ministers in their pulpits, and among the rest, Lyman Abbott of Plymouth Church, whose excellent sermon I have read. Hold fast to truth high and vital, that has been over and over thoroughly put to test, and give no room to the thinnest edge of a lever that would tear asunder the solid fabric of Christianity, if possible. A daughter of mine wrote me, "What do you say of Robert Elsmere?" I reply. "Touch it not. I believe it is poison to the mind—a Bohon Upas to faith, at least faith not thoroughly strong and established." Such a book may indeed lead to almost incalculable defection from the truth of the gospel—when it has fully done its work.

The Coming Age—Its Nature and Proximity. By J. P. Weethee.
This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $3.00. Send to this office for this work.

The Eastern Question
In its various phases,—Egyptian, British, Russian, Ottoman, Hebrew, American and Messianic, by J. P. Weethee. The title of this book gives a good idea of its contents, and the reputation of the author is a guarantee of its worth. The subject as a whole, and in its different divisions is handled in a masterly manner, and the reader is convinced at once that the author has spared no labor in the study of his topics. The work is thoroughly done and any one who carefully reads the 640 pages of this book will be well repaid. It is just the book for the time in which we live. Cloth binding, clear, pleasant type to read, and good paper. Price $3.50. Send to this office t orders will now be promptly filled, as we have received an invoice of the book, and will send direct from here. The two books, "Coming Age" and "Eastern Question" if ordered together, $5.00.

Dr. Smith's Bible Dictionary.
A Dictionary of the Bible comprising its Antiquities, Biography, Geography and Natural History, with Sixteen full-page Engravings, numerous smaller Illustrations, besides Maps of the Holy Land in the time of David, the time of Christ, and General Maps of the Countries mentioned in the Bible. It contains every name in the Bible concerning which anything can be said. It gives an account of each of the books of the Bible; explains the civil and religious institutions, the manners and customs of the Jews, as well as other nations alluded to in the Scriptures. This work by Dr. Wm. Smith, is just the "aid" to Bible study that you need, and every thorough student should place a copy on his table—you cannot read a chapter in your Bible without coming to some question on which you wish more information, and the best help you can get is Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary. Bound in cloth, 776 pages, price $1.50.

Fifty Years in the Church of Rome, by Chas. Chiniquy.
A handsome volume of 832 pages, printed in clear type, on fine tinted paper. It is bound in strong cloth, marbled edges, and gilt stamp on side and back. Contains two portraits (one representing him in priestly robes) of the author.

The book contains, among other startling revelations, thrilling chapters on, The Bible and the Priests of Rome; the Confession of Children; Festivities in a Parsonage; Protestant Children in Convents; the Trade in Masses; Rome and Education; the Miracles of Rome; Murders and Thefts in Quebec; Papineau and the Patriots; Perversion of Dr. Newman; Grand Dinner of the Priests; the Abomination of Auricular Confession; Some of the Thousand Acts of Folly and Idolatry which form the Life of a Monk; the Vow of Celibacy; the Impurities of the Theology of Rome.

We have secured a supply of this book, and can fill orders direct. If you wish to inform yourselves as to the inside working of Romanism, send us $2.25 and you will receive the book postpaid at once.

The Priest, Woman, and Confessional, by C. Chiniquy.
Painful and horrible are words too weak to express the things which he relates — things enough to rouse the stones to cry out against a system which brings forth such apples of Sodom and deadly poison to the Church, the family and society.

Cloth, 16mo, 296 pages, with Portrait and Biographical Notice of the Author; Price $1.00.

Words of Truth.
This neat, chaste and forcible little Quarterly will be sent to any address for five cents a year. No more effective means of evangelizing can be found. Orders may be sent to this office, or to John Donaldson, Secretary A. P. C. K., 466 Halsey Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Hope.
A Quarterly Magazine. Contains original essays, sermons, reviews and sketches, on subjects of Conditional Immortality and the Coming and Kingdom of Christ. Orders may be sent to this office, or to John Donaldson, Secretary A. P. C. K., 466 Halsey Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Instructive Reading for the Young.
The above is the title of a book of over 300 pages, made up of short stories and other instructive reading, both poetry and prose, for the young. It is illustrated with many fine engravings, is handsomely bound in cloth, and makes one of the most useful as well as pretty gifts for a young person that can be selected. Price $1.00

The Emphatic Diaglott. B. Wilson.
Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlineary word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christianity have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words thereof literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on large paper. Cloth $2.50 Library binding $4.50.

The Unspeakable Gift. J. H. Pettingell.
With an Introduction by Mr. Edward White, of London, England.

This is a book of 360 pages, neatly printed and bound in cloth. This work conclusively proves the doctrine of Life only in Christ, and we most heartily commend it. Price 10c.

The above price is for those who want this work for their own use. If you want to use one or more in mission work, or for a gift to a friend we will send them for only 30 cents each.

Cruden's Concordance—Unabridged.
This work is too well known to need commendation—every Bible student knows the value of Alexander Cruden's Concordance; bound in cloth, price $1.50

The Gospel of the Kingdom.
Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses, by Wiley Jones. A book of 278 pages, clear type, cloth binding; price, 50 cents single copy, or 10 copies for $4.00. While devoted mainly to a systematic statement and defence of that gospel which the Lord Jesus and his apostles preached, this book contains also a prophetico-historical chart of the empires, and a key or outline of the Apocalypse. Pages 295 and 296. It shows the nature of future rewards and punishments, and points out the prophetic "signs" among the nations — Russians, British, Jews, Turks, and Roman Kingdoms—which portend the speedy and personal coming of Christ to raise the dead, judge the world, destroy the wicked, and establish the glorious and eternal Kingdom of God on earth. For sale at this office.

The Gospel according to St. Matthew.
Translated from the Greek text of Constantine De Tischendorf, and other standard textual authorities, by Chas. Gardner, M. A. A book of 77 pages, handsomely bound in cloth Price 50 cts

The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. By L. C. Thomas.
Title page.—"The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. Also an Epitome of the Great Salvation; and an Appendix including various other subjects, in brief.

The perfect unchangeable moral law is considered and shown to be the basis and spirit of the old Sinaitic law, now dead in its entirety. The law of Moses and law of Christ are compared and contrasted, and the relation of both to the old and new covenants is treated at some length. The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the state of the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 330 pages, Cloth bound, Price $1.00.

AGENTS WANTED.

We wish to engage some brother or sister in every locality to act as Agent to solicit subscriptions and look after the interests of "The Restitution." We know there are thousands of brethren in full sympathy with the truths we advocate who do not take our paper, and many of them can easily be induced to become subscribers if the matter is brought to their notice, and they are personally solicited. If some one in each locality where The Restitution now goes will take hold of this work we can have ONE THOUSAND new names added to our list immediately.

Who will take up this work with a will, and make it go? Show your paper to a brother who does not take it, or to a friend in whom you are interested, and ask him to try it for a year. It will not take much exertion or time to ask your neighbor to take our paper—and there are few who cannot afford to help the cause we are all laboring in that much—but we do not ask you to do even this for nothing. We will pay you a liberal Cash Commission for your work. Send for terms to agents and samples.

NOW is the time for the friends of The Restitution to show their good will by adding to our list, and thus enable us to give you a better paper. We will enlarge it, and give it a new dress of clear, bright type, just as soon as we possibly can. Would you like to see the change? Do you want to see it bad enough to induce you to try and get at least ONE new subscriber? It depends entirely on how much YOU are willing to do. Do not think this is meant for some one else than you, dear reader, for it is written for you INDIVIDUALLY—no one else is meant. The success of the "dear old Restitution" depends as much on YOU as it does on Editor or Publisher.

Who will send the largest list of new names?

JESUS' THRONE AND KINGDOM.

Discourse by A. J. Eychaner of Marshalltown, Iowa, at the Blessed Hope Chapel, Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 19, 1888.

He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end, Luke i. 32, 33.

These are said to be the words of Gabriel, that angel, who stands in the presence of God. An important message is here communicated to the children of Israel, and to the world, and God selects as his messenger the Angel of his presence. The words of our text are introduced by an exalted salutation to Mary, the promise to her of a son and directing that his name be called Jesus. The word "Christ" is so often heard in connection with the name Jesus and we see them used so frequently together in the Scriptures that but few people recognize the distinct difference between them. The term Christ signifies anointed or one anointed, and when applied to Jesus is more properly "the Anointed," the Messiah of the Old Testament so long foretold by the prophets. It is an official title rather than a name, but "Jesus" is a name. His name shall be called Jesus.

Preaching is teaching; and if I had nothing to teach I would sit down immediately, but here is a great lesson for us all. You will pardon me if I speak from a text this evening, as the text read is an embodiment of the lesson of which I have spoken.

There is a series of propositions in the text to which your attention is invited for a few moments. These propositions are plain, tersely stated and simple. Thou "shalt call his name Jesus." Truly, Jesus was the name by which the disciples knew him. One is impressed with the frequency and familiarity with which the evangelists use that name.

"He shall be great." My friends, Jesus was the greatest person who has ever stood upon the earth. You all by common consent accord greatness to him. Denominational lines do not obliterate or eclipse his greatness, and whether you are Baptists, Methodists, Adventists, Congregationalists or Presbyterians, you will understand the proposition as referring to his character and deeds as manifested in his life and work. The moral impetus which His character has given to his words has sent them through eighteen hundred years, even down to you and to me. He spake as never man spake. If we view him as a person, a man, a God, or only as a character, in each and all he stands pre-eminently above all in greatness. Even Renan said of him, "Jesus will never be exceeded." He lives in his deeds. See how he opened the eyes of the blind, and restores the silent ear to sensibility. Leprousy vanishes at the potency of his touch and he even approaches the charnel house of death and speaks to those in the tomb and they spring to activity and life. Look at him in any light that you like, I care not. There is a greatness manifested which stands pre-eminently above and eclipses by its brightness all the deeds of the great of the ages past. Whether you believe that Jesus the Christ, was the son of Joseph and by devotion to principle and fealty to God perfected human life; whether you believe he had a prior existence and Divine with the Father, and came down and was made in the fashion of man; or whether his beginning was divine by circumstances of birth, from any and every standpoint there is a moral grandeur never excelled by the sons of men.

And what comes next in our text, "He shall be called the son of the Highest." He is the son of the Highest. Here again we agree and [illegible] proposition is accepted as literally [illegible] Go with me to the scene at the ri[illegible] Jordan, when John baptized Jesus. As they come up out of the water the Spirit of God descends upon him and there is a voice heard from heaven saying, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." He is the Son of the highest, you see, acknowledged to be such by the great Father himself. Thus early, before his work had begun there is a fulfilment of the prophecy in the text "he shall be called the Son of the Highest." Again, upon Mount Tabor, the Mount of transfiguration, while the glory and power of the coming and kingdom of Jesus as it will be, passed in swift transit before the bewildered gaze of Peter, James and John, the voice was heard again speaking from the bright cloud that enshrouded them, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him." The testimony is plain. The proof conclusive. He was called the Son of the Highest. I will add but a single text more upon this point. In answer to the question put by Jesus to the disciples, "But whom say ye that I am," Peter promptly answers, "Thou art the Christ the Son of of the living God."

Upon the foregoing propositions there is not a dissenting person in the house. So far we all agree; but I now come to a proposition where we shall differ. But why should we? It is just as plainly and positively stated as the preceding ones.

I will tell you the trouble my friends, and the reason why we differ. It is not because the points which follow are more difficult, or that they are less plain in their wording than the preceding ones, but the difficulty lies in the manner of investigation. People begin to explain and tell what the Bible means. Well, if God does not mean what he says, I want inspiration or be inspired so that I can tell what he does mean. This "explaining" unsettles every principle of language. It brings to my mind a circumstance which fell under my own observation. An infidel came to a minister with an objection founded upon a text of Scripture, which the minister disposed of as best he could. In relating the circumstance afterward the minister stated that he had "explained it all away;" and right here is where the trouble lies. The Bible is all explained away. If I were to preach to you a hundred years, you never would hear me say "the text means" so and so. The Bible tells us that he shall "be called Jesus." We see that fulfilled. "He shall be great." We agree that he was great. "He shall be called the Son of the Highest." Again we agree. Whether by pre-existence, first born by resurrection or Spirit conception, he is the Son of the Highest, he is so-called and so recognized by all believers in his existence. But now I come to the propositions where we will differ; but why should we differ? The text so far has come to pass, been fulfilled. The remaining propositions are all in the future; but men seeking their explanation as having been fulfilled and not seeing their literal accomplishment in the past as the other three propositions are, they begin to speculate something like this—"the next proposition must have been fulfilled too, because the preceding ones we know were fulfilled, it follows therefore that we do not understand the sense in which it was done. Then one theologian begins to explain it as he understands it; and about the time he gets it nicely "explained," another comes along and says, "You are entirely wrong, my friend, but I will tell you how to explain that." Then a third has to give his view of the matter, and so it goes. There is one thing which I have noticed about this matter of "explaining" the Scriptures and to which it would be well to call attention in this connection, and that is, the text reads just as it did before they began to explain! The force of a text is in the way it is reads, not in the way it is explained. Jesus said to the lawyer "How readest thou?" Not how explainest thou. If the secret was only known and the people acted upon it, viz: let the angel's words mean what they say, there would be no difficulty.

With this idea before us let us read the next proposition. How many of [illegible] There is [illegible] and straightforward as the parts already read. Let us be honest in our investigation. I make you my jurors. Decide it for yourselves. Decide it by what it says. It reads "And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David." A plain proposition is it not? A child can understand it, if it knows what the word "throne" means. We certainly understand the word throne in its common use. It is the place occupied by a king or queen and the symbol of sovereign power, the position of a king in ruling the people. When we hear any one speak of the throne of Queen Victoria we understand what that means. We understand it to refer to her power as ruler over the kingdom of Great Britain, and so of any other throne. Just what is meant in the common use of the word "throne" is meant when used in the Bible; just exactly. God will give unto Jesus David's throne.

In order to fully understand the scope and nature of this promise which the Angel made to Mary concerning Jesus we must find out what the throne of David was. Says the objector, I know where you are going, you are going back to the history of the old Israelites. You have guessed it exactly. It says the throne of David is to be given to Jesus. The Bible reveals but one David, and his throne is the subject of this proposition. I therefore invite your attention now directly to the record of David's life and the facts concerning David's throne.

I want to refer to a little history. You remember that the children of Israel came out of Egypt where they had been in bondage for four hundred years. After wandering in the wilderness for forty years for disobedience, they were brought into the land of Canaan under Joshua in fulfilment of a promise made to Abraham as recorded in Genesis, xv. After conquering the Canaanitish nations and dividing their land among the tribes they were organized into a kingdom, God governing them by means of judges for 450 years until the time of the prophet Samuel. About that time the children of Israel said that they wanted a King like the rest of the nations around them. How prone humanity is to err. We only see upon the surface. The Israelites wanted a king that they could see. God they could not see. They wanted something that their physical eyes could rest upon—a man who would lead their armies in person and conquer their enemies. They had refused to own God as their king but wanted a personal king, one of their own number and of their own choice. They came to Samuel with this request. Samuel was grieved over it and took the matter to the Lord. And the Lord told Samuel to hearken unto the people and show them the nature of a king and what he would expect of them. But the people still desired a king, so the Lord told Samuel to anoint them a king. So Samuel anointed Saul the son of Cis a man of the tribe of Benjamin and he was king over Israel for 40 years. But he did not follow the Lord, and in 1 Sam. xv. 35 we read that "The Lord repented that he had made Saul king over Israel." He wanted a better king than Saul. But notice the fact that Saul was king over Israel. After these things God told Samuel to go to Bethlehem and take a little oil with him and anoint a king instead of Saul. So he went to the house of Jesse, made a feast, and invited the guests. In his search for the one the Lord wanted he made the sons of Jesse pass before him in the order of their ages. The first was a large, splendidly proportioned man named Eliab, and Samuel as soon as he saw him thought surely this is the Lord's anointed. But the Lord said, "Look not on his countenance or on the height of his stature, because I have refused him; for the Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance but the Lord looketh on the heart." In like manner all the sons of Jesse present, passed before Samuel, but the Lord refused them all. Samuel was puzzled and asked Jesse if these were all the sons he had. Jesse told him there was one more up in the mountains [illegible] the sheep. [illegible] said to Sam. [illegible] for this is he. So Samuel [illegible] horn of oil and anointed David. This you will find in 1 Sam. xvi. David was anointed to take Saul's place, or in the words of the Apostle Paul "When he had removed him, he raised up unto them David to be their king." Thus we see that David was anointed by the Lord to be King over Israel. Well the time ran along. Saul the King of Israel had David in his household. But Saul grew worse and worse, departing farther and farther from the Lord until he was possessed of an evil spirit. David was a wonderful singer as well as player upon the harp; and while David played on his harp the evil spirit would depart from Saul. There is inspiration in music. This is why we love to sing so much. It even charms a savage. It is said of John Smith that when the Indians were about to kill him he sang them a song which so delighted them that they spared his life. But matters still grew worse until David fled from Saul and was a wanderer in the mountains and in the wilderness. David was of the tribe of Judah and the men of Judah clave unto David, and gradually there was a division made in Saul's kingdom; for we read in 2 Sam. ii., that David and his men went up to Hebron "and the men of Judah came and there they anointed David king over the house of Judah." Now note this fact, the men of Judah anointed David to be their king. Who was Judah? Judah was one of the tribes of Israel. Now if you will go back in the history of this people, to the time of the patriarch Jacob we will find that on the night that Jacob wrestled with the Angel at Peniel his name was changed to Israel. This man Jacob or Israel had twelve sons in his household, and when they were grown to manhood they became the heads of families; these families grew into tribes. Each tribe took as its tribal name the name of one of Israel's sons, and so in process of time they were known in the world as the twelve tribes of Israel or the House of Israel. One of these sons was named Judah and he of course was the head of the tribe or house of Judah. David being of that household, it is but natural that the tribe of Judah should cling to him; and here it is that we first read of the "house of Judah." The other eleven tribes or ten of them (leaving out Levi) are here known as the men of Israel, and this distinction is more clearly marked under the division which took place upon the death of Solomon when they became permanently divided into the "House of Israel" and the "House of Judah." I have been thus particular in pointing out these two houses, that I might show the extent of David's throne; for David became king of both these houses, or in other words he was king over all the tribes of Jacob, and the next proposition in our text declares that Jesus will reign over the house of Jacob forever, and that is exactly what David reigned over, as I shall now proceed to prove.

We have already shown that David was anointed by Samuel to be king over all Israel. We have also seen that the men of Judah anointed David to be king over the House of Judah in Hebron. The tribe of Judah then acted in harmony with God who through Samuel anointed David to be king over all Israel. Now let us see if the eleven tribes or the "Men of Israel" will acquiesce and receive David as their king. Turn to 2 Sam. ii., and there we read of a quarrel between Abner and Ishbosheth in which Abner declares his intention to turn the forces of Israel over to David and away from the house of Saul. With this intent he came to David at Hebron and entered into an agreement to that effect. Saul at this time was dead. After making this covenant with David Abner started off to see the children of Israel and bring about this consolidation of the kingdom, but unfortunately or fortunately the man was killed by the artful and revengeful Joab the leader of David's forces. However, in time the union was brought about, for the record reads, "Then came all the tribes of Israel to David unto Hebron, and spake, saying, Behold we are thy bone [illegible] in time past when [illegible] thou wast he [illegible] brought in Israel, [illegible] thou shalt [illegible] and thou shalt [illegible] Israel. So all the [illegible] to the king to Hebron; and king David made a league with them in Hebron before the Lord; and they anointed David king over Israel. David was thirty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years,—in Hebron he reigned over Judah seven years and six months, and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty and three years over all Israel and Judah." Thus we see that David is established in his throne and ruling over the consolidated kingdom of Judah and Israel.

Now I want to ask a question. Does any one who knows anything about the history of that event have any doubt that it was literal? Does any man question this event as having actually, literally taken place? And was not this kingdom now under the rule of David a real, literal, tangible, kingdom? If it was then David had a throne and a kingdom. But says one, you have not yet shown that David had a throne. Very well: for this purpose I call your attention to 1 Chron. xxix. 23. "Then Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as a king instead of David his father." Notice first that it is here stated that the throne of the Lord is occupied by Solomon as king, and secondly that it is instead of David. Thus showing that David during his life was king and occupied the same throne. In 2 Sam. vii. 16: we read, "And thine house and thy kingdom shall be established forever before thee; thy throne shall be established before thee." If you will carefully read this chapter I think you will readily glean the following facts: that David was Ruler over Israel; that God will plant Israel in a place where they will move no more; that David will die; that a person spoken of as his seed shall establish David's throne and kingdom forever; that this shall be done in the presence of David, hence refers to a time after David's resurrection. I want to make a statement right here concerning the Bible term "Israel." That term is never used either in the old or New Testaments as referring to any other people than the literal descendants of the twelve sons of Jacob.

Now in the light of the foregoing testimony let us read our text again, thou "shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, he shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

Before Jesus can receive the throne of David and reign over the house of Jacob that throne and kingdom must be re-established. The house of Jacob is now scattered among the nations of earth. How the heart sickens as we look over the history of that people. For their sins the nation and kingdom of Israel as a nation and kingdom have been destroyed. It was not an accident when that great king came from the North and carried into captivity into Assyria ten of the tribes, and which have never since returned. It was not an accident when many years after this that the Lord said to Zedekiah through the prophet "Remove the diadem, take off the crown ....I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more until he come whose right it is and I will give it him." It was in the purpose and providence of God which I trust we shall see as we proceed. If the throne and kingdom of David were real, literal, and his throne is to be given to Jesus will not his be literal? It must be the same throne. No other throne in the broad empire of God will answer the purpose or fulfill the promise made to Jesus but David's throne. Concerning its overthrow we have the following significant words in one of David's psalms. "Thou hast made his glory to cease and cast his throne down to the ground," but concerning his future glory God says, "My covenant will I not break nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. Once I have sworn by my holiness, if I lie unto David; his seed shall endure forever and his throne as the sun before me." This seed of David is Jesus the Christ, and the throne here spoken of is to be his according to the language of Gabriel. Jesus of Nazareth then has a title to David's throne and kingdom. In harmony with this idea is the prophecy of Isaiah, "For unto us a child is born....and the government shall be upon his shoulder....of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever." This language of the prophet agrees perfectly with that of the angel to Mary, and refers to the same throne. I am here tonight my friends to plead the right of Jesus our Lord to the throne of his father David. When the tragedy of the crucifixion was taking place Pilate wrote a title—an explanation of his death, and had it spiked up over his head "This is Jesus of Nazareth the king of the Jews." Pilate recognized fully the fact that Jesus was a king. He questioned him very minutely in relation to his kingdom, and when he learned that his kingdom was not of this world (Kosmos) but that it was future, that it in no way conflicted with the government of Cæsar, he washed his hands and declared his innocence of the blood of that just man. People tell us that Jesus had a mock trial. I say no, he had a fair trial, Pilate sought to release him, which is evidence that the issue of the trial was in his favor, but on account of a tumult made by the Jews he delivered him up to be crucified even after Pilate's wife had told him to have nothing to do with it. During the trial Jesus concealed nothing but boldly claimed his right to the throne of David. In answer to Pilate's question "Art thou a King then?" Jesus answered "To this end was I born;" and the Apostle Paul declares that he witnessed a good confession before Pontius Pilate. His claim was a just one, just, because he was heir to the throne of David. He came to the Jews as their king, but they received him not, but the time will come when they will receive him, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever and of his kingdom there shall be no end, or as the prophet expresses it, "Upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." I believe it. Do you my brothers and sisters? Do you believe that Jesus will take the throne of David, really, and that the government will rest upon his shoulders? We read that in his day shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace. His throne will be established in judgment and justice, and of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, until the knowledge and glory of his reign shall fill the whole earth. This is the gospel of the kingdom which Jesus preached. It is a real kingdom that Jesus is to have and it is to bring a blessing to this world of ours. This is why the sister said in the social meeting tonight that she had a hope she could stand upon.

That was a glad company of disciples that gathered around Jesus just after his resurrection. Hope again kindles in their hearts as he shows himself alive by many infallible proofs and for forty days discourses to them upon the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. The disciples expected Jesus to take the throne. They understood that he would restore the kingdom to Israel and asked the question "Lord wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" They received that idea from his teachings and the predictions of the prophets. They were in no doubt about the event but were not certain about the time: and his answer implies no doubt about the correctness of their faith but tells them that the Father has kept the time in his own power. See Acts i. 3. 6.

Peter was a practical man in his ideas. One day he came to Jesus and said we have left everything and followed you, now what are you going to give us? Jesus answered "I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." This cannot be fulfilled until the twelve tribes now scattered are gathered into their own land and the Apostles raised from the dead. I have read somewhere that one of them was hung upon a cross head downwards until he expired; another flayed alive; another stoned, and so one after another the most of them if not all, became martyrs for the truths of this gospel. They believed in the promise of the angel to Mary, that the Lord God would give unto him the throne of his father David and Jesus had promised to share it with them. They looked forward to the time of Restitution, the age of regeneration when Jesus would sit upon that throne. Jesus says "When the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." How expressive! Do we understand the force of these adverbs "when" and "then." When peculiar force is required or especial attention directed to a thought the Bible frequently deals in "doubles," or repeats for the sake of emphasis. So in this passage When the Son of man comes then he will take the throne. Could language be plainer? Do you believe it, or do you have any idea that he is sitting on that throne now? He is not on the throne of his father David now, but I will tell you where he is. The Bible has not left us in the dark. It tells us he ascended to heaven and is at the right hand of God. In the last book of the Bible we read "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne even as I overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." Here are two thrones one is "my throne" the other one is the "Father's throne." He is now upon his Father's throne in heaven, but when he comes in the glory of the Father then he will take his own throne or the throne of his father David. Then will begin a rule of righteousness and peace, with Jesus as King of kings and Lord of lords.

One thought more and I shall have done. Jesus in his promise to the seven churches of Asia in the fullness of his love has included even us Gentiles, to share his throne with him, for the promise is to him that overcomes. Now brethren let us make a practical application of this to our own hearts. Are we overcomers, and will we share with Jesus in his throne? Shall we be kings and priests and reign with Jesus on the earth? Remember the promise is to the overcomer. Remember

"He is a hero staunch and true,
Who fights an unseen foe;
Who puts at last beneath his feet,
All passions base and low:
He may not wear a conqueror's crown,
Nor fill a hero's grave;
But truth will write his name among
The bravest of the brave."

THE RESTITUTION

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

THE RESTITUTION.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, Post Office, County, and State plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co. Ind.

Remittances should be sent by Bank Draft Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk: money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

Articles from Bro. Work, Bro. Colegrove, Sr. Palmer, Sr. Carrie Williams, and shorter pieces from others next week. Some of those have been delayed a little. Bro. Wagoner's sermon delivered at the National Conference, also in the next paper.

We direct the attention of our readers to what our brethren G. P. Work and A. C. West have written for the paper this week. We are, for ourself, conscientiously placing by one-tenth of all income that comes into our hands, whether in larger or smaller amounts, and find it the greatest satisfaction to do this. We may have approximated doing this in years past, but we now want to feel sure of doing this much at least, and hope to do even more for our dear Redeemer's precious cause. The time and privilege of doing will soon end.

Dear Brethren:—Editorially we have not been saying much lately regarding the necessity of all doing what we can for our paper, The Restitution. We are now commencing another year, and with some of us it will most probably be our last year. Let us try to do something to aid the circulation of our paper. We can present some one of our friends with The Restitution for a year. Let us all remember how much the feelings of multitudes have changed toward the truths we are advocating within the last few years. Very many are not only willing, but even anxious, to investigate the doctrine we make prominent, as regards human destiny, and the future of our world. Send out the paper, and good will result.

A word of counsel. In raising money—so far as our brethren of the National Conference has this object in view—the design is to Evangelize—to send out the gospel to whatever localities the way may be opened for such work. Let it be definitely understood that it is not the object of any one, whether of more or less means, to raise money to give to every one, or indeed to any one, who may apply for it. Above all it is not the object of any one to grant loans of money. Let no one commit the indiscretion of making any solicitation of this kind. Those that have pledged one-tenth, or more of their income, have to labor for what they may use for themselves, as well as for the Lord's cause. As soon as the means shall have been gathered and forwarded to the Treasurer, we shall expect the money to be used in employing Evangelists of approved character—and such only—to labor in the fields needing such labor. We are already doing something in our home Conferences. It is our duty to help the poor and destitute, but it is hardly less our duty to know whom we are helping lest we do worse than throw away our money on those entirely unworthy. Let our hearts and hands ever be open but let us be on our guard. It is our duty, as Christians, to help any and all in distress; and most especially those of the household of faith, but this duty is for churches and individuals to perform for known cases at home, or at least cases commended by some responsible person to their benevolence. Our Conference object is an entirely distinct work, and all our brethren thus engaged have neither the time nor the means to do the work, or attend on the duties that belong to persons in their home associations.

As our readers have already been apprised, two persons were in attendance at the late National Conference in Philadelphia from California—Bro. B. Wilson and Bro. H. B. Rice. The latter went to Wilmington, Del., after the Conference closed, to preach to a band of brethren and sisters in the latter city. As our paper is largely occupied by our correspondents this week, we conclude to subjoin two letters from Bro. Rice—although written as private letters—instead of occupying a large space editorially. We give them both in the order received. We greatly prefer to yield a part of our usual editorial space for this purpose rather than deprive our readers the pleasure of their perusal. May the "word of the Lord have free course and be glorified" among the larger and older denominations of our time. On very many important truths of divine revelation regarding human destiny and the future of our earth there is great need of re-investigation on the part of the different sects. It becomes us to be very kind, patient and forbearing in all our intercourse with those who, as we believe, have misapprehended the teaching of the Bible on these all-important themes, while "earnestly contending for the faith once for all delivered to the saints." While not compromising the truth, it should be our endeavor to win men and women to embrace it by our Christian love and demeanor rather than to drive them away from hearing it presented by harsh denunciation. May God bless the labors of Bro. Rice while he may remain in the more eastern part of the United States, and make him a successful evangelist when he shall have returned to California.

Knoxville, Tenn., Dec. 28, '88.

Bro. Chaplin:

Please state in The Restitution that I am here in the city of Knoxville, where nearly all my early years were spent. I left Wilmington, Del., a week ago today and reluctantly, too, for I had become very much interested in the brethren and sisters whom I found there. They could not find a suitable place in which to hold public services, and for that reason concluded that it were better for me to come on to Knoxville during the holidays as I had made promise to my mother and eldest sister, who reside here, to spend Christmas with them if possible. I would have been pleased to have remained in Wilmington longer, if God had so ordered it. But I have been very busy preaching the glad tidings all the way from W. to this place, and have not been idle since I came. My people are all very devout Presbyterians and I am invited to preach next Sunday morning in the Second Presbyterian Church here where I was a member for many years. With much Christian love I am,

Your brother in Christ,
Hugh B. Rice.

Knoxville, Tenn., Jan. 1, '89.

Bro. Underwood:

I am having a very interesting time in this city of my youth where my mother and eldest sister (the only one living out of the three lovely sisters God gave me) reside, and where are many friends whom I have not seen for more than eighteen years! The most of these are in the Presbyterian Church here and regard me as one of the "sons of the church," as they express it. I became a member of the Second Presbyterian Church here when eleven years old, and was educated by them largely for the ministry. It was with extreme delight that I was permitted to sound out to them in the old church last Sunday the glad tidings of great joy to all people. I do not mean to boast, but I had great freedom of speech and held the unusually large audience for three-quarters of an hour without any flagging of interest. It was the truth that enabled me to interest them, and I trust God will use my words to awaken the minds of many who have been at ease and lead them to imitate the more noble Bereans. I am invited to lecture next Saturday evening in the Y. M. C. A. Hall on "the "Second Coming of Jesus the Messiah!" A grand opportunity. At every step of my way doors are opened for me to sound out the glad tidings of the kingdom.

On the cars, coming from Philadelphia and Wilmington I had many exceedingly interesting conversations, and distributed tracts and copies of The Restitution. Here I am preaching and teaching all the time from house to house, as I am urged by friends to visit them. I had yesterday an unusually interesting discussion with several educated ladies who board with my sister. One was a Methodist, another a Presbyterian, and a third one of the most devout and sincere Catholics! We began soon after dinner and the interest never failed till it was about time for supper! When I got through the young lady who is a Catholic said, "Well, Mr. Rice, if I could conscientiously accept your views I'd be the happiest woman in this world. I think you have made good headway with me seeing I'm a Catholic!"

I am as yet, of course, unable to return to my family in California, and I suppose God has a work for me to do here yet else he would send me the money to get home. I am, as cheerfully as possible, doing whatever is under my hand from day to day, biding my time, or rather the Lord's time. In much love, your brother in Christ,

Hugh B. Rice.

Needed Correction.—We have been too long in doing this, but absence to the General Conference, and a severe attack of cold on our return, has been the cause. One error is in the Report of the Annual Meeting of the "Association for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge." Bro. Samuel Wilson's subject was, "The Fountain of life," and the subject, "Wait, Watch, Work," was handled by O. C. Ramsay. The second error is that by the accidental dropping of a page in No. 9 of Bro. J. Cameron's Articles on the "Man of Sin" the following was left out. It should commence the article given Oct. 17, 1888.

The first series of extracts I shall give is from a book entitled, "The glories of Mary" translated from the Italian of St. Alphonsus de Liguori, and published in London for the Redemptorist Fathers, St. Mary's Clapham 1852. This work extends to 624 pages, and is prefaced with a strong recommendation by Cardinal Wiseman, a copy of which is as follows:

> "We hereby approve of this Translation of 'The Glories of Mary,' and cordially recommend it to the Faithful.
>
> Nicholas Card. Wiseman,
> Archbishop of Westminster.
> Given at Westminster on the Feast of Saint Alphonsus de' Liguori, A. D. 1852."

I consider that a very few extracts from this work will amply serve to establish the identity of the "Man of Sin" predicted by the apostle Paul in his second letter to the Thessalonians in so far at least as his statement in verse 9 is concerned, namely, "Whose coming is after the working of Satan (or an adversary) with all power and signs and lying wonders."

Hartford, Kansas.

While reading an article this morning in a Restitution, kindly loaned to us by Bro. S. B. Lawrence, I could not resist the temptation to write you a word from this point, 'tis the first paper of our belief I have seen for ten years, but my faith was strong and I had the Bible. We were poor and did not like to borrow papers when we had to go some times ten some times forty miles to get them.

We had got some of our neighbors to reading and last spring Bro. Foore came and preached a few sermons. My husband has been a Bible student for two years and this month at Bro. Foore's meeting was baptized at Indian Hill. Two others young men were baptised [illegible] Foore has [illegible] people a[illegible] church, [illegible] homes an[illegible] all of you[illegible] bourn, I wish [illegible] loving greeting and would be so glad to hear from any of you who have moved away what you are doing for the Master. I am living quietly reading carefully teaching my children diligently, dropping a truth now and then where I think there is soil for it to grow. I have tried to "sow beside all waters," and we have the promise that "in due time we shall reap if we faint not."

Some times I almost fainted for want of sympathy and help, for even my husband did not take any interest for so long. Now we can work together he is not pinned at home as close as I, and can go farther to meetings than I. We are very much interested in the study of Revelations. What do the brethren think of the 13 chapter 18 verse? I think without doubt it means the Pope for his Latin name on his crown gives the letters to stand for 6,000 three score and six. Blessed is he that reads and they that hear the word of this prophecy, and keep those things that are written therein, for the time is at hand, Rev. 1.

Please send me one of Sister William's Catechisms, I am very anxious to get one for two reasons, think I could get some of my neighbors to buy if I had one to show them and my little boy eight years old is trying to read the Bible and 'tis most too hard for him to understand.

Any of the Brethren can find us eleven miles west of Hartford, Lyon Co., Kansas, don't know when I will ever see another Restitution, not till money gets plentier than at present, but wishing you all prosperity I will close.

Mrs Delia Lawrence.

Thank Offering to the Lord.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

Where are your thank-offerings? The Lord has been good to us the past year; what have you to lay upon his altar at the beginning of this New Year? Come forward. Some poor invalid wants a good paper to read; send them The Restitution, and the Lord will bless you. S. R. Winch.

Thank-Offering Corner.

In compliance with a request we start this "Thank-Offering Corner." A number of poor people are yet to be supplied with our paper for 1889. These have been paid for in the past only partially, and as we are not willing to stop any of them, we hope our friends will come forward with "Thank-offerings" so that all may be supplied.

UNIVERSAL SALVATION, AND THE LARGER HOPE, OR A SECOND PROBATION. No. 4.

Again; during the last few years quite a number of writers have advocated what is called the larger hope, or a second probation. They do not go so far as the Universalists, who hold that every human being will be ultimately saved no matter how wicked and impenitent he may be when he dies; but they hold to the doctrine of repentance after death; and though admitting that some may ultimately perish, they contend that it will not be until a fair and favorable opportunity has been given them in the future state, if they had not such an opportunity in the present state. As not only millions of the heathen in foreign lands, but millions in our own land almost as ignorant as the heathen, have died without a chance of understanding or receiving the plan of salvation by Christ, it is concluded that these will have a chance in the life beyond the grave. It is believed that without a second and a more favorable probation, it would be unjust to fix their eternal destiny. To this we deem the following a satisfactory reply:

It would be unjust to condemn any for not accepting of a Savior of whom they had never heard, and had had no opportunity of hearing. It would be unjust to inflict punishment upon any in the future state for not walking by a light which they had never received. God, the judge of the earth, will do right, and never will act thus towards his creatures. He will not require the use of talents which he has never given. He will never condemn a man for the non improvement of what he never had, and which through his unfavorable circumstances he could not have. It seems, however, to be overlooked that God is under no obligation to place all his creatures on an equal footing. In the animal creation below us, that are not subjects of a moral nature, we see a wonderful disparity. And among the moral and intelligent beings above us,—the holy angels, there is, according to the Scriptures, a great difference in rank. And as the Creator of man, and as the Giver of human life, God has not seen fit to put us all on the same level. In our mental capacities [illegible]oundings. In our op[illegible] not according [illegible] hath not, there is no injustice in this. He is no respecter of persons, but will deal justly with all. Christ says, "To whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required." Luke xii. 48. There must be a result in the case of every man in proportion to what is conferred upon him. God requires no more. The apostle Peter says, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is acceptable to him." Acts x. 34, 35. He who is a godly man, who endeavors to know God's will, and then lives and obeys according to his knowledge, and does good works, or works of righteousness, no matter of what nation he may be, is acceptable to God. Such a one will be saved and will be happy, though in rank and excellency he may be far below a believer in Christ, who is exalted to heirship with Christ. The apostle Paul also says, "For there is no respect of persons with God. For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law; and as many as have sinned under law shall be judged by law," Rom. ii. 11, 12. As many as at the judgment of the great white throne are found to have sinned outside the pale of the Bible revelation,—without the revelation of God's will through Christ, shall not be tried or judged by the Bible standard, shall not be charged with rejecting a written divine revelation, but shall be tried and judged by the law they have, had and broken. This on the face of it is manifestly right and just. The revelation of God in nature and the revelation of God to the human mind, or the light which is given to man as a guide who is not in possession of the Scriptures, is the law by which he shall be judged. The heathen, then have sufficient light in their own minds, if they will follow it, to lead them to discern between good and evil. But this remember will not justify the Christian Church in withholding from them the superior light,—the light of divine revelation in the written word. Thank Heaven that this responsibility has been realized by the church during the last hundred years in a very large measure, and is being realized today more largely than ever; and the Bible, or portions of the Bible, are now translated into almost every known language and tongue. The foregoing arguments, then, based on plain Scripture teaching, show the fallacy of the conclusion at which some arrive, that justice requires all men to have a chance of accepting the great salvation, either here or hereafter, ere their everlasting destiny can be fixed.

The doctrine of the larger hope, or a second probation, is a supplement to the doctrine of Christ; it is something added to the teaching of the great Teacher, the hope it holds out to mankind is larger than the hope which Christ holds out. The teachers of the larger hope, therefore, step on in advance of Christ; they leave the great Teacher behind in their supposed revelations of truth. But men who will go beyond the Master, who will not stop where he stops, who will not accept his teaching as absolute, are not to be trusted. Neither the church nor the world should give heed to their speculations. Their theories may be plausible, and may appeal specially to the sympathetic side of our nature, but if they are not in agreement with the Word, we are not to receive them.

"The Engrafting Word."

"Of his own will begat he us by the word of truth that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures," James i. 18. The engrafting word is equal to the engrafting hand, or power by which a branch of one tree is placed into living union with another so as to live upon the substance of the other.

The same result is attained by the begetting word of truth. The begotten one is changed from the common stock of God's creatures into one of the first-fruits. As it is the word of truth which contains or is the medium of God's will it is of the utmost importance to all who are of the common stock of his creatures that they should know this word of truth, as apart from it no one can rise from the common to be one of the first fruits.

No one of the common stock can by any act of his own raise himself out of it. It is true in this case as it was before declared by Jesus "that which is begotten of the flesh is flesh, so in like-manner that which is begotten of the common stock is the common stock, Branches have not self engrafting power. This power is in the hands of the owner of the root and of the branch. Ev[illegible] every [illegible] God's [illegible] its stock comes down from him. The gift, or power comes down from him, let this be carefully noted.

Of his own will, this is the source or cause of any difference in the stock of his creatures. He first willed to have a common stock and then he created it. Afterwards he willed to raise from out of the common stock into a first fruit stock. Having willed he next chose the means for doing it. This means James calls the word of truth. This is the divine instrument or begetting power. It is the adaptation of a means to an end. As it is to raise the lower up to the higher, it must begin with the lower and lead them out of their condition and place them in the higher. The state of the lower is described as one of sin or disobedience. The first adaptation of the word of truth must reach the disobedient ones.

Disobedience stands related to its cause and also to the punishment due to it. These two parts must be met in the begetting word. If the cause only were met then it would simply stop the continuance of disobedience but fail to settle the past. The wage of sin is death. This death would still be due to him who had sinned and could not be settled for by simply stopping the practice of sin. The effect of disobedience is therefore fairly met in the begetting word by the voluntary death of the first born of the first fruits. Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures. The just one died for the unjust.

He was buried and raised up again the third day for our justification from all past sins. This is the central fact in God's begetting word of truth that he so loved the world which was perishing in disobedience that he gave his only begotten Son up to be put to death that whosoever in this perishing world believeth in him might not perish but might have eternal life. It is the knowledge of this love towards us that destroys the disposition to disobedience, for the love of Christ constraineth us because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead, that they who are made alive or quickened by it should not henceforth live unto themselves but unto him who loved them and gave himself for them. The begetting word of truth therefore embraces all the details of the history of Christ as all these have come out of the one moving cause in the mind of the father of lights who first willed to take a first fruit of his creatures out of a perishing creation.

The word or message of God to us is perfect in all its parts. It is formed round his will to save from death a world worthy of death, and that those saved should be a kind of first fruits. This gracious will, disposition or purpose of God took shape in his own mind when he determined to raise up a special son a first fruit. All the references to this purpose from the first time it was formed became a foundation for forming this company of first fruits. These promises at the time they were given were God's begetting word of truth to every one who believed them.

The fulfilment of these great and precious promises in the history of God's Son from his conception in Nazareth until his exaltation to God's right hand in the heavens forms the begetting word to us in these times.

The begotten one is alive. He has passed from death into life. He is taken out of the common perishing world, and is numbered among the living. He is one of the first fruits of God's creatures. He has believed the message of God's favor towards the race as it is found in the history of Christ Jesus. He has put on him the name of Christ by being baptized into him. He has become one of Abraham's seed and an heir according to the promise of God made to him.

This is the special word of God given to men in these times for salvation from death. In its smallest form it is the name of Christ, God's first-born, and in its widest compass it embraces all the promises of God, for all the promises of God are yea and amen, in Christ Jesus to the glory of God the father. Unto Jehovah therefore be all the glory through Christ Jesus unto the unending age. Amen.

BLESSED HOPE CHURCH.

The opening services of the Church of the Blessed Hope were held Sunday morning, the 11th inst., at their new church building on Woodland avenue, opposite Longwood avenue. It is a very neat and tasteful structure of modern design, and was well filled both morning and evening with a very attentive audience. The introductory remarks were made by Mr. Robert McLauchlan, who was one of the thirteen who formed the church, many years ago. He spoke as follows:

Brethren, Sisters and Friends: With devout and humble gratitude to our Heavenly Father, through whose kind providence we now occupy this building, which has been set apart for his service, we may well congratulate one another on the improvement made, as contrasted with our former occupation, while we earnestly and ardently hope and pray that our improved facilities for usefulness may be blessed of God for the spread of his truth, and for the inbringing and upbuilding of many, and for the glory of his holy name. We have no wish, on so joyous an occasion as the present, to cloud your minds by introducing sad and mournful recollections, but while to many of you, and especially to the young members, this day is bright and joyous, it has its sad and mournful side to some of us who cannot refrain from reminiscences of the early history of this church, and of the loved ones who participated with us, and encouraged us in our efforts to establish the one faith and hope of the gospel in this city, whom we sadly miss and mourn today; and in this connection we cannot but advert to the trying bereavement of our dear brother and sister, who have so long labored with us, and offer to them and their family our heart-felt sympathy in their deep affliction, although we know full well from sad experience, how utterly unavailing is human sympathy to assuage our grief; and we can but the more fervently pray "Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly." Raise thy sleeping saints, take away sin, roll back the curse, vanquish death, and triumph over every foe; make all things new. O! what a prospect! May we all strive like the apostle, "If by any means we may attain to the resurrection of the dead." The first resurrection the one out from among the dead ones.

It is indeed cause for congratulation to know that this house was not built to perpetuate spiritual bondage. Our mission is not to enslave, but to emancipate, and we shall not, for the sake of gaining numbers or popularity, form any alliance with human creeds begotten of ignorance and misconception, which for ages have dishonored God and fettered the human mind. Here we propose to hold aloft the light of God's prophetic word, the brightness of which can dispel the mists of error and delusion as no other [illegible] can. Scripture teaching can alone give more just conceptions of the Almighty and of his beneficent plans and purposes toward men and nations than what now prevail, without a knowledge of which we cannot render to him the loving and intelligent homage of sons and daughters who shall reflect his image, and this is the homage which he desires. In matters of religious faith we submit to no human authority, no matter with what pomp and solemnity it may be surrounded, but we reverently bow to the divine authority of God's word in which we have an impregnable bulwark which for ages has withstood the assaults of infidelity, and which never can be successfully assailed. This is our mission, and let me ask what more noble and grand mission can any man or any body of men be engaged in, and as we are this day dedicating this house to God's service, let us all individually dedicate ourselves anew to the accomplishment of this work, remembering what our Lord has said, "Herein is my father glorified that ye bear much fruit, so shall ye be my disciples." A little fruit will not do. "In this is my father glorified that ye bear much"—a great deal of fruit—"so shall ye be my disciples;" and feeling encouraged by the results of past efforts, let us redouble our exertions, and let us all co-operate, and work earnestly, and perseveringly to this end. Knowing that the time for any of us to labor is short, individually we know not how short, and realizing that no great undertaking has ever been accomplished by spasmodic efforts, may we apply ourselves to the work before us in the true spirit of Christian consecration, feeling assured of the correctness of the position we occupy, the soundness, the grandeur and stability of our faith and hope; and firmly believing that if the principles we have espoused and teach where known and appreciated, as they ought to be, instead of this plain building and moderate capacity we would require accommodation for ten thousand, and the flag of victory would wave triumphantly from our turrets. But as it is, we prefer to go with the twelve, rather than follow the crowd whose shout of hosannas, or cry of crucify, is swayed by the fluctuating sentiment of popular opinion. I have now the pleasure of introducing Mr. Joblin, the future evangelist of this church, and one of its pastors, who is already well known to many of you [illegible] his ability to present Scripture, truth in a clear and forcible manner, and I bespeak for his address your close and earnest attention.

Mr. Joblin then followed with an able discourse from the text "Our God, whom we serve," beautifully tracing the character of God as displayed in Nature, in providence, and redemption's plan, and manifested in ten thousand different ways as a God of love, whose tender mercies are over all his works; dwelling on the crowning manifestation of Jehovah's goodness to man in the gift of his Son, who died and lived again, and is alive for evermore.

In the evening the subject was further elaborated from the text "That blessed hope," dwelling on the promises of God in their richness and fullness; embracing the gift of eternal life now treasured up in Christ, but to be brought unto the saints, at the revelation of Jesus Christ, and enjoyed by them evermore in the kingdom. The discourse throughout was full of pathos and fervor, and was listened to by a most attentive and appreciative audience.—Cleveland Leader and Herald, Nov. 19.

PEACE.

Lesson Chapter St. John xiv.

"Peace, Quiet, repose. To place in confidence."

Christ's promise to his disciples, was, Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid, John 14: 27. And the peace of God which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Jesus Christ, Phil. 4: 7; Rom. 5: 1; Col. 3: 15; Eph. 2: 14.

What will bring peace?

Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace, Psalms 37: 37. And the work of righteousness shall be peace, Isa. 32: 17. To be spiritually minded is life and peace, Rom. 8: 6. The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace.

If we have that peace what are we promised?

That the God of peace will be with us, Rom. 15: 33; 16: 20; Phil. 4: 9; 1 Thess. 5: 23. Finally brethren farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of love and peace shall be with you, 2 Cor. 13: 11.

LIFE'S HEAVENLY SECRET.

Jesus, my Lord, thou art my life,
My rest in labor, strength in strife;
Thy love begets my love to thee;
Thy fulness that which filleth me.

Long, long I struggled ere I knew
My struggling vain, my life untrue.
I sought by effort of my own,
What is the gift of Christ alone.

I prayed and wrestled in my prayer,
I wrought, but self was ever there;
Joy never came, nor rest, nor peace,
Nor faith, nor hope, nor love's increase.

My effort vain, my weakness learned,
Weary, from self to Christ I turned.
Content to let his fulness be
An unbought fulness unto me.

Life's heavenly secret was revealed;—
In Christ all riches are concealed.
We try and fail; we ask, he gives,
And in his rest our spirit lives.

O peaceful rest! O life divine!
My effort cannot make thee mine,
I yield my sinful heart to thee,
And in thy love thou fillest me.

LEPERS AND LEPROSY IN THE EAST.

Not many years ago, one mild afternoon of November, we neared Ramleh, the resting-place between the Mediterranean and Jerusalem, and glad were we to descry the lofty white tower from whose height is seen the loveliest landscape in Palestine. We had left behind the orange-orchards of Jaffa, with golden fruitage guarded by cactus hedges, had crossed the Plain of Sharon, almost a solitude, capable yet of maintaining a population dense as when the herds of Solomon grazed the rich pastures stretching far away to the North. Picture-like villages clung to the hillsides. Eastward lay the purple mountains of Samaria. Westward a line of dying color marked the halcyon sea which sparkles under the sea-blue sky, close beside the excellency of Carmel. Even in mourning, lamentation, and woe we see the Land of Promise was once the glory of all lands, the joy of the whole earth.

Every step of our way had been trodden by the feet of renowned warriors, heroes, prophets, kings; has rung with the clash of steel, and glittered with the curved scimiter, in whose shadow Paradise is prefigured to the faithful. Ramleh (ancient Arimathea) was headquarters for the armies of crusaders,—not a great way from the spot where the Lion-hearted Richard caught sight of Mount Moriah, and, covering his face with his hands, refused to gaze on the city of crucifixion, desecrated as it was by the infidel, crying, "Ah, Lord God, I pray that I may never see the Holy City, if I may not rescue it from the hands of thine enemies!"

While we recalled these delightful memories,—phantoms of all time,—and debated what the Rose of Sharon really was, we heard hoarse cries like the screams of enraged wild beasts. At the same moment apparitions, weird, spectral, with wiry matted hair, sprang from the hedges, and held out hands from which joints had rotted off, lifted up arms without hands, showing stumps healed over. Their eyelids were thickened and drawn back, exposing sightless swollen balls. Each one was draped in a garment of faded blue cotton; and for an instant the feeling was that creatures, neither man nor woman, neither brute nor human, had burst out of their graves, and, with bodies decayed and decaying, besought rescue from the horrors of the foul prison-house. To restore the mangled shapes to health and comeliness would appear a greater miracle than to breathe again the breath of life into an uncorrupted body from which the spirit has fled.

They were, indeed, of those whom the ancient Jew numbered with the dead. "These four are counted as dead," says the Talmud: "the blind and the leper, the poor and the childless." The carriage stopped. "Lepers!" shouted our guide; they did not venture to come nearer. We flung the expected coin, and hastened through the gateway which those outcasts might never enter.

And thus, again, the next day, when we approached the Holy City. The Damascus Gate of Jerusalem is the chief entrance for pomp and honor, as the Joppa Gate is the main thoroughfare for trade and pilgrimage. Outside of it is the leper hospital; but the patients have a precinct within and against the wall, huddled in sheds of wretchedness and filth unspeakable. Some are eyeless, having merely sunken holes in empty sockets; many are without nose or ears; all are maimed and distorted, hideous past telling. They dare not touch the stranger, and rise ghost-like, as fabled ghouls, from the ground, and, without advancing, lift up their voices afar off, as the ten described by Luke, Luke xvii. 12, 13. They live in a community under a sheik, also a leper, and, having human fellowship, are amazingly cheerful over their tin platters of copper coin.

There for ages on ages, by the old Fish Gate, have they been permitted to dwell, to marry within the forbidden degrees, perpetuate their horrible selves, and from this center radiate the awful pestilence, in the time of the Apostles consider a direct "stroke of God," incurable by human means; a punishment for sins of special magnitude. A poor bundle of dirty rags lies on the paving-stones. That is a baby leper. If you dare, lift the coverlet. Oh, the horror of the spectacle! You see a loathsome mass of rot, livid, revolting. It should be buried out of sight; but it moves, and pipes a shrill cry. The sinless soul has not left its horrid tenement, and may have weary years of struggle before it can escape.

Often baby comes into the world fair as your first-born, young mother, without spot or blemish. The stricken father plays gently with the stick and straws which amuse the little one; and the mother kisses it with cancerous kisses, as they march, at morning, to the wayside beyond the walls, the better to catch the passing traveller, and ask an alms,—sometimes in heart-rending wails or meaningless gibberish, for their palates are gone. No skill can remove the taint from the fair child. It is not reached by medical knowledge, or tempered by foresight or sanitary measures, is without arrest or palliation,—a doom hopeless, inevitable as death. At maturity, if not earlier, the plague begins, and, strangely enough, is attended by slight pain. Discolored inflamed splotches appear on the skin; lumps rise under it, and change to festering sores and putrid ulcers. The face swells; the muscles of the mouth contract and lay bare the ghastly grinning teeth; the eyeballs are shapeless and broken "like bursted grapes,"—let me spare the reader the sickening detail. Microbes are eating through the tissues and into the very marrow of the sufferer,—or do they batten on each other?

Moses writes of the whiteness of leprosy, "white as snow," Exod. iv. 6; Num. xii. 10; 2 Kings v. 27. He refers to a grisly mould or mildew, shining like scales, which sometimes forms on the surface. The different varieties are described by the Hebrew with minute exactness, and it was dreaded as the most terrible calamity possible to man. The victim was dead to the law, to civil life, to the temple service. In caves of the wilderness, in dens, and among rocky tombs, he sought shelter, in a sort of death-in-life, rotting piecemeal; and, so long face to face with the destroyer, we can imagine he would welcome the pang which at last released him.

Physiologists assert that Syria is one of the most favorable regions for the perfect development of the physical and mental powers of the human race, and insist that under stringent regulations leprosy would disappear, as it has from Britain and France. Here it has been from earliest historic times. In the days of Elisha there were many lepers in Damascus, and under a hot sun, in reeking noisome huts, with poverty of blood and lowered system following exposure and insufficient food, the colony at the Jaffa Gate has small chance of "cleansing." They are, in the expressive words of Luke, full of leprosy, and, like Job, clothed with worms and clods of dust. "My breath is corrupt, my skin is broken and become loathsome."

We are told the ancient type no longer exists; it is now communicable only by close contact. Of old it was more violent, and who entertained a leper became himself polluted, and subject to the same laws, one of which was forty stripes if he entered a town. The walls of his house, clothing, utensils, the very stones, were pronounced accursed, and dangerous sources of contagion. This makes more noticeable the last Sabbath of Christ upon the earth. He, with his disciples, dined at the house of Simeon the leper; "an act sternly forbidden by the ceremonial law which he had come to fulfil and supersede." In the village of the poor, with the outcast, in the home of extremest suffering, the alabaster box of ointment, very precious, was broken, and our Savior was anointed for the sepulcher.

The disease was probably an outgrowth of many miseries in the hard bondage of Israel in Egypt. At the beginning of the exodus, Moses ordered all lepers without the camp, in laws merciless and sweeping, isolation without appeal or exception. In Egypt, the segregation reached even the animals; for it was believed swine were liable to leprosy, and for that cause forbidden as food. To the Christian descendants of the ancient Egyptians (Copts), pork is an abomination. They will not touch the unclean thing.

History records that the two hundred years of the Crusades scattered the seeds of leprosy throughout Europe. In the medieval years it swept, as an epidemic, across three continents. High-born delicate women, men in the bloom and flower of youth, the king on his throne, the starveling on the ash-heap, were alike smitten. Henry of Lancaster died of leprosy at Westminster in 1413; Robert the Bruce was leprous; and Baldwin IV, illustrious king of Jerusalem, died at the age of twenty-three, a leper.

No latitude is exempt from its influence, and all climates are friendly to the growth of the evil I am trying to describe. It spreads in temperate zones, in Iceland and the Polar Circle, in arid deserts of Africa and the wet districts of Batavia, in Asia Minor,—one of the fairest portions of the globe,—and penetrates frigid, ice-bound Russia. It follows the track of the Chinese cooly on sea-coasts, thrives thousands of feet above the level of the sea in healthful plateaus of old Mexico, and finds congenial home in the pure salt air of the islands of the South Seas. Doubtless superstition and fear have magnified its power in our times, and even after death the poor leper is still outlawed and avoided. To this day the Spanish peasant believes that a leprous corpse contaminates the earth, imparts its contagion, and defiles bodies buried around it in the churchyard.

In certain old cathedrals of France, at the back of the choir, half-way up in the crypt, the tourist may see an empty stone cell made for the leper in the sanctuary. There he might pray, lost amid shadows and reprobation, in the midst of multitudes, yet alone as the corpse under the coffin-lid. From the depths of his dreary cage the bloated savage face, pressed against the openings of the wall, must have appeared like some terrible mysterious animal, confined by strong bars to prevent outrage.

In his desolation, the prisoner, innocent of crime, might listen to the roll of organ music, the responsive singers, (so sweet, so sweet, I hear them yet!) might scent the incense and hearken to the intoning. But he was a bias among the adornings of the sacred [illegible] kinship [illegible] from [illegible] ity, yes, for no fault of his own, abhorred, a thing to shrink from and shudder at. Not for him the smile of woman, the hand of man, the prattle of children. In the soft gloom over the altar he could see (if sight were spared) the great still Christ, wounded in hands and feet and side. With what rapture the man broken in heart and body must have worshiped the unseen One that prophetic image represented; and how he must have rejoiced in the gracious message to the heavy laden, written above the bleeding forehead: "Come unto me, and I will give you rest!"—Susan E. Wallace.

CLEVELAND, O.

Dear Restitution:

The address on my paper reminds me that the time for which it is paid for has nearly expired. I therefore enclose two dollars for another year. And while I write I think of the time when the Christian's hope will be realized. But in the publications concerning the blessed hope there seems to be but little written and published when to expect more than at any other time the ushering in of that day of days. No one can reasonably expect that day to come while something else predicted in Holy Writ is to come first.

The primitive disciples of Jesus, even before he went away, were interested enough in his return to ask him, What shall be the sign of thy coming and end of the dispensation? It seems to me that he fully answered the question. Especially does it appear so in Math. xxiv. in connection with the fore part of chapter xxv., commonly called the parable of the ten virgins. In chapter xxiv. we recognize the fact that Jesus told of signs to be, and then, without changing the subject says, Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened, etc. We ask why the comparison that the kingdom of heaven should be like ten virgins of an ancient, oriental wedding party, if not intended to be another sign of his coming? Does not the parable show that something called the kingdom of heaven was to expect Christ and subsequently have to wait for him?

If we are mistaken in our view of this interesting subject, will some one give us something better, on the fulfilment of the answer to the question, What shall be the sign of thy coming and end of the age.

Discourse Before the Church of God, Brooklyn, N. Y., on "Present Duty and Privilege."

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

I feel it to be my duty to address you, as it is yours to hear me! And what I am about to say, I will endeavor to say in as direct a manner as possible; so that when I have delivered my message, you shall not have it to say, I beat around in such a way that you were unable to get the drift of my argument! I am to bring before you, as your representative to the General Conference held in Philadelphia, such matters as we, an individual church, are interested in. When sending me, you gave me the fullest liberty a man could ask, to act for you. I went, burdened conscientiously, to act as in the sight of God! I went, not to help formulate a system of concrete donothingism, but to help, by presence and by voice, in a work which my whole soul desired to see done. I went, feeling assured I should meet with a contrariety of sentiment, and in this I was not disappointed; but this I must say, that from first to last, I never saw a more cheerful and intelligent body of people, and so well read in the Holy Scriptures.

This gathering was unique, the like had never been before, and mark my words now never will be again, if this begun work is permitted to count for naught! Therefore, what I desire to do now is, to impress upon you the reasonableness and practicable character of this remarkable convention. I have no hesitancy whatever in calling it a "remarkable convention!" I believe, I do most heartily believe, that if we as a church, and as a body of churches, allow what has been done thus far, to go by default, the One "who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks," and who knoweth our works, will chastise us, and unless we do better, will remove us out of this glorious "midst." I am therefore more than ordinarily stirred to say to you, inasmuch as you are the professed followers of the Lamb, show your faith in him by your works; for what I have to say, has much to do with works!

A few words as to [illegible] were delegates from [illegible] South, West and the Middle [illegible] from thirteen different States and Canada. Twenty-five delegates—representing thirty-three regularly organized Churches of God in Christ Jesus! At the first there was a shyness, and seeming fear that some were disposed to put a yoke on the neck, in the form of a "creed." This was what most of us had come out from, and to our misfortune (as I think) had gone to the other extreme, even to the ignoring of any form of agreement, whereby we could, as we should, work together as a unit. I think I can make all proper allowances for this disjointed state of existence, when I consider the tone of the churches, out of which we came towards us. Our eyes had had the "eye salve" applied, and we saw, as we never saw before; we had been subscribing to a formulated statement of religious belief, which we had accepted without question, and which is today, alas! the evil of the sectarian bodies known as "orthodox." When the committee on church covenant came together, of which committee I had the honor to constitute one, we came with no other desire before us, than to grant to all the largest liberty of thought, and the right to express themselves under circumstances favoring the same. Our desire was to put into the hands of all our preachers an open Bible, believing none would prostitute its sacred character in the advocacy of the things not most generally believed amongst us. You will see by published report, the entire proceedings of the convention, so I shall forbear to address myself to a further statement on this question.

I want to say, that there was a uniform expression of desire, by all the delegates, to come into good working order, and it was for this purpose the convention had been called, by one, whose liberality, and sense of his stewardship, led him to pour out his money as water; manifestly desiring, not to glorify himself, but to put in motion a work which was near and dear to him, as I hope we shall prove by our works, is as near and dear to us.

The beautiful exhibition of brotherly and sisterly love that was exhibited throughout the entire session, was to me a convincing proof that the true spirit of missionary effort had brought us together, and that, that which lay before us, was duty and responsibility to God our Father; to the Lord Jesus Christ our blessed Redeemer, and to each other, and the world, that even now lieth in darkness and superstition; especially as concerning the great and important truths we do most devoutly believe. The feeling was general, that while our testimony on the side of Bible truth had won its way into many an avenue, and that former prejudices had been greatly broken down, yet the field was very large, and the harvest to be gathered was more in our hands than it ever had been. Men are now questioning the grounds of belief as they never did before, and we feel assured that if any people on the face of the earth are qualified to give a reason for their faith and hope, it is ourselves! egotistical as this may seem to some, yet I do say, and say it without mental or other reservation. But what does all this knowledge amount to, if it is hedged on every side lacking co-operation, the thing we are now after! Unless we carry out our principles, unless we go forth speaking and minding the same things, how can we ever hope to accomplish our hearts' desire, in seeing the truth prosper? Do not deceive yourselves, my dear brethren in the belief that all we have to do is to preach; the commission of our Lord was not only we should preach, but that we should so let the light shine that men should see our good works, and thus be led to glorify our Father in heaven. It is one thing to sing,

"Now I must fight if I would reign;
And suffer with my Lord!
I'll bear the toil, endure the pain,
Supported by thy word."

Or,

Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were a present far too small;
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my zeal, my life, my all!

Or,

He fills my heart with joy,
My lips attune for praise;
And to his glory I'll devote
The remnant of my days.

Or,

O had I Gabriel's tongue to sing
The honors of my Lord,
To tell the victories of my king,
And all his love record!

Or,

How blest the sacred tie, that binds
In sweet communion kindred minds!
How swift the heavenly course they run,
Whose hearts, whose faith, whose hopes are one.

I say, [illegible] brethren, it is no use our [illegible] if it ends there! [illegible] other things than [illegible] they must, [illegible] but to do, [illegible] faith in works [illegible] another matter altogether! I fully subscribe to a remark I heard many years ago, "We have done a good deal of talking, and some singing, but how many have we brought up out of vice and degradation?" Yes, much, and highly as I esteem the bold front we have made in defense of God's holy word, the stinging, ringing sense of unfaithfulness comes home to me. How is it with you?

My purpose now is, not to give a detailed account of all said and done at the Philadelphia Convention, but, to stir up your pure minds as to present duty, as well as privilege!

The history of this church is the history of too many like it; a disposition to settle down and say, What can we do? we are only a few, and the popular mind is engrossed with that which is popular and orthodox? I will try and answer this. I know, living as we do, in a city of close on to a million souls, and across the river another city with twice as many, that it seems almost out of the question that we should ever be able to accomplish that which we desire, viz., a revolution in religious belief, showing men and women a better hope than that so commonly entertained! We see giants, and hitherto we have been afraid! The question with us should be, do we know our weakness, and are desirous of becoming strong? If so, then I present to you the action of our late Conference, in which measures were brought before us whereby many can help one where one may not be able to help the many.

Several things presented themselves while in Conference, and the reasonableness was not questioned, but as to practicability some had their serious doubts. And now, in order to answer, as best I can, the question, "What can we do?" I say, Up and be doing! No use looking to the rear; our work is before us, the promises of God are, "To him that overcometh." Will we prove ourselves overcomers? It is for us to create material whereby, as one united brotherhood we may go forth conquering and to conquer! Concerted action has seldom failed when rightly directed; I care not, whether in a good or bad cause, the result has always been the same.

By this time you cannot fail to see the drift of my argument; and the only way to success is to start right! The Conference is, and is a centre from which we may well work; there are men elected to office who are good practical men, business men; and in whom we may trust under God, the direction of such matters as shall come before them; they are fallible men, yet I believe have the prosperity of the truth as it is revealed in the Oracles of God at heart, they call for our united support; I ask you now, Will you give it to them that they may put in progress the work begun, and as I believe, well begun?

Your permission granted me to act for you, and your guarantee to stand by me was all you could do! I felt under no restraint whatever; but knowing that amongst us not a millionaire exists, but that we all draw our resources from our daily efforts, I felt disinclined to say while there, what I thought we would do, prefering rather to see you, and have you see the documentary evidences of the work done and now proposed to be done.

For years I have had the feeling that while we have amongst us men, who are not only well read in the Scriptures, but who are good, self-denying men, at the same time, a large part of our preaching brethren are certainly lacking in the complete mastery of the English language and its grammar, as also wanting in that "Grace of a good delivery." At the conference (and after leaving there) of the "A. P. C. K." I named this observed want to two or more persons, and judge of my surprise when I found myself selected with others to constitute a committee called "The Ministerial and Educational." While at our work a letter from Bro. Geo. F. Work was given us, in which he proposed to give five hundred dollars, providing a like amount of five hundred dollars is subscribed by the church at large, to establish a school to meet this want, and further, to instruct in the original languages of the Holy Scriptures if it shall be possible. There are other propositions from this brother which will come before you in another form than this. You will do well to seriously consider the several questions before us as a church at large, and in view of our individual as well as our church relations, prepare to act now, and at once! I will further answer the question, "What can we do?" by saying, that inasmuch as we have heretofore done so little—Go back, and gather up, and dedicate to the service of the Lord that which you have held back! And this that you have "held back," has been in all probability on account of a want of knowing how you could best dispose of what the Lord has blessed you with. Brethren, do not forget or ignore, in smallest degree the fact that you have been greatly blessed! Make no comparisons with your condition and that of others; put the duty and responsibility where it properly belongs; and let this be the only standard of determination, as to your present duty as well as privilege.

The committee on "Ways and Means," of which committee I was one, thought the rule laid down in the discourse of Bro. Work everyway commendable, that of devoting one-tenth of the value of our possessions, as well as one-tenth of our income, but knowing how little this matter had come before our brethren at large, we presented this in a modified form, the which you shall all be fully made aware of in the Report as a whole.

Questions were grappled with at the Convention, the which had never before come before us as a people; these were well discussed by the assembled convention in open session—nothing was done in a corner, and I am proud to put this on record, believing you will endorse our actions. With all my privileges from this church, I have not committed you to anything other than an open declaration that this church not only expects to do its duty, but will most assuredly do so.

I heartily commend to you the action of the committee on "Ways and Means," at the same time would not ask you only to do as they suggest, but as much more as it is possible. Resolve that this is the very least you will do, and as God shall prosper you, you will act as his stewards, and not live simply and solely to please yourselves, "The field is the world." We need good and tried men to carry the word of this salvation. We need appropriate places where it can be statedly presented. We need funds to carry on this work, and we must get these from the cheerful giver, as we don't propose to raise any of our funds by fancy fairs, or grab bags, or Punch and Judy shows. We don't propose to establish a paid pastorate, this may be done by individual churches if they please, but our work as a body is, to send out evangelists by ones or twos, and have a good reserve fund in the hands of the Executive Board to keep them constantly at work at different posts as the way may open or present itself.

We propose to give good attention to Sunday School and other missionary work, as it shall come before us—having all work—the sisters as well as the brothers. We propose to seize all well-ordered means as they have proved themselves, come from whatever source they may, providing they in no wise conflict with statements aforesaid. In a word, we are determined to show our faith by our works, we ask you, one and all, to put your shoulders to the wheel, and by the grace of God, prove to your brethren and the world, that ours is not an empty sound of hollow words only, but of deeds that shall tell on ages!

I want everyone of you, who feel your responsibilities, to go from this place, after hearing what I have said, determined not to allow what I have said, or what the convention has done, to fall on listless ears, but as wise men and women, fearing the Lord, whose you are! to sit down, and between your keenest conscience and the sight of him who knoweth our hearts, and from whom are all things, resolve to act as duty and privilege shall prompt you. We exact nothing; we propose in our united judgment, certain courses of action; if these are practicable and reasonable, there should be no reason why we should not all act. And now to him who hath saved us, who hath given himself for us, let us show how greatly we prize our relation and glorify him in all we are or have. Amen.

Dear Restitution:

I enclose a money order of two dollars to pay for THE RESTITUTION for the year 1889, which please place to my credit. There are quite a number in this region who believe the second advent near, but are of the Crist's faith. I meet with them some, but they do not talk much about the restitution nor do they care to hear much said about it as revealed to my understanding in the Bible and as published in THE RESTITUTION. I have taken the paper for thirty years or more under its various names, and still enjoy reading it very much, and will say that my faith and sympathy are with you all in looking for the same blessed hope and glorious appearing of him who will be King of kings and Lord of lords, and hope to be made a king and a priest unto God and reign on the earth. I embraced this hope in 1842, forty-six years ago; am almost seventy years old and still this hope cheers me and I find the yoke of Christ easy and his burden light. I hope to overcome and share with all the faithful all the glory promised in the word. Your brother in Christ,

R. H. NEAL.

DIED.

ATWOOD.—At Lakeport, Lake Co., Cal., Nov. 25, 1888, Riel Atwood, aged 74 years and 9 months.

Brother Atwood was an old Californian, having crossed the plains in '49. He never united with any church till in February, 1883, hearing the word explained by Elder Richard Corbaley he was by request baptized by him and joined the "Church of God" at Kelsey Creek, Lake Co., Cal. Since that time he lived a faithful and consistent Christian life. The only reading he cared for was the Bible and THE RESTITUTION. The coming of our Savior and the establishing of his kingdom on this earth was his favorite theme. He peacefully fell asleep with the blessed hope that he would soon be called to awake by the Master.

NO PAPA FOR US THREE.

A man of intemperate habits had been absent from home for a long time, and did not often write; and when no letter came his little three-year-old girl would say, "No papa for us three;" which incident inspired these verses.

'Tis four months and a day, dear,
  Since we kissed you a fond good by;
One letter only came to us
  To keep the tear-fonts dry.

Wee Maggie lists the postman's call,
  When letters come for me,
And Willie asks, "One from papa?"
I shake my head; my baby says,
  "No papa for us three."

The days drag, O, so slowly by,
  The nights are sad and drear;
You do not write, say why, O why!
  Where are you staying, dear?

The chilly autumn winds are [illegible]
  Our children's feet near bare;
The coal-bin empty long since,
  In our board scanty fare.

Oh, James, where can you be to-night?
  What are your thoughts for me?
Our baby's words go through my heart;
  "No papa for us three."

Last night I thought her lost in sleep,
  Wrapped in her tiny bed,
I heard her softly ask, "Dear God,
  Can papa dear be dead?"

I ask the question o'er and o'er,
  No answer comes to me;
The postman's gone, and baby says,
  "No papa for us three."

Oh, husband, wandering far
  To-night, in paths of sin if be,
List you the cry from breaking hearts,
  "No papa for us three."

Please send a letter soon to cheer,
  The loved who wait for thee,
And change the sad tone to the glad,
  "A papa for us three."

DECEMBER EVENING TALK.

I give my right hand of fellowship to Bro. Samuel Wilson in the matter, and on the occasion, of his candid, careful, logical, Scriptural and elevated address, published in THE RESTITUTION, and this day read aloud to my wife, with the energy, the enthusiasm, and the gestural punctuation of a God-praising and emphatic endorsement. If it were in any respect to be subjected to criticism, it would I think bear it easily and perfectly. May we stand calmly on the noble height which this address so excellently and reasonably points out. There is nothing better under heaven than that every pious soul should be as susceptible of of influence and attraction by the word of the living God, in its most elevated and Christ-like interpretation, as he would most heartily desire to be, by that supernatural power that shall draw the elect of his love unto mid-air, in the day-star stage of his coming. In order to this, let us seek to be free from every entanglement. A holy liberty is something too precious to be sacrificed or underrated. A mind untrammeled, and action unrestrained by the imperative formula of articles, of which ecclesiasticism makes the transgression a capital offence, and from which it would make deliverance or release an impossibility,—how eagerly should it be sought, and how earnestly maintained!

I have been reading a little in Gen. Wallace's famous book, "Ben Hur," but thus far I fail to be greatly interested. His representation of the Virgin Mary's age, as barely fifteen at the birth of our Lord, I must say I openly discredit. I need not now give the reasons for accounting this statement as glaringly improbable.

In considering the intensely interesting subject of an earlier translation of saints, one might query, Why is the Philadelphian church accorded the peculiar honor of an exemption from an extraordinary trial? In pondering the question, one might say they have been put to the proof. They have renounced worldly usages and advantages. They hold steadily to truth which is non-fellowshipped, let us say, by orthodoxy. They live in an age when there are no apostles, and no miracles, an age far remote from the first advent. They live in an age of wonderfully diverse teachings and beliefs—an age intensely worldly, active and self-magnifying. It is an age of almost idolatrous insistence on the natural immortality of an inner self in man. It is a time when "proud science" with its mastery of some secrets in nature has a marked trend toward denial of an intelligence having individuality and infinite wisdom. It is a time when it is pre-eminently laid on believers to live and walk by faith alone, amid a legion of popular illusions, and amid manifold activities, with much to commend them, yet ignore the great impending world change, foretold by prophets of old, and Messiah himself. That change is underlying and vital. It involves issues of the grandest magnitude. I take it then, there is a time, even now, when men's souls are tried. Is it an idle thing to live and be true? To be true to each indication of Providence, and dictate of Spirit influence, true amid adversities, and true when every champion of individual opinion is ready to draw falchion for the quick demolition of divergent beliefs. It is something then to live in such a time as this, something to be right, patient, non-combative, holy, and true to the God who of all things is supremely good, and supremely loves the creatures of his power. For those who can live and be blameless, amid influences so many, so strange, so earthly, so powerful, there is promised a special preservation from a world-wide trial, and it is believed to be through the noiseless advance of the Chief and Prince, to commence his great work of rescue from the darkness, and the rulers of the darkness of this world.

There are doubtless before us events of great magnitude, that lose nothing of their impressiveness by previous delays. We have seen much of the prophetic day of "preparation"—a time of no small consequence, but entirely necessary indeed. How rapidly railways and telegraphs have multiplied! How rapidly, and in what overwhelming masses, may armies now be moved to the field of conflict! What wonderful and ingeniously destructive weapons have been prepared! Who can tell what 1889 hath of tragic tendency and force in its womb of resources, its treasury of omen!

"Knowledge leaves no room for chances." Wallace. "If the past has been an enemy, bury it, and build the future." David D. Porter.

Five eclipses in 1889. "There will be an eclipse of the sun, Jan. 1, total in parts of Alaska, California, Nevada, Idaho and Manitoba. Such an eclipse will not happen again for 300 years. There will be an annular eclipse of the sun June 28, and a total eclipse Dec. 22. There will be also two partial eclipses of the moon in January and July, the first visible in the United States. In the days when people put faith in astrology, and thousands of people do, to this day, the year 1889 would be awaited with dread."—Boston Globe. C. C.

Dear Restitution:

By the urgent request of a few lovers of practical Christianity I pen a few lines for publication. First let me say I understand practical Christianity to be a step in advance of a believing Christian. Practice should very soon follow our belief or faith. Faith and works are strongly urged on the would-be servant of God or follower of Christ. See James ii. 14 and onward. If we have the spirit of God and Christ we will have a sacrificing spirit. God made a great sacrifice when he gave His son to die for the world. Jesus made a great sacrifice when he gave his life for us. Should we not be willing to make a sacrifice of something dear to us in return for such love? Or shall we be content while we dole out a few pence occasionally to one of his able ministers who should be kept in the field, rather than laid by for lack of means, while we are entrusted with this world's goods for the which we are held accountable. Better by far will it be for us to be "co-workers together with him," for, so to speak, he has the world on his hands to care for. Even the hairs of our heads are numbered. By and by he will say to his messengers, "Gather my saints together unto me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice, and the heavens shall declare his righteousness for God is judge himself." Psa. l, 56. "As it is written he hath dispersed abroad, he hath given to the poor, his righteousness remaineth forever." 2 Cor. ix. 9. Or rather commence at verse 7, "Every man as he purposeth in his heart so let him give. Not grudgingly or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver. He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly, and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully."

Then again, chap. viii. 13, For I mean not that other men be eased and you burdened but by equality, that there may be equality. He that had gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack. But there should be first a willing mind, then it is accepted according to that a man hath and not according to that he hath not.

Brethren you well know I have not exhausted the great flood of Scripture testimony treating on this subject, but there are a few thoughts connected with the "equality" above quoted. Now to give equally so one shall not be eased and another burdened will require a certain given per cent. for each member of the body to estimate his or her contribution. Now I do not know as we find just the per cent. given in the New Testament. Early Christians were taught to "lay by on the first day of the week as God had prospered them," but just the per cent. is not here stated, but they well know our Father used to be well-pleased when his faithful ones gave one-tenth of their prosperity into his treasury to be used in his service. I think such a course will please him now, for he declared, "I change not."

Three years ago last October wife and myself came to the conclusion we would try the tithing system. We use system in almost everything else and why not in the Lord's service? We were in debt a little less than $100 and nothing to turn off to pay taxes or indebtedness. Dry weather had shortened our hay and grain crops, and yet our stock must be fed. I had already sold all we could well spare, and at the time we did our first tithing we had $37 00 on hand. Well we laid by the $3 70 and trusted God would make "all grace abound toward us that we should have all sufficiency in all things—may abound to every good work," 2 Cor. ix. 8. We had formerly done as most church members do: give if we had the means. But it often happened the means or money was scarce when an opportunity was shown us to invest in the Lord's cause. We were not sure we were doing all we ought to do in that direction, and yet if we measured our liberality by others we comp[illegible] though more has [illegible] Such people [illegible] since church, [illegible] eral [illegible] homes an[illegible] another [illegible] of you[illegible]

So we laid by our tithe; first used an envelope, but soon found we needed a pocket-book, and although there has not been over $10 00 at any time in the Lord's treasury, as we term it, yet I think it has not been empty but once, and then, perhaps, a little injudiciously, acting on the spur of the moment. But we have done our full equal share in church matters and come to help needy brethren beside. Do you ask what about the other nine dollars? I answer, by our Father's blessing, it has gone farther in the battle for life than the ten dollars would before, scheme as close as I could. At least we paid our taxes and indebtedness and kept our stock through, dark as it looked in the fall. I wish I had time and space to tell you how our Father overruled and placed me in a condition to earn the needed means to extricate me from embarrassment. We trust him still, and the more we form his acquaintance the better we love him.

If it were my privilege I should like to tell you how we have used the tithe money, but the injunction is, "Let not," etc. Matt. vi. 3. But I will say this, if the brotherhood would adopt the tithing system and use as much wisdom and good judgment in investing or using the tithe as they do in other business matters, the truth would advance ten-fold and many needy ones be relieved, and yourselves wonderfully blessed.

Now my brother, bend your ear quite near while I whisper a secret and yet I would emphasize it. It is this: If you would be heartily interested in any thing, put money in it. Put in enough. If one-tenth cannot do it put in more. "Where thy treasure is," etc." One man said, "the half of my goods I give to the poor." A poor widow cast into the treasury all her living. "But whatsoever you do, do it heartily as unto the Lord, for ye serve the Lord Christ. Put in enough to secure your best attention to the business. But the use of money alone will save no one, neither will any other sacrifice avail except it be "a broken and contrite heart;" with such God is pleased. Even to yield yourselves as a martyr would not avail without charity. 1 Cor. xiii. Charity is kind, seeketh not her own, etc. There must first be genuine heart work ("willing mind") else whatever we do will be in vain.

There has been a good start made in the right direction at our National Conference at Philadelphia worthy of our co-operation. Now is our time to act. Now dear ones think of this. Commence with the year and lay by one-tenth of your cash receipts for the Lord to be used by you in his service as means and opportunities may afford you the pleasure of lending to the Lord. Dig deep now, get at your bottom thoughts, your prompters, examine them, if you desire God's glory. His blessing be upon you. I leave the subject for the present, hoping some abler pen will take it up.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

The Coming Age—Its Nature and Proximity. By J. P. Weethee.

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

It contains over 300 large pages bound in cloth, Price $1.50. Send to this office for this work.

The Eastern Question

In its various phases,—Egyptian, British, Russian, Ottoman, Hebrew, American and Messianic, by J. P. Weethee. The title of this book gives a good idea of its contents, and the reputation of the author is a guarantee of its worth. The subject as a whole, and in its different divisions is handled in a masterly manner, and the reader is convinced at once that the author has spared no labor in the study of his topics. The work is thoroughly done, and any one who carefully reads the 450 pages of this book will be well repaid. It is just the book for the time in which we live. Cloth binding, clear, pleasant type to read, [illegible] of paper. Price $1.50. Send to this office; orders will now be promptly filled, as we have received an invoice of the book, and will send direct from here. The two books, "Coming Age" and "Eastern Question" if ordered together, $2.50.

Dr. Smith's Bible Dictionary.

A Dictionary of the Bible comprising its Antiquities, Biography, Geography and Natural History, with sixteen full-page Engravings, numerous smaller Illustrations, besides Maps of the Holy Land in the time of David, the time of Christ, and General Maps of the Countries mentioned in the Bible. It contains every name in the Bible concerning which anything can be said. It gives an account of each of the books of the Bible; explains the civil and religious institutions, the manners and customs of the Jews, as well as other nations alluded to in the Scriptures. This work by Dr. Wm. Smith, is just the "aid" to Bible study that you need, and every thorough student should place a copy on his table—you cannot read a chapter in your Bible without coming to some question on which you wish more information, and the best help you can get is Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary. Bound in cloth, 776 pages, price $1.50.

Fifty Years in the Church of Rome, by Chas. Chiniquy.

A handsome volume of 832 pages, printed in clear type, on fine tinted paper. It is bound in strong cloth, marbled edges, and gilt stamp on side and back. Contains two portraits (one representing him in priestly robes) of the author.

The book contains, among other startling revelations, thrilling chapters on, The Bible and the Priests of Rome; the Confession of Children; Festivities in a Parsonage; Protestant Children in Convents; the Trade in Masses; Rome and Education; the Miracles of Rome; Murders and Thefts in Quebec; Papineau and the Patriots; Perversion of Dr. Newman; Grand Dinner of the Priests; the Abomination of Auricular Confession; Some of the Thousand Acts of Folly and Idolatry, which form the Life of a Monk; [illegible] the Impurities [illegible] and [illegible] book postp[illegible]

The Priest, Woman, and Confessional, by C. Chiniquy.

Painful and horrible are words too weak to express the things which he relates — things enough to rouse the stones to cry out against a system which brings forth such apples of Sodom and deadly poison to the Church, the family and society.

Cloth, 16mo, 296 pages, with Portrait and Biographical Notice of the Author; Price $1.00.

The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. By L. C. Thomas.

Title page—"The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. Also an Epitome of [illegible] Salvation; and an Appendix including various other subjects, in brief.

The perfect unchangeable moral law is considered and shown to be the basis and spirit of the old Sinaitic law, now dead in its entirety. The law of Moses and law of Christ are compared and contrasted, and the relation of both to the old and new covenants is treated at some length. The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the Kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the [illegible] the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morals of Christianity, etc. This work contains [illegible] pages. The Restitution.

'THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.'

VOL. XXXVIII. Read x PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JANUARY 16, 1889. NO. 3.

THE RESTITUTION

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.' As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

THE COMING OF THE LORD.

Synopsis of a Discourse Preached at Philadelphia Conference, Nov. 22, 1888, by J. F. Wagoner.

"For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep, for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." 1 Thess. iv. 15-16.

These words announce an event that is if possible more strongly accented than any other that is recorded in the Bible. A careful examination shows that about 300 texts allude to the subject, in the Bible. It is not a new doctrine for it is recorded that Enoch the seventh from Adam taught it. Thus early in the history of the race was announced an event that will revolutionize the world. To learn the importance of this theme, we need only read the epistles that were written to the early churches. The strong prominence of the doctrine as taught then forms a wide contrast with its almost utter absence from modern systems of faith. It was then preached to comfort those in distress, but now it excites in the minds of some professors only feelings of horror and dislike. That the coming of the Lord should be viewed with feelings of fear and deep anguish by those who reject him is not surprising, for to them his coming means punishment for their evil deeds, for in the language of Holy Writ he "comes in flaming fire to take vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction." That this class should view with feelings of horror this event is natural, but what shall we say of those who profess to love and serve him, and yet cry out against the doctrine whenever it is taught. This seems the more strange and unaccountable when we look at the relation that believers sustain to Christ. Paul says "they are espoused to one husband even to Christ." O then with what anxiety should the "wife" the church wait and look for the return of the absent "husband" the Lord. How gladly would she welcome any news of the return of the absent Lord. What would be our conclusion if the husband of Mrs. A., had been sojourning in a foreign land for years, but through letters written by some of the friends of Mrs. A. his speedy return was announced. To the wife so long separated from her husband, we read the announcement of his return. But instead of receiving the news gladly (as a true wife would) she exclaims in accents of deep disappointment and pain "O tell me not he is coming, do not distress me with such unwelcome tidings." Would not this be clear evidence that the affections of the lady had become alienated from her husband and transferred to some other man?

Then what shall be our conclusion when the professed followers of Christ reject the news of his coming, with such bitter opposition. O false wife return to thy first love, break that unholy alliance that has been formed with another that is not thy husband. That two classes of the human family will be differently affected by the event of his coming is a doctrine clearly enunciated in the Scriptures. To the one its effect is purifying, to the other it will be terrifying. One inspired writer in speaking of Christ's coming says, "He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he (Christ) is pure." Truly will those who are waiting for the return of the Master, cultivate holiness, keeping themselves unspotted from the world. They will be like servants who lovingly await the return of the Master, they will keep themselves pure for they expect to be ushered into the presence of one of whom it was said "In him is no guile."

Levity and foolishness do not belong to those who are trying to keep unsullied the robe of righteousness. O to be ready to meet him with joy and confidence is worth more than all the wealth of this world. Let us then obey the divine injunction "Be ye therefore ready." But O, what terrors await the unprepared servants, to them his coming will be indeed terrifying, once at least in their lives they will call to their lips a prayer, but it will be to the "rocks and mountains" to hide them from the presence of him who would have gladly heard the most humble petition their lips could have addressed to him. But alas, too late, "the harvest is past, the summer is ended." The religious world with a strange tendency to mystifying the Scriptures, has denied the personal coming of the Lord, and this denial has laid the foundation for errors that have rendered null and void the Scriptures that speak so often and so plainly upon the subject. Through a system of false teaching the necessity of Christ's coming has been set aside, and to one the coming is made to mean the death of some dear friend, to another it means any great moral or religious change, to another it means the final destruction of our fair earth and all it contains. It would be well to ask if these conflicting views can be traced to a lack of clearness on the part of the inspired writers. Have they failed to make plain what they meant by "his coming?" We often hear people express a desire that God had made his word so plain that all might have understood it. But we ask if his coming is to be understood as a literal event could words more plainly express the fact than the ones employed by the sacred writers.

And on the other hand we ask, could words be selected that would more completely mystify the subject if his coming is not literal. It is plainly written that "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven." Does not this language necessitate the belief that Christ will come personally to the earth? Is there any other way of understanding the language? Would not violence be done to the passage to give it any other interpretation? Can there be any doubt that it will be the same Jesus that was here, that will come again? If any such doubt could exist here is a passage that will forever remove the doubt.

"This same Jesus that ye see now ascend shall in like manner descend as ye have seen him go up into heaven." This is not an ecclesiastical opinion that has been formulated by fallible men, but is a testimony borne by angels, and as that is "Sure and steadfast" the matter ought to be forever settled. Human comment upon such language would be entirely useless, and let all acknowledge the grand truth that "God will send Jesus Christ that before was preached unto you."

Having by these plain testimonies established the fact of his coming personally, we wish to call attention to an objection that is sometimes urged against a supposed conflict of texts that relate to the coming of the Lord. It is claimed that one class of texts teach that Christ's coming will be secret, that his approach will be unobserved, while the other class of texts teach with equal clearness that his coming will be open and public. It is true that Paul speaks of the "day of the Lord that cometh as a thief in the night." And John the revelator speaks of his coming thus: "Behold he cometh with clouds and every eye shall see him." This supposed contradiction vanishes when it is learned that the Lord's coming will consist of two stages. This is the order as announced by the inspired writers, Christ will come for his saints, and then he will come with them. The Lord descends from heaven attended by all the holy angels and as they approach the earth a halt is made by the grand procession. Simultaneously, with this a remarkable scene will transpire upon the earth, the dead saints will be raised to incorruptibility, and the living saints changed to immortality, and both classes will then be caught away to meet the Lord in the air.

This stupendous work will be executed so quickly that no cognizance can be taken of it by mortals. The description of the scene says it will occur "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," this language describes a moment of too great rapidity for the human eye to follow, hence the mighty change will be wrought unobserved by mortals.

A startling change will be visible after the translation of the saints. This change will be to the world a proof that God has taken his jewels. As the disarrangement of the fixtures of a room is the first proof to the owner that a theft has been committed, so to the world the first evidence that the Lord's priceless jewels have been taken away will be the disturbed condition of the silent chambers of death! Here a marble slab will be found lying prostrate in the cemetery, then a long neglected grave will show that its occupant has mysteriously disappeared. Here and there in society there will be a missing member. The philosophy of a skeptical world will be taxed to account for the strange phenomena, and the papers will no doubt contain reports like this "disappeared from home suddenly and very mysteriously." How quickly would the mystery be solved could the eyes of these skeptics behold the significant language of our Lord, "the one shall be taken and the other left." This then is the first or secret stage of the Lord's coming, it is an event of which the world is and will be ignorant. The second stage of Christ's coming is thus described "Behold he cometh with clouds and every eye shall see him." The first stage is accompanied by all the angels, the second stage by all the saints. "The Lord God shall come and all the saints with thee," they are caught up to meet the Lord as he comes to earth, and from the point in the air where they meet they all come to the earth together. This I will illustrate to further show the harmony of the divine statements. Suppose the governor of the State of Pennsylvania should announce his purpose to visit the city of Philadelphia. Upon the reception of the news a committee of prominent citizens is formed to meet the governor and welcome him to the city. A special train takes the committee to the point on the road agreed upon for the meeting, at this point both trains are halted and a meeting takes place, and after introductions and mutual congratulations, the governor and his attendants and the committee of reception all journey together to the city. We might say that the governor came for the committee, and then came with the committee without doing any violence to the language. In the absence of knowing all these facts how easy it would be to infer that the committee accompanied the governor from his residence at the capital of the state. And ignorance of the facts pertaining to the coming of the Lord has led some to the belief that as the saints come with Christ, they must be with him in heaven. This is claimed too, right in the face of the statement that Jesus made to his followers "that where he was going (to heaven) they could not come," and the equally plain statement that they could not be with him until he returned. In all the epistolary writings the coming of the Lord is made the basis of the fulfilment of all the promises of future life and all that pertains to it. The resurrection of the dead saints will not be accomplished unless Christ comes, and it is plainly taught that if there is no resurrection of the dead ones they are perished, and the hope that animated them becomes a vain hope, and the preaching that inspired that hope would not only be false but vain also. To the living saints the coming of the Lord would ensure exemption from death, for the living saints at that time have the promise that they will be changed from mortality to immortality without tasting death. Upon the event of his coming depends the establishment of the kingdom of God. Christ's coming and the kingdom are related like cause and effect, no coming, no kingdom, hence the anxiety that is manifested by all the followers of Christ for his return from the heavens. For upon this depends the fruition of all their hopes. It has animated since the Master took his journey into the far country. I stand tonight in the presence of men who have cherished the hope for half a century. In this audience sits a veteran of four score who preached this glorious theme in 1833, one year before I was born, and tonight he is listening to it again. Precious truth, it grows more clear to the hearts of the children of God, and as we near the blessed consummation of our hope may our faith grow stronger and our lives purer and sweeter. O what joy to be found of him in peace when he comes. Amid life's duties that devolve upon us all what duty could we prefer to be acting in the discharge of when our Master comes? I feel tonight that I should prefer to be found at the hour of his coming engaged in the solemn duty of trying to convince men and women that the Lord was coming. O let us all heed the words of our blessed Master "Be ye ready, for at such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." These words of our blessed Lord were most strikingly illustrated by an incident that occurred on our journey to Philadelphia. We were ordered by telegram from Bro. Wilson, of Chicago, to wait at Walkerton for the fast train due there about five in the evening. Arriving at Walkerton in good time we took our places in the waiting room of the B. & O. Depot. As the time approached for the arrival of our train, our dear Bro. Chaplin said "Now brethren let us get ready so that we can step aboard when the train halts." Heeding his kind admonition we hastily gathered the various articles that belonged to us that were lying promiscuously about the room, and in a short time we stood ready and equipped for the train. With overcoats secured and satchels in hand we stood upon the platform in a state of complete readiness for the train. Yes, not only ready but waiting! And soon we saw in the distance the gleam of the headlight, and presently heard the roar of the train as it came sweeping into the station, then heard the welcome voice of the conductor "all aboard" when away dashed the train bearing us to our destination. To be ready implies more than simply to believe that he is coming. Some there are who believe and are ready to argue logically that the Lord will come, but are not ready for his coming.

To be ready implies all this and much more. A state of complete readiness involves [illegible]ing, a person thus situated is ready at all times to say "Lord Jesus come quickly." Let us all be in the attitude of the faithful servant who patiently waited and watched for the coming of his Master, a special blessing awaits all who will be found like the faithful servant ready to receive the Master when he comes. Perhaps there are here tonight some who have resolved that they will make the necessary preparation just before the Lord comes. A noble resolution, but alas formed too late, for when this scene bursts in suddenness and splendor upon a slumbering world then will be no time for preparation, alas no opportunity will then be given, for sudden as the lightning's flash will Christ gather every faithful saint both dead and alive, and as the lark springs from the meadow to meet the sun so the saints with immortal powers rise to meet the Lord. This will leave the earth without a Christian either living or dead. To whom then could the seeker after salvation go to be baptized into the all-saving name of Jesus the life giver?

Does not this fearful time remind us of that dreadful prophecy that was to be fulfilled some time in the world's history "Behold the days come saith the Lord that I will bring a famine upon the land, not a famine for bread nor thirst for water, but a famine for hearing the word of the Lord, and they shall run to and fro in the earth and shall not find it." Bear in mind that from the days of righteous Abel down to the last saint that shall be found at the Lord's coming God has never left himself without a witness to testify in his behalf. Dark and fearful picture when God removes from the earth the least means of preserving it from the dire judgments that hang over a doomed race! There are some who are almost persuaded now, there will be some then who will be almost persuaded, then, how much better to heed the voice of mercy and come now and confess your sins and seek pardon on the easy terms of the gospel, and to you my brothers and sisters who with me are looking for that blessed hope the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ suffer the word of exhortation, be faithful, be prayerful. We are called to a high and holy calling, the children of the living God, let us maintain our high relationship, let us honor our Father by trying to attain to that high standard of excellence the sons and daughters of Almighty God. Let us fit ourselves for the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

Commendations and Warnings.

Dear Restitution:

Confined to my house by illness on this fine, clear Sunday, and having thought much on subjects connected with our work, I have concluded, if you will, to give some of my thoughts to your readers. First and uppermost in my mind is the subject of "Ways and Means." I am the last appointed and humblest of the Board appointed to look after the general interests of the church. I presume that other members of the Board have also received such letters as those that have been sent to me. To one who has the feeling that his attempts to help build the union of the churches upon a substantial and enduring foundation are sincere and unselfish, words of commendation, such as have been sent me from different sections, by brethren whose good will I desire and respect, are as a "sweet morsel under the tongue."

One, in particular, from our good brother Dr. Thomas, of Dover, Del., devoted entirely to and commending the system of tithes, came very appropriately at this time. On the other hand I have received one criticism of the work of the Conference which I may notice later on; also three applications for evangelistic and church help, besides the one sent to the Conference from Bear Creek, Arkansas, and applications for money to the amount of $830.00; $400.00 of this amount is from a sister at Douglas, Kan.; $200.00 from a brother at Otis, Col., (neither of whom I had ever heard until they wrote to me); $80.00 from two well-known and respected brethren in the [illegible] is from a Bro. Sherrill, at Centralia, Washington Territory, who with his brethren of the Church of God there, having no place in which public meetings can be held, are trying to put up a frame building to cost $800.00, toward which they have raised $150.00, want help from our Board toward completing the work.

Brushing aside all these items, except the last, as being outside the work committed to the Board, and adding to it the appeal of our Bro. Gelletly for an evangelist to do good work on the Eastern shore of Maryland; the fostering care and help needed if a church is to be built up in Wilmington, Del.; the same at Grand Rapids, Mich.; the appeal for help from Arkansas and the local needs coming upon our State Conferences, I am constrained to ask when and how are the means to be provided to meet these and other demands upon us. Is it not already apparent that the very modest demand made by the committee on "Ways and Means," are entirely too small? That nothing else than the rising to the needs of the occasion by all our members, and a determination on all sides to furnish the money to meet these and other calls on us, whatever the individual sacrifice it may call on each one of us to make, is the only solution offered; and if the individual member fails to make his sacrifice, if the individual church fails to collect from each member what the member should give, and to remit its quota to its own conference and from thence up to the General Board, unless this is done, and done systematically and in order, at stated times, the means cannot be provided to meet these calls and the work must fail, which, God forbid!

But how long shall our work be delayed? The only money so far coming to me as Treasurer, is $10.00 contributed by Albert O. Young toward meeting the printing and other expenses of the Board, and $100.00 contributed by myself, conditionally, for the same purpose. This will never do. Special contributions of $100.00, of $50.00, of $10.00, of $5.00 and of lesser sums, just as the Lord has prospered you, should be made at once, without waiting for the slower action of church and conference, and it behooves some of us who have been satisfied to make a contribution of $10.00 to sit down and study carefully whether we are really ready to meet our Lord at his coming, with the knowledge on his part, as well as on our own, that our contribution should have been $1000.00 instead of $10.00.

Now a word as to this very modest, too modest, request of the committee on "Ways and Means." Each sister has been asked to give at least $1.00 per year, and as but few of them own any property they pay no additional tax; 50 cts. of this is to go to their own church, 50 cts. is remitted by the church to the State Conference, who, in turn, remit 25 cts. of it to the General Board. It is true some sisters may not be able to pay even this $1.00 (if so, she should not be asked to pay.) The system of proportionate giving cures all that. Compare the one with the other.

On the night of the sermon on tithes, besides nearly all the delegates present, about twelve of the members of the church here arose to pledge one-tenth of their income to charity and the church work. Among those was one, a school teacher, having no possessions, but having a salary of $400.00 per year. Instead of $1.00 tax she pays $40.00 per year and has already paid $10.00 of it into the church. How different would be the contributions if all would give on this just principle, and how much it would encourage those who are trying to carry on this work.

Now a few words as to myself forced from me by the numerous requests made upon me for money. I am a busy man and it is a toil and a labor for me to write letters. I do not answer one-fourth of those sent to me, although always glad to hear from my friends. They know this and do not expect answers unless of considerable importance. But I am not, as many seem to suppose, a man of means. I have some undivided interests that may some day, if God so wills, crystallize into money, or may never be worth a dollar. Apart from my household goods, I have [illegible] whatever, no land, bonds, or property of any kind. My income is made up of several salaries which I work for and earn. This year not one-tenth only, but four-tenths of my regular income went into the church, besides amounts expended in private charities. For next year I have made promises to the general and local church which will probably take as large a share of my income, besides which I expect to have $3500.00 (or $70.00 per week) less income next year than this. Friends will see from this, that it is useless to write to me for loans and gifts.

G. P. W.

This I say, He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly, and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Every man according as he purposeth in his heart so let him give; not grudgingly or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver. And God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work: as it is written, he hath dispersed abroad he hath given to the poor, his righteousness remaineth forever. 2 Cor. ix. 6-9.

Dear ones of the household of faith, with what intense interest have we been watching for and reading the proceedings of the General Conference, and how our hearts swell with gratitude to God for the love there manifested, the words there spoken, and for the work there inaugurated. Surely this conference is what we have long needed, and what grand possibilities lie in the future. But my dear brothers and sisters, east, west, north, and south, in our humble homes this work rests with us; for do we not remember that when Moses went forth to stand between God and the hosts of his enemies, his hands were too heavy for him to hold up alone, so the common people held them up till victory was won. And so now when our brothers come to the front and undertake this great work, they cannot do it without aid, and sympathy; real substantial aid I mean in dollars and cents.

Now do we begin to look to ourselves and say, "I am poor, and am already giving all I am able;" perhaps many are, but are we all? How much are we spending annually for the gratification of our appetites, forgetting that we are to "present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God." And how much have we spent for useless gifts and amusements during the Christmas holidays? in fact are we remembering that the money is the Lord's and we his stewards? I feel sure that the want of means so felt among us is owing to our forgetfulness of God's order. Surely he has revealed to us his will in that when he had a covenant people under Moses, he required of them one-tenth, and the first-fruits of everything for his service. Does this seem too much? Are we afraid of doing wrong to our own families? Then let me tell you that some of us here in Iowa know of those who being very poor themselves always lay aside one-tenth of all they get from their few cows, and chickens, and little garden, (this being their all), and thus while their wants are supplied by a loving Father's hand, they are sending tracts and papers and even copies of the New Testament marked at the promises, and the most prominent teachings of the gospel of the kingdom, and future life, to those poor ones who will appreciate them for good, and also always have something laid by to relieve the present necessities of those poorer than themselves; and their example has caused others to go and do likewise and be greatly blessed of God.

Oh, is not the failure to give as God has prospered us the cause of the seeming death in life of so many in our body; really a dead faith bringeth forth so little fruit unto holiness. We see error prospering, increasing and spreading itself over the world, taking deep root in almost every heart, all because its advocates are banded together for concert of action and a constant giving for its support; then how important that we who have the very truth of God to proclaim stand [illegible] shoulder in the [illegible] ment, lookin[illegible] obey imp[illegible] and [illegible] again [illegible] letter, and [illegible] in hearts to gi[illegible] when he come to the Lo[illegible] him what is his own, that he is able to make all grace [illegible] toward us, and that then we will have all sufficiency in all things, and then it can be said of us, "his righteousness remaineth forever." Then let us heed well the instructions of the Conference and associate ourselves with the brethren nearest us in supporting this work, first in our own State through its appointed officers, and thus through the State to the General Conference. And if we are poor in this world's goods we will not despise the day of small things but remember the widow's mite.

LIBBIE PALMER.

[Let us one and all follow out the suggestions of our sister in this letter. For one we intend to do so.—Ed. Res.]

To the Church of God Scattered and Tried, Greeting.

I am living in a wicked city, population of about one hundred thousand souls, almost if not entirely alone as to the one faith, but thank God I have the Bible to read, which is always a source of strength and comfort and also the visits of THE RESTITUTION, which gives me renewed strength to persevere in the way of life. Yes dear brethren; I have set my face as a flint Zionward, and am bound not to let anything hinder me, or lead me astray from the path of life; Jesus has done too much for me, that I should come short of a glorious entrance, into his glorious kingdom. O I think often, am I worthy to be so favored with a hope of immortality and eternal life in the kingdom of God; which his chosen people lost by transgression; but God is now taking out of the Gentiles a people for his name; by the sacrifice of the Son of God, was this favor extended to us; and now may we by the help of God, fit ourselves by complying with his requirements, to be chosen with his gathered people.

G. P. ALONE.

My address will be Rensselaer, Ind., until some time in March. Should any desire my labors in the Gospel work, they can address me accordingly, at an early date, that I may arrange accordingly.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

BRO. L. C. Chase's discourse next week, with some other deferred articles.

IN the Hebrew Christian for the present month, January, we find the following:

"Bishop Blyth writes from Palestine: 'There never was a time when the Jews listened with such attention to the claims of Christianity as they do now. The increase of the number of Jews now settled in Palestine is remarkable; within the last few years they have increased from [illegible] to 60,000, a number much above that which was enrolled by Ezra and Nehemiah after the captivity. If we could double our present insignificant outlay, we could at least thrible our converts; we have only one English clergyman in all Palestine. I want to at once place a missionary and his staff in Hebron and Damascus, two of the great centers of the present Jewish population. Medical aid is now (as in early days) of primary value on the staff.'" In an Editorial the Editor of the above named periodical says: "Our readers cannot imagine how our hearts are gladdened at the sight of the number who attend our meetings. Think of a Lecture Room filled with Jews, listening eagerly while we hold up Christ before them. The Sunday School, too, filled with Jewish children. The Rev. M. J. Ryan, who is assisting us, is proving himself efficient in our work. Christians, help us, that by any means we might save some of them, Rom. [illegible]

[illegible]NT.

[illegible] ton may be [illegible] 89th Psalm [illegible] his seed, and does [illegible] a word of Abraham and his seed? Is Abraham not higher than David? We answer: Here we find a beautiful symmetrical unit, which is well worthy our attention. The Abrahamic covenant is the first and the highest, and comprehends all the literal seed of Abraham, "the Jews." It might be called the Magna Charta of Israel's commonwealth. The covenant for David and his seed is the Royal Charter of Israel, and included royal prerogatives, supremacy, and world dominion. The first belongs to all Israel, the last exclusively to the rulers of that people. If we desire to see a bright picture of the covenants of Israel blended and drawn into a focus, let us study Luke ii. 21–33. There [illegible] Jesus, our Lord, the Son of [illegible] receiving the circumcision as [illegible] of the Abrahamic covenant. [illegible] Jesus' mother offering a sacrifice of "a pair of turtle doves," paying homage to the Mosaic covenant or law, Lev. xii. 8, and then Jesus in the arms of Simeon, who spoke by the Holy Spirit, saying that that child should be "a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel," is the acknowledgment of Israel's superiority and of the Davidic covenant. Mark particularly, first, the dispensation of the Gentiles (the present time of which we are receiving light from Jesus our Lord); and second, after that, light should follow glory (which is above light), not principally to the nations, but to thy people Israel; the millennial era, and the personal reign of Jesus as the King of Israel in Jerusalem.

We ask your particular attention to those words, thy throne. "And I have built thy throne," says the Lord, and these words are not in the future tense—they speak of a completed work. It is something that David had already in possession; thy throne is an earthly throne. David never reigned in heaven, as the Apostle Peter teaches us, Acts ii. 34, and as Paul reasons, Acts xiii. 34–37, and consequently "the sitting of our Lord Jesus Christ at the right hand of the Majesty on high" is quite different from thy throne, which is here mentioned. It cannot be said, that [illegible] being a throne of David in heaven. The apostle in Hebrews iv. 14 tells us "That Christ is the great High Priest;" Heb. viii. 2, "A minister of the sanctuary," and in verses 8–12 he speaks of "a new covenant with the house of Judah" in the future time "after those days." We find the same distinction made in Rev. ii. 21, and in Matt. xxv. 31: "To him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with Me in My throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with My Father in his throne." "Then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and all nations shall be gathered before him." Indeed, this is a subject of study, worthy of our attention.

It is a sworn declaration, Heb. vi. 16–18, made to David. "Even forever, I established thy seed and have built thy throne, to generation and generation." It means of ages and end ages to come, 2 Sam. vii. 25. Now the question arises: Was this promise, oath, and covenant ever fulfilled? We say, not in its whole extent. The rule of the Dynasty, or David's house, over the whole house of Israel, was not longer than eighty years. It was curtailed in power by the revolt of the ten tribes, and only for three hundred and eighty-seven years they were rulers over the house of Judah. Can four centuries be called forever? And now, for nearly two thousand five hundred years the Dynasty of David has not reigned over the Jews. The period of the Asmonean, or Maccabean rule, cannot be called David's Dynasty.

What a period? David's house is set aside, not exterminated, Luke ii. 2–4: and his royal descendants, the sons of David, are in the midst of us and may be seen in some of the poor, despised, scattered Jews, neglected by many of us Gentile believers. We have no doubt that many of them have a pedigree of royalty, far above that of the reigning Dynasties of Europe or Asia. Those sojourners among us must and will surely return to Canaan, the land of Jehovah, where the graves of the kings can be seen. The promise was made to Abraham and to David in that land of Canaan, and there they shall abide forevermore, Ezekiel xxxix. 25, 29.

That covenant of Jehovah cannot be broken, curtailed, or abrogated. The promise is not made to depend on the perfect obedience of David's house, dynasty or sons; the very Psalm under consideration declares emphatically (vs. 31–37)—"If his children forsake my law....break my statutes....I change not....I lie not to David; his seed is forever, and his throne as the sun. As the witness in the cloud is steadfast."

The people of Israel will return to Canaan and so the crucified King of the Jews "will return from heaven, Acts i. 2; Zech. xiv. 5, having received his kingdom," Luke x. 12; will be seen in Jerusalem, Matt. xxiii. 39; will be Priest upon his throne, Zech. vi. 13; and this whole Psalm shall be sung, as the glorious covenant Psalm of the Millennial period.—By A. C. Tris, in Christian Herald.

Evil Speaking.

Is it a part I wonder, says Margaret Sangster, of the fruit of that "forbidden tree which brought death into the world, and all our woe," that so many of us are too ready to say of others the thing which is unkind, to attribute the wrong motive to our fellow beings, to judge unfairly? Is it not, in truth, one of its worst effects, since no one can think of Eden, peace and beauty, in a word where it is possible for one person to speak with anything but gentleness and sincerity of a neighbor. "Charity thinketh no evil," says the best of books, linking the sweet declaration in a golden chain, on which several descriptions of charity or love are strung like gems which glitter and flash at every turn.

"A lie that is half truth, is ever the worst of lies," is the conclusion of a poet who sees deeply into the heart of things. Do we remember this when we permit in ourselves the license to speak doubtingly of some friend whose good fame should be a sacred trust; when we listen to the innuendo, or fail to resent the slur cast upon the character of the absent; when we happen to know something concerning an acquaintance, which our inner conscience tells us would be better left to silence than whispered in a confidential corner, thence presently to be bruited on the housetops? Should there not be cultivated in every child a delicate sense of honor, which should act as a guard on the door of the lips, barring the way for censorious, evil, or untrue speech? "By thy words shalt thou be justified." "By thy words — condemned."

Would not society be better, our home life happier, our friendship stronger, our own souls nobler, if we were, God helping, determined hereafter to speak in kindness only of the absent, therefore, the defenceless? And in cases where such speech is unfortunately impossible, is it not a Christian duty to bear in mind that silence is golden?

THE RIVER JORDAN.

Rising in the north,
Running to the south,
Resting in the Sea
Or Lake of Galilee,
Rushing out again,
Through wood and glen,
Till it loses breath
In the Sea of Death.

The river (first mentioned in Gen. xiii. 10, or 3700 years ago) may be described as rising, on the slopes of Anti-Libanus, or the Eastern range of Lebanon, in springs there; and as running so crooked that it goes about 200 miles in making what would be in direct distance about 120. As its source is 1700 feet above the Mediterranean, and the Dead Sea into which it empties is 1300 feet below the Mediterranean it make a fall of 3000 feet in going that distance; and as might be expected it has a rapid flow and many cataracts. In width it varies from eighty to one hundred and fifty feet, and in depth from five to twelve. The Sea of Galilee, in which it seems to rest for a season, is a fresh-water lake shaped somewhat like a pear—the lower being the larger end; length about thirteen miles, breadth from five to nine. Most of the river is below this Sea from which it rushes toward the Dead Sea, in which it is lost. The Dead Sea, or as it is called in Scripture, the Salt Sea, Deut. iii. 17; Josh. iii. 16; xii. 3: is about forty-five miles long and ten wide and about 1300 feet deep. At the southwest corner of it is Jebel Usdom (Mount Sodom)—a mountain, or salt-hill range, from five to seven miles long, two broad, and three or four hundred feet high—the lower part being rock salt to the depth of from one hundred to one hundred and fifty feet. The sea has no visible outlet, no fish in its waters, and is in many respects one of the most remarkable bodies of water in the world.

Jews in Morocco.

A missionary of the London Society for the Promotion of Christianity among the Jews, Mr. M. Norollah, visiting Morocco city, thus describes it:

The Mellah, or Jewish quarter, where I was residing during the time I was in Morocco, was built in the year 1288. It is not necessary to say what sort of a place it is, for the name Mellah describes it well. It is very big, and has walls and a gate guarded by 60 soldiers. It contains between 10,000 and 11,000 inhabitants, all Jews in a degraded condition. It has 800 houses, 500 shops, 22 synagogues, 22 schools, wherein 1,000 children are educated in Talmud and Rabbinical books, 30 mills, 12 public baths for women and 3 "fondoks" or inns. From Friday evening until Sunday morning the gate of the Mellah is closed in consequence of the Sabbath. No Mohammedan is permitted to enter the Mellah on Sabbath days, except for an especial reason. In fact, the Mellah is just like a separate town. The Jews have everything there that is necessary for maintenance. The houses are all of one story, large, dirty, and full of vermin and scorpions. During the whole time I was in Morocco I could hardly sleep at all, and had it not been for the sake of my work, I would not have passed a single night in the Mellah.

The houses are not so crowded as those of the Mellahs on the coasts, especially that of Mogador, and in some respects are in better condition. The administration of Justice is carried on by four Rabbis, two Sheiks or elders, and a Kadi appointed by the Sultan. These Rabbis are very fanatical, and would not receive me, and published a Ban forbidding the Jews to have any intercourse with me.

The Morocco Jews are very much persecuted by the Arabs. They cannot walk in the Medinah with their shoes on, neither can they ride on the mules unless they enjoy European protection. They are not at all influential, neither have they all the trades of the town in their hands. They are very industrious, and work very hard to earn their living. The holidays and Sabbaths are kept very strictly. They are also very superstitious, and honor their dead Rabbis. Like the Arabs, the Jews also have their saint houses, where they go and pray to the departed Rabbis, to intercede on their behalf at the throne of God. All the Jews who die outside the walls of the town must be buried there, because they are afraid that if the corpse is brought in the town and buried in the Mellah cemetery they will be visited by plagues. Many tombs of the Rabbis, in and outside the gates of the city are held in veneration by Jews and regarded as holy. One day I was invited by a Hazan (one who reads prayers in the synagogue for the congregation) to visit the tomb of Rabbi David Levi the holy. His tomb is outside the gates of the town. This Rabbi started five months ago for Fez. Unfortunately, while on the way, he fell off his mule, and died from the injuries received. The Jews buried him outside for the very reason I gave above. I accepted the invitation of the Hazan, and started with five other Jews. On our arrival at the tomb the Hazan and Jews took off their shoes, knelt down, kissed the stones, and began to read. I asked the Hazan why they worshipped the stones. He answered: "This Rabbi was holy and had merits, therefore we pray to him that he should intercede on our behalf that God may bring us out of persecution."

The Growth of Jerusalem.

The Neuesten Nachrichten aus dem Morgenland, a German newspaper published in Palestine, states that the city of Jerusalem is growing in size and population at a remarkable rate. Its growth is all the more surprising because neither its situation nor its trade are favorable to a rapid increase. It lies amongst a not very fertile group of mountains; it has next to no commerce, and it has no manufactures. Nevertheless, new buildings are raising daily, churches, gardens and institutes of various kinds are filling up the formerly desolate neighborhood to the distance of half an hour's walk beyond the old limits of the city. The Jews are to the front as builders. Their houses spring out of the ground like mushrooms, uniform, ugly, one-storied, plentifully supplied with windows, but with no manner of ornament. The Rothschilds have completed a new hospital. Close beside it there is a new Abyssinian church. The Russians also are great builders; they have erected a new church, consulate, lodging houses for pilgrims of the orthodox national churches, and a hospital. Near to the Russian group stands the "German House" for German Roman Catholics, from whose top the German and Papal flags float side by side. The Russians have also built a high tower upon the Mount of Olives, from whose summit the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea can both be seen. The Greeks and Armenians are also busy builders, but they provide for the bodily rather than the religious demands of the pilgrims. The former build cafes and bazaars, [illegible] the latter set up shops.

"He Will Thoroughly Purge His Floor."

"As wheat or chaff we shall all appear in the great Day of Judgment. There is a machine in the Bank of England which receives sovereigns, as a mill receives grain, for the purpose of determining wholesale whether they are of full weight. As they pass through, the machinery by unerring laws, throws all that are light to one side, and all that are of full weight to another. That process is a silent but solemn parable to me. Founded as it is upon the laws of Nature, it affords the most vivid similitude of the certainty which characterizes the judgment of the great day. There are no mistakes or partialities to which the light may trust; the only hope lies in being of standard weight before they go in."—Arnot.

"Fruits Meet For Repentance."

"John did not demand tears. He did not ask that a committee or a church session should probe the hearts of his hearers to find out how deep their convictions of sin might be. He demanded outward and substantial evidence. 'Bring forth fruits meet for repentance.' He did not demand that they should sit every evening for weeks on an anxious seat....'If you are sorry, show it by doing better.' He said, 'Let honester, purer and kindlier lives be proof of the sincerity of your repentance. If you have two coats, give one to some coatless man. That is better than any amount of anguish over sinfulness in general.'"—Eggleston.

We trust our friends will not forget the poor. We have calls every week for papers and books to go to persons too poor to pay for them, and we can only supply these as our charitable patrons furnish the means to do so. SOME MISTAKES ABOUT PALESTINE.

It is a mistake to represent the Palestine "desolated and laid waste as it is today, and covered with its ruins, as all the inheritance that was given to the tribes of Israel and Judah. Palestine proper may have but 12,000 square miles within its borders, but the covenant of God with the fathers was from the river of Egypt to the Euphrates, probably some 1,200 by 600 miles in extent, and embracing very much more than half a million of square miles—indeed, about two and a-half times more than Great Britain and Ireland put together. It is a mistake to write so as to leave the impression that but few of the Jewish race have hardly any stronger attachment to the land of their ancient independence and glory, "than we feel for the old home of our race across the sea." Vast numbers of them want to go there! All the signs of these latter days say they are now going there! What means the universal Israelite Alliance? What means it that in Roumania alone, and where there are about 500,000 Jews, that no less than 30 different societies exist among them to promote immigration to Palestine? What means it that such men as Prof. Goldwin Smith and Canon Farrar advocate the restoration to them of Palestine as the only rational solution of the Eastern Question? Dr. Rosenthal, a Christian Jew, said at the May meeting in London: "The Jews of Austria want to go to Jerusalem. They do not want to go to America. Their parting words with one another are always, 'Next time we meet, may we meet in Jerusalem!' And many families of Jews who had gone to America, had returned to England, and wanted to go to their own land."

In the persecutions inflicted on this oppressed race in Russia, not long ago, the poor Jews were driven to their homes to the shout—"Go to Palestine! Go to Palestine!" and there, not only the poorer, but the wealthy Jews also, are thinking of once more living in the land God gave to their fathers. This is the meaning of the remarkable movement there begun by Rabinowitch. Jerusalem is to be trodden down by the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled." What then? Why this, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord," will come. This, probably, will not be a suddenly accomplished thing. The various deportations of Israel and Judah covered many years. Their restoration from Babylon was a prolonged returning, and so may be the final returning. Whoever is, or is not right, in prophetic interpretations, the fact remains just the same, that they are even now returning to Syria and Palestine in large numbers! In 1841 not more than about 300 Jews were allowed to live inside Jerusalem, and even these were subjected to the most shameful oppression; but today from 15,000 to 20,000 live within its walls, and many of them live even in the Turkish quarter, on Mount Zion, and without any molestation. A new civilization is so rapidly taking place, that, says one resident for years on the spot, "It almost seems as if Jerusalem was ceasing to be trodden down by the Gentiles." One of their own living poets, Rabbi Ben Yaphet thus briefly voices the hopes of Israel:

Lift up your heads! The Crescent wanes
  in yonder Eastern sky,
Beneath whose beam Oppression reigns,
Beneath whose beam, Pollution stains;
  Redemption draweth nigh.

Surely it shall come to pass, that once more Jerusalem, the city of the ages, the city of the Great King, shall be the joy of the whole earth, and a multitude of signs proclaim it, that the day is not far off.

Lastly, one of the greatest mistakes concerning Palestine, is made by not keeping us well posted in every thing directly related to the Jews, the Turks, the Russians, Egypt, Syria, and Palestine, as bearing on the fulfilment of the prophecies, and in not holding up constantly, that "more sure word of prophecy, to which we shall do well to take heed, a unto a lamp that shines in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in our hearts."—H. Exley.

Are You Glad Christmas is so Near?

This question was asked of a young lady. She replied, "Well, I hardly know what to answer. It is so soon gone. The show is too short—too soon out." Her idea of the day is a season of eating, drinking—stuffing. The birth at Bethlehem enters not once into her thoughts. Jesus is no more to her than Julius Cæsar, the Duke of Wellington, or any other man that lived in the past. How ought such people to be treated? With pity, or with scorn? She is not acquainted with Jesus; don't understand what he meant when he said to John, "I am he that liveth and was dead, and am alive forevermore." She has been going to church all her life, but she still remains a stranger to the risen, living, real, loving, sympathizing Jesus. He is spoken of by the church people as an influence, "the influence of the Spirit." His denial—"I am not a spirit, handle me; a spirit has not flesh and bones, as you see I have"—is taken no notice of. Our teachers persist in treating him as a spirit.

"I feel him in my heart," says another friend. Why confound our Lord's own teaching in this way? It leads many into confusion, and not infrequently to something worse, namely, turning over the whole business to priest or pastor, that he may look after our interests, as one real estate lawyer attends to our property interests.

"If I go not away the Comforter will not come," etc. "He will abide with you," etc. We should never confound this Comforter with him who spake to Paul, "I am Jesus," etc. We lose much real, tangible comfort when we allow ourselves to believe that the Man, Jesus, has been turned into an immaterial spirit by crucifixion. Jesus himself was anxious to prevent among his friends this conception of himself. Probably this was why he inquired, "Children, have ye here any meat?" and afterwards ate with them.

Oh if the young woman who complains of Christmas being so soon over, would just dismiss from her mind the idea that Jesus, whose day we celebrate, is no more than an influence (or something to eat), but that he is the same now as when he inquired, "Children, have ye here any meat?" her Christmas would be a feast to her soul. Nay, every day in the year would be a happy, blessed, soul comforting Christmas.

The way Christmas is celebrated, even among church people, gives out a false impression of Jesus. He was neither a glutton nor a wine drinker, but his meat and his drink was to do the will of him that sent him. No, Christmas need not be "so soon over;" but it may stay all the year round.—Isaac McCurry.

The Monuments.

In his latest work, "Fresh Light from the Ancient Monuments," Professor A. H. Sayce deals with the startling information given to us about Cyrus and his empire by the clay documents lately discovered in Babylonia. Three inscriptions found by Mr. Rassam and deciphered by Sir Henry Rawlinson and Mr. Pinches, contain references to Cyrus, and the description given of him will be strange to students of ancient history. Cyrus is called "the young servant" of Merodach, the patron-deity of Babylon, the "king of Anzan," or Elam, not of Persia. In other inscriptions professing to be those of Cyrus himself, that king, who has hitherto been supposed to be a Persian and a Zoroastrian monotheist, appears as an Elamite and a polytheist. Such is the testimony of "the records, which," as Professor Sayce writes, "have risen up, as it were, out of the tomb, to revolutionize all our previous conceptions of that part of ancient history with which they are concerned." The theory that Cyrus had allowed the Jews to return to their own land because, like them, he believed in but one supreme god—the Ormazd or good spirit of the Zoroastrian creed—must, according to Professor Sayce, be abandoned. God consecrated Cyrus to be his instrument in restoring his chosen people to their land, not because the king of Elam was a monotheist, but because the period of Jewish trial and punishment had come to an end.

MARRIED.

ANNIS—BALSLEY.—Charles Annis and Emma V. Balsley were joined in marriage by Eld. N. H. Geiselman at the home of the bride's parents, Dec 27, 1888. The affair was truly a grand one, there being over one hundred guests in attendance; numerous presents were given the bride and groom.

WISE—ANNIS.—Samuel Wise Jr. and Flora D. Annis were joined in marriage by Eld. N. H. Geiselman at his residence in Bremen, Ind., Jan. 0, 1889, both of Marshall Co.

Thank-Offering Corner.

In compliance with a request we start this "Thank-Offering Corner." A number of poor people are yet to be supplied with our paper for 1889. These have been paid for in the past only partially, and as we are not willing to stop any of them, we hope our friends will come forward with "Thank-Offerings" so that all may be supplied.

CO-OPERATION.

The Church worshiping at Gospel Grove, Monroe Tp. Kosciusko Co Ind., met in business capacity, Jan. 3, 1889, John L. Wince, Chairman, and S. R. Wince, Secretary.

To re-organize our little band, that we might work in harmony with the District and General Conference, was then in order, and the following persons were chosen officers of the Church.

Elders; John L. Wince and John S. Quackenbush; Secretary, Cyrus Musselman; Treasurer, S. R Wince.

By request, the members of the little Church at Pierceton, to which we ourselves belonged, were incorporated with the Church at Gospel Grove.

The report of the General Conference was then adopted without a dissenting voice. We are now prepared to act in concert with all brethren of like faith in promulgating the truth.

We have already commenced collecting our fund on the basis laid down by the Committee on Ways and Means. The brethren have fallen in love with that plan and are coming forward nobly in the work. We believe that this action of the Philadelphia Conference was directed by a Divine Hand, for the best interest of the cause of truth at home and abroad, and our earnest prayer is, that all the Churches throughout the United States and Canada, may join in this systematic and co-operative work, believing that "in union there is strength." Come dear brethren, act at once. Prepare for the Lord's coming.

J. L. and S. R. WINCE.

MARSHALLTOWN, Ia.

Dear Restitution:

Please say to the household for their encouragement that the brethren at Gladbrook met on Jan. 6 and organized by electing a secretary, treasurer and an elder. Without any previous notice they promptly raised $10.75 toward securing the amount offered by Bro. Geo. F. Work for State evangelization, and we shall try hard to organize the ten churches under our State Conference which will meet in June. Will all gospel believers in Iowa send me their names and address at once, that I may be able to correspond with you and find out the needs of different localities, and for the purpose of furthering our work and organization. Yours for the truth,

A. J. EYCHANER,

LIBERTY, Mo.

Dear Restitution:

Bro. Almus Adams of Arapahoe, Neb., has been holding a meeting at this place for nearly two weeks; he preached twelve sermons to large and very attentive audiences. Six persons came out from the world and accepted the true gospel, and were baptized into the all-saving name of Jesus. I think many more would have done likewise had not the meeting been brought to a sudden close by sickness in Elder Adams' family. He received a letter from home stating that two of his children were sick, one dangerously. So he had to close the meeting and go home. I feel sure that much good could be done if he could come back. But the people here are poor and unable to bear the expense. Bro. Adams is recognized here by all as a preacher of marked ability. He has the confidence of all the people, both saint and sinner, and in my opinion no other man could fill his place with this community. If the work could be pushed now a large congregation could be built up. We have twenty-three members now. Yours in hope,

D. T. SLOAN.

Dear Restitution:

Dear ones of like precious faith: since I left the National Conference, I visited Clinton County, Ind., and preached for them twice. They met on Sunday for reorganization. There was a good turnout and they organized by appointing two elders, two deacons, a clerk and a treasurer. There are about forty members or more. They intend to meet every two weeks for social meeting, for prayer and exhortation and communion, and will try to keep up their meetings. I am now at Silver Creek, in Ogle Co., Ill., holding meetings. Have been here one week and will continue a few days longer and then go to Dixon, Lee Co., Ill., and from there to Adaline, Ill.; and then to East and West Plum River. I am endeavoring to organize churches in all the places where I preach. I wish to carry out the plans of our National Conference at Philadelphia. I will give another report in a few weeks.

J. S. HATCH.

Thank Offering to the Lord.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

Where are your thank-offerings? The Lord has been good to us the past year; what have you to lay upon his altar at the beginning of this New Year? Come forward. Some poor invalid wants a good paper to read; send them THE RESTITUTION, and the Lord will bless you.

THE SONG OF HOPE.

"The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Prov. iv, 18.

A soft sweet voice from Eden stealing,—
Such as but to angels known,
Hope's cheering song is ever thrilling,
"It is better farther on."

I hear hope singing, sweetly singing
Softly in an undertone;
And singing as if God had taught it,
"It is better farther on."

By night and day it sings the same song,—
Sings it while I sit alone;
And sings it so the heart may hear it,
"It is better farther on."

It sits upon the grave and sings it,—
Sings it when the heart would groan;
And sings it when the shadows darken:
"It is better farther on."

Still farther on! O how much farther?
Count the mile-stones one by one.
No! no counting—only trusting,
"It is better farther on."

JANUARY EVENING TALK.

I am not—no, I am not in Joppa—walking on the soil trod by Peter after Pentecost, and looking off over the Blue Sea whose waves were cut by the prow of Jonah's ship. Only in imagination I am there. Only thus, am I taking my sea-side walk of sixty miles or less from Joppa to Carmel. The sea pebbles along the strand, are washed by the never-ceasing surges, as when, some where, the uneasy fish ejected the fugitive prophet. Let me walk this shore, and drink the briny air. On my right is Sharon, lovely, and famous, and populous in other days; on my left, "this great and wide sea," stretching its azure immensity westward, through forty parallels of longitude, a sea full of great and famous islands, and skirting with its curving verge many a seat of empire, ancient and modern. What a majestic stretch of water, full of history, and daily visible to our Lord, during all those thirty years of his humble home life in Nazareth. But I must walk on. Blessed be the breath of the breeze cool from the northwest in January. By ruined Cæsarea, and over the stately Carmel. I have come at last to Nazareth, twenty-five miles from the Cape. Here I am to remember—(O, how much there is to remember! and how much to ponder, even, that is unwritten!) Here am I to remember that the king of glory passed the thirty years of his human life in growth and preparation. I must stay here a day or two at least, and walk over the whole region round about. I must fasten my eyes on every hill-side, and drink in all the features of the landscape. All heights and depths, slopes and hill-tops, I must traverse, and remember who walked here a thousand times, who breathed this air, and to whom all this sweet rural scenery was familiar almost from infancy. So thankful and glad I am, to traverse all the soil, for never has it been disturbed with the pirate and polluting presence of a thousand conscienceless invaders, quite as other places in the near vicinity have been, and as Jerusalem, the city of all, most pitilessly sacked and sieged in the ages gone by. But after all, I make my study of Nazareth, in imagination, not yet in fact. And all, who, all abroad, wait for the time and event of Israel's regathering, have their eyes turned assuredly toward that land of promise, where events involving unspeakable issues, are to transpire. The Lord's work of restoration and salvation will move according to a plan ordained from ages, and with an order and immutable certainty, as fixed as the grand march of the spheres. The day of grace, we trust, is very near, yet it will come, not without political convulsions, and a world-wide excitement of peoples, before the durable peace is assured.

Last night, I called at "St. John's Pharmacy," a drug store near the river. I begged the druggist to loan me his copy of "United States Dispensatory," for a moment's reference.

Meanwhile, a man in my hearing, held a conversation with a neighbor, in a loud voice, and with ungodly fluency profaning the great name of his Maker. I bore it a few moments, shuddering and aching. "Can I rebuke this man of carnal mind?" queried I mentally. "How reckless he is! His physique is that of a bear (in human form) with its mechanism of muscles, bones and cartilage—and with the blood of self-security and satiety coursing in strong red currents day and night, in perpetual round? Cares he aught for God? Breathes he ever a prayer—renders he [illegible] thank-offering, by so much as a [illegible] Hear him now this moment. [illegible] anger." I felt a sudden access of courage—but I knew I must be wise, or I would do harm, and not good. I walked up to him with my big book in my hands and said—"You will excuse me—but I am not able to see exactly why it is necessary to use profane words as you do. I hate to hear profanity,—it hurts me very much. Quite a conversation followed. He was not angry, but he was for asserting his liberty. He said he paid his taxes for the privilege of swearing, and that lying was far worse. But he quickly modified his tone, and acknowledged that it was a "mean habit." I said—"wouldn't it be best to refrain from it then?" Why trample under foot, the name of our Divine Maker? Profanity almost invariably goes hand in hand with other sins. You may not be addicted to drink—but swearing about always accompanies strong drink habits. Would you even dishonor the name of Washington by low associations, and a careless familiar handying?" He granted that I was right—but will he reform? What a shameful thing it is to be so, at once, careless and daring, unreasonable and impious, degraded and repulsive! And this man has quite large possessions. "I refused ten thousand dollars for my place," he had just been saying. (Just exactly what our Lord meant, at a certain time was this—"What good will it do a man eager after immeasurable riches, to be successful in the highest degree, and then die, and leave it all? How that language as to "gaining the whole world, and losing ones soul," has been most unwarrantably treated—and made the text for assertions utterly at fault, and wrong! I have put all this in a parenthesis, as perhaps a little abruptly introduced, after the narrative above.)

I quote; "our chief want in life, is some one who shall make us do what we can." A very suggestive and true saying. And I may add yet further, that some are immensely affected by the attitude of others toward them. If it is that of confidence, sympathy and interest, how often it acts as wonderfully inspiring and invigorative; whereas on the other hand, an atmosphere of doubt, of suspicion, of indifference half merging into aversion operates discouragingly, or destructively. Let a congregation be icy, or enclosed like a turtle in a shell of mistrust, and who can preach, and be at his best? Not all men are Boanerges, at least without the sympathy, and good will of those who sit around and in front.

"A selfish soul wraps about itself the mantle of complacency, and refuses to let the affection and love go out in broad and generous sympathy to others. Such souls go to their own place—unloved."

S. R. Fuller, at funeral of J. N. Matthews editor of Buffalo Express.

"He who lets his love and sympathy and great heart go out to others, multiplies himself, and inspires others with enthusiasm that makes the world better, and blesses the generations yet to come."

"And whatever is false in your love and mine, believe it, as you believe that the love of God is a consumming fire, (blessed be his name,) that, all that is false in our love, shall be consumed and perish in the brightness of the eternal love of God, as the light of the sun extinguishes the feeble blaze of the smoking faggot"—Ibid.

"You and I, dear friends, are not to be ennobled, and saved from that brute life, where our sensual snouts turn up the mire of corruption and spiritual decay,—until we take into our daily lives from him who is the life of our souls, the genius, the passion and the love, planted there by God." Ibid.

I enclose from "Afoot in Ireland" by Edgar L. Wakeman, a harrowing account of seemingly cruel injustice to the poor people of that country. What strange "inhumanity to man" of those who only for a moment have control of a little parcel of God's earth,—a control called ownership. What a glory and honor to be forebearing enough to the poor renters to let them live and do the best they can, but such is not the reasoning of some great landed proprietors. O. C.

My new-found friend was not an Irish sui generis. He was but one of a host of wretched beings whom Irish landlords have transformed into more than slaves; for slaves as chattels at least know the comforts of domestic beasts. For a quarter of a century past the great Irish land-owners of the West have mercilessly evicted tenants with a heartlessness and cruelty no pen can depict. The land is depopulated. In a 20 mile walk you may see from 500 to 1,000 tenantless holdings, the cabin roofs fallen in, the bare walls alone standing, as if an angry army had swept the face of the earth with fire and sword. A few sheep or a fewer black cattle browse about the spots that once were labor's, love's and hope's. In the great castles are the retinues, and the guarded agents. The owners, titled or untitled, are on the Riviera, or crowding parliament corridors in London seeking more rigorous laws for Ireland. And God alone knows where in all this sad business is such a thing as a human heart. But of my friend and his kind? Their families are those too terribly poor to do else than huddle in huts and fight for very existence itself. Eviction, depopulation of great estates, transformation of countless comfortable holdings into "grazing lands" as wild as when the barbaric kings had their helots and herds, have annihilated labor. There is no labor in much of the west of Ireland for those too poor to live and stay, and in whom all hope has fled that they may ever escape the life-long horror of their present existence. The very dens in which they are permitted to remain by these lords of the land, yield an income greater than that secured by many an American money-king. This rent, which covers the privilege of simply remaining, at the agents will, as "caretaker," in horrible discomfort, and the use of a piece of earth from an eighth to half an acre in area, is the slender hold these unfortunate people have upon the breath of life in a Christian land.

So out of these generous conditions furnished by the ruling classes, have come from 15,000 to 20,000 "Irish harvesters," who leave their wretched home in early spring, tramp to Dublin, Belfast, or some other eastern seaport town, and, after crossing the Channel, swoop down upon the English and Scotch rural districts, and there battle with the native peasantry in savage desperation for a share of the labor rightly wholly the latter's; returning as it were curse upon curse for the laws that have made them helpless and hopeless in their own land. Their belongings consist of the rags on their back, with usually a pair of hob nailed shoes, a sickle, scythe, or fork, either of which is wound with twisted rushes in marvelous patience and care, perhaps a cup or a can, and always a sort of covered stew-pan made of tin or sheet-iron. It is the habit to go in squads, for company's sake, for messing purposes, and, of chiefest importance, for mutual protection in defense or aggression in the ferocious encounters often waged with the English and Scotch farm laborers, whose very source of subsistence is thus constantly attacked by their brethren in misery from Ireland. But their wages are as nothing; they live outdoors like swine and upon the most loathesome food; and when the harvests are done work their way back to the Irish seacoast, picking up a bit of work here and there like ravenous beasts; finally cross the Channel, and again seek their lightless homes. If they have saved enough to pay their rent, and, with what ever little their families may have helped during their absence, exist from year to another in the most horrible manner known to man, they have truly done an almost superhuman task. I have seen these Irish harvesters landing in Dublin from the Channel ships, or being loaded into cars for the west of Dublin stations, cursed at, hustled, cudgeled and pounded worse than though dumb animals, and yet bearing all with the light of home saving shining from their gaunt faces and hollow eyes, in a way that wrung my heart until I could have shrieked in pain and protest. Where under the sky above us all, where within the civilization of which we boast, where within the knowledge—and I say it reverently—of the God that is, may be found such inexpressible devotion, such prolonged and incalculable suffering, such patience illimitable and supreme?

UNIVERSAL SALVATION, AND THE LARGER HOPE, OR A SECOND PROBATION. No. 3.

Now where do we find any promise of a future chance, or any hope of forgiveness beyond the grave, for those who have not sought forgiveness on this side, but have died in their guilt? If such promises are in the Book, let them be pointed out, for we have never seen them; but passages abound which prove the opposite view; that is, that the present life is the only season of probation, and that we shall be found in the judgment in the same state in which we were found at death. We will briefly notice a few of such passages.

Luke xiii. 24, 25, with marginal reading, seems to exclude all hope of another chance of salvation for those who have deliberately neglected the present opportunity by doing wickedly. "And he said unto them. Strive to enter in by the narrow door: for many I say unto you, shall seek to enter in, and shall not be able, when once the master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and knock at the door, saying, Lord, open to us; and he shall answer and say to you, I know you not whence you are." The clear sense of this passage is, that some persons will seek to enter the kingdom of God when it is too late, when the door is shut against them, when the Master will not acknowledge them as part of his family. When the door is open, they will not strive to enter it; when they have the golden opportunity, they neglect to improve it. While entrance is within their power, although the door is narrow, they do not strive; they do not make it a matter of "life-and-death struggle;" therefore, striving will be of no avail when the door is closed by the Master himself. This shows the importance of striving, or agonizing, or using all diligence in seeking salvation while life and probation continue.

Mark viii. 38: "For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this adulterous and sinful generation, the Son of Man also shall be ashamed of him, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels." Reference is made here to some whom it is said will have another opportunity. But reference is also made to the judgment, to the coming of the Son of Man; but no intimation is given that they will then have another offer of salvation. What hope can be held out then for those of whom Christ is ashamed? In this passage there is not the faintest hope of a second probation; not the slightest hint is given of such a thing.

John iii. 16: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." These words evidently relate to the finality of two classes of persons; one class mentioned, the other implied, believers and unbelievers. There is nothing beyond perishing for unbelievers. Clearly the final state of each class is referred to. But if there is nothing beyond perishing for those who believe not, there cannot be restoration in store for them.

John iii. 36: "But he that obeyeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." If the unbelieving or disobedient soul shall never possess life—eternal—but shall be cut off by the second death, and God's wrath shall abide on him, all hope of a second opportunity must be cut off. If another probation, and another offer of life, were given after death, it would imply the removal of wrath; there would be another manifestation of mercy.

John viii. 24: "He said therefore again unto them, I go away, and ye shall seek me, and shall die in your sin: whither I go, ye cannot come." These words, spoken to the unbelieving Jews who disputed the claims of Jesus to be the Messiah, clearly imply not only that they should die unforgiven, but that their unforgiven sin should bring ruin and destruction upon them. Read in the light of the context, the words plainly teach that unless they received Jesus as the Christ, they could not escape condemnation. The words unmistakably refer to the final condition of the unbeliever.

Gal. vi. 8: "For he that soweth unto his own flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he, that soweth unto the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap eternal life." In this passage the same finality for each class is referred to as in chapter iii. 16. Corruption, or destruction, the natural fruit of gratifying the fleshly nature, is the final end of such as sow to their flesh, as life everlasting is the final end of they who sow to the Spirit. There is no indication here of any thing beyond this. It is trifling with God's word, it is preferring our own view to the teaching of the Holy Spirit, to try to show that there is any restoration on the other side of this corruption, or destruction.

In closing, we would remark that both Universalism and the Larger Hope are doctrines fraught with danger. Their natural tendency is to lead men to defer their choice of religion. While this is specially the tendency of Universalism, it is also the tendency, in a great degree, of the Larger Hope, or a second probation. Let an ungodly sinner,—specially a man who has been brought up under religious teaching and influence, and who therefore has some thoughts and fears regarding the future,—imbibe the theory that another chance will be afforded him after death and before his final destiny is fixed, and the natural tendency of such a belief will be to foster a spirit of procrastination. He has his mind so far enlightened as to entertain a dread of dying without forgiveness of sin, but the love of sinful pleasures is so strong that he calms down his forebodings with the resolve to repent by and by, and then the delay is strengthened with the unbelief that should death come unawares, there may be, after all, another chance for him in the hadean state. We would not like to bear the responsibility of holding out such a chance to procrastinating sinners. The warnings of the Bible, the exhortations of the Bible, and the invitations of the Bible seem to be all based on the assumption that the present life is the only season of probation.

The Study of Prophetic Dates.

Let us examine the most usual and principal of the objections to the computation of prophetic dates in reference to the second advent of Christ, and we shall find them to be shadowy and vain: and that the duty of seeking insight into the seasons God has revealed, will only stand out in fuller and brighter relief.

1. We are often reminded that "secret things belong unto the Lord our God." Deut. xxix. 29. But when these words are perverted into an absolute prohibition to search into the prophecies, the rest of the verse supplies a conclusive answer. "The things that are revealed belong to us and our children." Surely every part of God's word is a revelation. To number it among the secret things which are best honored by neglect, is really to fling back the divine gift in the face of him who bestows it. He declares solemnly that all inspired Scripture is profitable for us, and that whatever is written therein is written for our learning. Who are we, that we should pretend to be wiser than God, or profess that some of his revealed sayings would have been more wisely kept back from us? as if our neglect were to remedy the alleged unwise communications of the Spirit.

2. The words of our Lord to his apostles have given rise to another scruple: "It is not for you to know the times and seasons which the Father hath put in his own power." Acts i. 7. These, however, when searched, are a warrant for an inquiry into the times and seasons of prophecy. The words are not general, as our version seems to imply, but special. "It is not for you to know the times and seasons which the Father hath reserved in his own power." There is here a direct allusion to a text familiar to the apostles, and which explains the true meaning of the answer. Daniel, chap. xii., had heard two angels put the inquiry, "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" The Son of God replied, with a solemn oath, that "It shall be for a time and times and half a time, and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished." The prophet then asks for further light, but receives the answer, "The words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end."

The answer, then, of our Lord to his apostles on earth is only the echo of his reply to the prophet in the vision. The event spoken of is clearly the same in both, "the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, and the end of the scattering of the holy people."

The "times" of delay before that event were sealed till the time of the end; until then the Father, by the lips of the covenant angel, had expressly reserved them in his own power. The disciples asked the time of that restoration. Our Lord, as if pointing them to the words of Daniel, introduces the very term employed in the vision, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power." As if he had said, The period of which you speak follows certain times of predicted delay; and these times and seasons have been reserved at present from a complete revelation, until the Father himself, at the time of the end, shall begin to unseal them."

We have thus a fourfold answer to this objection from Acts i. 7. First, the words are not general as to all times, but refer specially to the three times and a half which were to be sealed and closed until a later period. Secondly, they are not general as to Christians in all ages, but relate, with a marked emphasis, to the apostles themselves, and Christians in their day. "Such knowledge," our Lord implies, "may be hereafter given to others, but it is not for you. Another work is assigned you, to found the church and spread the gospel through the world." It is only when faith begins to decay that the Father will unseal the times of that blessed hope, which will be as life from the dead to the unbelieving world. And hence, thirdly, they are a secret assurance that there will be other Christians of a later age to whom these times will be unsealed, as the seventy years of Jeremiah were to Daniel himself, shortly before their close. Dan. ix. 2. Fourthly, there were other times not reserved which the apostles themselves might know, as the fall of Jerusalem and of the Temple in their own generation from the prophecy in Matt. xxiv. 34.

3. But this leads us to the words of Christ in the prophecy on the mount, which are often viewed as a clear censure on all prophetic inquiries: "Of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." Mark xiii. 32. How far the spirit of this caution extends may require much spiritual wisdom to determine; but conclusions loosely and rashly drawn from it have nothing to sustain them. First, the assertion is strictly true only of the time when our Savior spoke those words:—for, surely, with regard to the Son of God, they must have ceased to be true when he was risen and ascended into glory. Our Lord himself, since they were uttered, has received in his human nature immeasurable wisdom; and we may infer that his church also, though in measures infinitely short of his own, will receive from age to age an increase of knowledge. "At the time of the End many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Dan. xii. 2.

To ascertain our true place in the decrees of Providence, and the prophetic features of the generation in which we live; nay, even to make computations with caution, on the year when revealed numbers may expire, are justified by the examples of Scripture, and encouraged and commended by the Spirit of God.—Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.

The January number is the second beautiful holiday issue of Wide Awake for the season. It opens with a charming social novelty for the winter evenings, a violin recitation entitled "The Cricket Fiddler." The words for recitation are by Clara Doty Bates, the music with each verse for the violin is by Julius Eichberg, and the funny little orchestral crickets are by L. J. Bridgman. The opening story, full of the Christmas-tide spirit, is by Hezekiah Butterworth, entitled, "Good Luck." Another Christmas story "Such a Little Thing," is by the popular English writer, Mrs. L. B. Walford. Mrs. Jessie Benton Fremont has a sketch of early California, called "My Grizzly Bear." The serial stories are very readable: "Five Little Peppers Midway," by Margaret Sidney is full of delicious home-fun and young life, while the Trowbridge serial, "The Adventures of David Vane and David Crane," swings along in a jolly way; Trowbridge's New England families are the genuine people of the soil, and those in this story are real Yankees. "The Legend of William Tell" gives some excellent reasons for classing that popular episode of Swiss history among folk-tales. Mrs. Sallie Joy White tells in "Fire-Building" how the girls are taught to build a fire in the Boston Public Schools, which is exactly how a fire should be built in everybody's kitchen. Prof. Starr writes in "A Queer Bundle of Sticks" of the evidence that elephants once roamed over America. Mrs. Goddard Orpen relates the romantic incidents belonging with the famous Russian diamond, "The Orloff." "Minty-Melvina's Santa Claus," by M. E. M. Davis, is one of the best Christmas stories of the season. There are poems by Mrs. Whiton-Stone, Margaret Eytinge, Faith Cleveland Lee, and others. A very bright department has been added to the magazine called "Men and Things" full of contributed anecdotes, reminiscences, descriptions and "short talks." Wide Awake is $2.40 a year. D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

The Church of God meets for worship and searching the Scriptures every Sunday at 3 o'clock, p. m. All interested in Bible study are cordially invited to meet with us at [illegible] Avenue, San Diego, California.

The services of the "Church of the Second Advent," Montgomery Ave., west of Tenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa., are led each Sunday morning by the Pastor, Elder C. C. AGENTS WANTED.

We wish to engage some brother or sister in every locality to act as Agent to solicit subscriptions and look after the interests of "The Restitution." We know there are thousands of brethren in full sympathy with the truths we advocate who do not take our paper, and many of them can easily be induced to become subscribers if the matter is brought to their notice, and they are personally solicited. If some one in each locality where The Restitution now goes will take hold of this work we can have ONE THOUSAND new names added to our list immediately.

Who will take up this work with a will, and make it go? Show your paper to a brother who does not take it, or to a friend in whom you are interested, and ask him to try it for a year. It will not take much exertion or time to ask your neighbor to take our paper—and there are few who cannot afford to help the cause we are all laboring in that much—but we do not ask you to do even this for nothing. We will pay you a liberal Cash Commission for your work. Send for terms to agents and samples.

NOW is the time for the friends of The Restitution to show their good will by adding to our list, and thus enable us to give you a better paper. We will enlarge it, and give it a new dress of clear, bright type, just as soon as we possibly can. Would you like to see the change? Do you want to see it bad enough to induce you to try and get at least ONE new subscriber? It depends entirely on how much YOU are willing to do. Do not think this is meant for some one else than you, dear reader, for it is written for you INDIVIDUALLY—no one else is meant. The success of the "dear old Restitution" depends as much on YOU as it does on Editor or Publisher.

Who will send the largest list of new names?

DIE[illegible]

MAHON.—At Owens [illegible] 27, 1888, Bro. W. Ma[illegible] year.

He was born in Cecil Co., in [illegible] and lived there until 1824 when he moved to Baltimore. Until about fifteen years ago he was an active local preacher in the Methodist Church, but from the study of the Scriptures, the hearing of the preached word and the enlightenment of God's spirit on a willing mind, he became convinced of the truth, and was a humble, earnest and pure-minded follower of the Son of God. His acquaintance was a benefit to all who were intimate with him as well on account of his strong sense and clear judgment as his amiable disposition. Being of a sensitive nature and in the winter of his years, the close of his life was rendered somewhat sad by his isolated position, and the withdrawal and holding aloof of many of his old associates and acquaintances, for as he was, humanly speaking, alone in his neighborhood with regard to his faith, he was a marked man there, and some, according to the anecdotes he would sometimes narrate to me, went not a little out of their way to let him know it, a strong proof of what we all may note, that error always draws the line herself that divides her from truth and generally makes the mark distinct.

Our brother was stricken with paralysis on the 10th of Nov., was conscious to the end and passed away in peace. One of his last requests to his family was that one of his brethren should speak to those present at the funeral, but none being present, not having knowledge of the event because of adverse circumstances and slow mails, appropriate passages from the Scriptures were read and prayer was said by a Methodist clergyman. It may truly be said of our Bro. Mahon that he was a "man of peace," he lived at peace and he died at peace.

WITNESSES.

"I am working alone, and no one heeds!"
Who says so does not know
There are clear eyes watching on every side,
And wherever our feet may go.
We are "compassed about with so great a cloud,"
That if we could only see,
We could never think that our life is small,
Or that we may unnoticed be!

We seem to suffer and bear alone
Life's burdens and its cares
And the sighs and prayers of the heavy heart
Vanish into the air;
But we do not strive or work alone,
And after a victory won,
Who knows how happy the hosts may be
Who whisper a soft "Well done!"

O, do not deem that it matters not
How you live your life below;
It matters much to the heedless crowd
That you see go to and fro;
For all that is noble and high and good
Has an influence on the rest,
And the world is better for every one
Who is living at his best!

But even if but on eyes see not,
No one is [illegible]—
There are censures deep and [illegible]
As each may be deserved;
We cannot live in a secret place;
There are watchers always by;
For heaven and earth are full of life,
And God is ever nigh.

O, for a life without reproach,
For a heart of earnestness,
For self forgotten, for meanness slain,
For hands well used to bless!
God raise us far from the little things,
And make us meet to be
Skilled workers here in the place we fill,
And servants unto thee!

LESSONS FOR EARNEST STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.—No. 45.

THE HUMAN SOUL.

GOLDEN TEXT. Behold all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine; the soul that sinneth it shall die. Eze. xviii. 4.

This subject, from a Biblical standpoint, is somewhat complicated, principally owing to the irregularity of the translation from the original Hebrew [illegible]k terms rendered soul in our [illegible]ion. To obtain an intel[illegible] it is therefore imper[illegible]ference be made to [illegible] the Scriptures; but [illegible] the subject becomes [illegible] to the student.

[illegible]estion. Where in the Scriptures is the term soul, first used?

Answer. In Gen. ii. 7, where we read, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul."

Q. What constitutes the "living soul" according to this text?

A. It is created from dust, or earth, and animated by what is termed the "breath of life."

Q. Is the soul here referred to a material or immaterial being?

A. Material, because created from matter.

Q. What are the original terms here translated "Living Soul?"

A. The Hebrew words, Nephesh chaiyah.

Q. What is the literal meaning of these terms?

A. The exact meaning is "breath breathing," or a more free translation, breathing being, living creature, or living soul.

Q. Then there is nothing in this text to indicate that the soul is a separate entity from the body?

A. Nothing whatever! but on the contrary the creature formed of dust is declared to be a man, and this material man is termed a soul.

Q. Can you refer to other passages wherein these same Hebrew words occur?

A. In Gen. i. 21. where the terms are applied to whales and sea monsters generally; also in verse 24. The terms also occur in Gen. vii. 23; ix. 10, 12, 15, 16; and Lev. xi. 46.

Q. Then mankind are not the only "living souls?"

A. On the contrary, every "breathing creature" is a "living soul;" and in eleven out of the twelve instances where the Hebrew for "living soul" occurs it is applied to brutes; but strange to say, it is never so translated, being usually rendered "living creature."

Q. Is the conception of a soul as a person or being the only definition of the term warranted by the Scriptures?

A. The Hebrew word Nephesh, which is the term with only two exceptions from which the word soul is translated, in the Hebrew Scriptures, occurs seven hundred and fifty-three times, and is rendered soul four hundred and seventy-six times. The term has also forty-four other renderings in the King James' Version of the Old Testament.

Q. Name some of these renderings?

A. It is translated life, with its plural, one hundred and twenty times; person, thirty times; heart and mind, fifteen times each; creature, nine times; himself, eight times; body, seven times; yourselves, six times; dead and desire, five times each, etc.

Q. Is it a term peculiar to man?

A. On the contrary it is applied indiscriminately to every living creature or being, viz., God, Christ, man, cattle, fishes, beasts, fowls and reptiles, all are souls or nephesh, or are spoken of as having souls or nephesh.

Q. What is the New Testament equivalent of the word nephesh?

A. The Greek word psuche, its meaning being exactly the same; and with only five exceptions it is translated life with its plural, or soul with its plural.

Q. In the eight hundred and fifty-six times where these terms occur in the Old and New Testaments, are they ever qualified by the adjective immortal or any of its equivalents such as deathless, incorruptible, never-dying, or immaterial?

A. In not a single instance.

Q. It is never qualified by any adjective having the opposite meaning?

A. Seven times the term dead is applied to it; and in every instance it applies to human beings, and is rendered body. Lev. xxi. 11; Num. vi. 6; ix. 6, 7, 10; xix. 13; Hag. ii. 13.

Q. What Scriptural reasons have you for believing that souls (i. e. nephesh, psuche) are not immortal or immaterial?

A. 1. Because souls are made from material substance. Gen. ii. 7. 2. Because souls are born. Gen. xlvi. 15, 18, 22, 25, 26, 27. 3. Because souls eat and, drink, and experience hunger and thirst. Lev. vii. 18, 20, 21; Prov. xxv. 25; Deut. xii. 15, 20; Prov. vi. 30; Isa. xxix. 8. 4. Because souls have blood. Gen. ix. 5; Prov. xxviii. 17; Jer. ii. 34. 5. Because souls die. Gen. xvii. 14; Josh. x. 28, 30, 32, 35, 37, 39; Job vii. 15; Psa. xxii. 29; Eze. xiii. 19.

Q. From what other original words is the term soul rendered?

A. From the Hebrew nedibah, Job. xxx. 15, meaning willing, liberal or noble one; and neshamah, Isa. lviii. 16, meaning literally breath, or that which has breath.

Q. After examining every text in which the original words translated soul occur, how would you classify them?

A. Into three classes, viz., 1. Texts referring to the whole person (man or beast), as a breathing or living being. 2. Texts referring to the life (or soul, for the terms are interchangeable) of men or beasts. 3. Texts referring to the breath of all breathing creatures.

Q. Will these three classes cover every instance where the terms are used?

A. Without an exception.

Q. Then you can find no Scriptural authority to sustain the popular theological doctrine that all mankind are possessed of invisible, immaterial and immortal souls?

A. Not the slightest: but instead I find abundant proof that all mankind, in common with beasts, birds, fishes, reptiles and everything that has breath, are themselves souls; and that in soul-existence or life "Man hath no pre-eminence above a beast." Man must therefore look without instead of within for his hope of eternal existence.

Q. Can you cite any scholastic or orthodox authorities upon this subject?

A. Parkhurst says: "As a noun, nephesh hath been supposed to signify the spiritual part of man, or what is commonly called his soul. I must for myself confess that I can find no passage where it has undoubtedly this meaning." Hebrew Lexicon, p. 460.

Lange's Commentary, in notes on 1 Cor. xv. 45, reads as follows:

"The expression, 'Living Soul,' as used in Genesis, is often taken to indicate an order of being superior to the brute, and is the text of many an argument to prove the immortality of the soul. The incorrectness of this assumption will be readily seen by referring to Gen. i. 21, 24, and elsewhere, in which passages the words translated 'living soul' are applied also to the entire lower creation. They are used indifferently of man and beast to express animal life in general; and it is in this very light that the apostle uses them, as the course of his argument shows. Adam is spoken of as a living soul, not to prove his immortality, but rather his mortality."

Again, in Jamieson, Faussett & Brown's Commentary, in notes on 1 Cor. xv. 53, we read, "Here only, besides 1 Tim. vi. 16, the word immortality is found. Nowhere is the immortality of the soul distinct from the body taught; a notion which many erroneously have derived from human philosophers. Scripture does not contemplate the anomalous state brought about by death as the consummation to be earnestly looked for (2 Cor. v. 4) but the resurrection."

GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICE.

THE CHRISTIAN HYMNAL

The above is the title of a New Hymn Book just issued from THE RESTITUTION office, containing 160 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, printed on fine paper, from good clear type. Music on every page, followed by two to four sets of words that go to the music, making over 400 hymns. To this is added 23 pages of Hymns for Children to use in Sunday Schools or at home. We want some good brother or sister in every locality to take this work in hand and introduce it to the friends in your neighborhood. Will every minister of our faith please send us the name and address of some good, energetic worker in each congregation where he labors.

Price 35 cents each; 3 copies for $1.00; 8 copies for $2.00; 12 copies, $4.00. Special rates to congregations wishing larger quantities to place in churches, or to those who will act as agents and introduce the work in their neighborhoods.

To the Church of God in Christ Jesus, Greeting.

"How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?" Rom. x. 14 15.

In the preceding verses of this chapter, Paul very beautifully expresses his sympathy for those of his own nation who were zealous of the law. But who understood not the great salvation as brought to light by faith in the death and resurrection of the Christ. In Gal. iii. 27-28, he tells us that "as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." In Col. iii. 11, expresses the same thought of oneness of those who have put on Christ. What a solemn thought is this my brethren, my sisters. To put on Christ, to be buried with him by baptism unto death and to rise, to walk with him in newness of life! To be dead indeed unto sin but alive unto God, implies an entire change of conduct and character. When we put on the new name we are supposed to have laid aside the old man with his deeds, and to have begun a new and a better life. This better life if it be ours will manifest itself in our every-day lives, and as our beloved Master while here went about doing good so must we in our several walks of life. We cannot all do the same things, we are not all qualified to fill the same offices in the body of Christ. But if we have not the spirit of Christ we are none of his. He came, he lived, he suffered and he died, that we might be partakers of the joy that was set before him. This great salvation, the bringing up out of the death state into the life immortal has been made known unto us through the gospel, and the news is so good, the love therein manifested is so boundless that where it fills the soul, there comes with it an intense longing to make known to others the way of life.

Now that the General Conference is over, and many who were able to attend have been greatly blest and strengthened by the communion of saints; let us hope that the fire of the holy zeal has been rekindled in the Church of God through the length and breadth of our fair land and that she will arise in the strength of the Lord and in the beauty of holiness, and lift upon high the blessed banner of revealed truth, not only in our own land but in lands far away.

Yes, let us not forget far off lands. As in the days of Paul the cry came to him from Macedonia, come over and help us, so now it comes to us from the very same land, in the same spirit, for the same gospel. Now it comes from Brother Basil Stephenoff who is there alone, yet laboring for the enlightenment of his countrymen. He is a faithful laborer in the vineyard—an intelligent expounder of revealed truth. He is greatly in need of means to prosecute the work of the gospel. Oct. 14 he left his home for a missionary tour of six weeks having eight separate places on his tablet where he hoped to present the glad tidings of salvation to those who are eager to learn. Last winter our little band of believers here sent him a remittance in cash according as the Lord had prospered us. It was very gratefully acknowledged. Now I beg to ask the Church at large to unite to send him a Christmas offering according as you each have ability in the name of the Lord. However small the amount from each let us hope that the aggregate will be to him of material aid in translating reading matter which will tend to enlighten those people in the truth of Scripture, and also in aiding him to go from place to place to preach the glad tidings.

If indeed we be the body of Christ the One faith let us prove our faith by our works and not fear to deny the flesh some little luxury or desire, that we may give to the work of the Lord, even though it be an act of self-denial. Remember "It is more blessed to give, than to receive," and remember too, "The Lord loveth the cheerful giver." At best we are only stewarts, for "the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof."

All moneys sent to my address as given below, will be forwarded promptly with the name of contributor to Bro. B. Stephenoff. Any amount from 10 cents up will be gratefully received I am sure. Husband and I will give $1 00. Your Sister looking for our Lord's return.

The Coming Age—Its Nature and Proximity. By J. P. Weethee.

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the next approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $1.00. Send to this office for this work.

The Eastern Question

In its various phases,—Egyptian, British, Russian, Ottoman, Hebrew, American and Moslemic, by J. P. Weethee. The title of this book gives a good idea of its contents, and the reputation of the author is a guarantee of its worth. The subject as a whole, and in its different divisions is handled in a masterly manner, and the reader is convinced as he sees that the author has spared no labor in the study of the topics. The work is thoroughly done and any one who carefully reads the 610 pages of this book will be well repaid. It is just the book for the time in which we live. Cloth binding, clear, pleasant type to read, and good paper. Price $1.50. Send to this office; orders will now be promptly filled, as we have received an invoice of the book, and will send direct from here. The two books, "Coming Age" and "Eastern Question" if ordered together, $2.00.

Dr. Smith's Bible Dictionary.

A Dictionary of the Bible comprising its Antiquities, Biography, Geography and Natural History, with Sixteen full-page Engravings, numerous smaller illustrations, besides Maps of the Holy Land in the time of David, the time of Christ, and General Maps of the Countries mentioned in the Bible. It contains every name in the Bible concerning which anything can be said. It gives an account of each of the books of the Bible; explains the civil and religious institutions, the manners and customs of the Jews, as well as other nations alluded to in the Scriptures. This work by Dr. Wm. Smith, is just the "aid" to Bible study that you need, and every thorough student should place a copy on his table—you cannot read a chapter in your Bible without coming to some question on which you wish more information, and the best help you can get is Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary. Bound in cloth, 776 pages, price $1.50.

Fifty Years in the Church of Rome, by Chas. Chiniquy.

A handsome volume of 832 pages, printed in clear type, on fine tinted paper. It is bound in strong cloth, marbled edges, and gilt stamp on side and back. Contains two portraits (one representing him in priestly robes) of the author.

The book contains, among other startling revelations, thrilling chapters on, The Bible and the Priests of Rome; the Confession of Children; Festivities in a Parsonage; Protestant Children in Convents; the Trade in Masses; Home and Education; the Miracles of Rome; Murders and Thefts in Quebec; Papineau and the Patriots; Perversion of Dr. Newman; Grand Dinner of the Priests; the Abomination of Auricular Confession; Some of the Thousand Acts of Folly and Idolatry which form the life of a Monk; the Vow of Celibacy; the Impurities of the Theology of Rome.

We have secured a supply of this book, and can fill orders direct. If you wish to inform yourselves as to the inside working of Romanism, send us $2.25 and you will receive the book postpaid at once.

The Priest, Woman, and Confessional, by C. Chiniquy.

Painful and horrible are words too weak to express the things which he relates — things enough to rouse the stones to cry out against a system which brings forth such apples of Sodom and deadly poison to the Church, the family and society.

Cloth, 16mo, 296 pages, with Portrait and Biographical Notice of the Author; Price $1.00.

Words of Truth.

This neat, chaste and forcible little Quarterly will be sent to any address for five cents a year. No more effective means of evangelizing can be found. Orders may be sent to this office, or to John Donaldson, Secretary A. P. C. K., 856 Halsey Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

BOOKS.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Instructive Reading for the Young.

The above is the title of a book of over 350 pages, made up of short stories and other instructive reading, both poetry and prose, for the young. It is illustrated with thirty five engravings, is handsomely bound in cloth, and makes one of the most useful as well as pretty gifts for a young person that can be selected. Price $1.00

The Emphatic Diaglott. B. Wilson.

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlineary word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christianity have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on large paper. Cloth $2.50 Leather binding $3.50.

The Unspeakable Gift. J. H. Pettingell.

With an introduction by Mr. Edward White, of London, England.

This is a book of 300 pages, neatly printed and bound in cloth. This work conclusively proves the doctrine of life only in Christ, and we must heartily commend it. Price 50c.

The above price is for those who want this book for their own use. If you want to use one or more in missionary work, or for a gift to a friend, we will send them for only [illegible] cents each.

Cruden's Concordance—Unabridged.

This work is too well known to need commendation—every Bible student knows the value of Alexander Cruden's Concordance; bound in cloth, price $1 50

The Gospel of the Kingdom.

Accompanied by a series of Ten Discourses, by Wiley Jones. A book of 258 pages, clear type, cloth binding; price, 35 cents single copy, or 10 copies for $3.00. While devoted mainly to a systematic statement and defence of that gospel which the Lord Jesus and his apostles preached, this work contains also a prophetic-historical chart of the empires, and a key or outline of the Apocalypse. Pages 253 and 254. It shows the nature of future rewards and punishments, and points out the prophetic "signs" among the nations — Russians, British, Jews, Turks, and Roman Kingdoms which portend the speedy and personal coming of Christ to raise the dead, judge the world, destroy the wicked, and establish the glorious and eternal Kingdom of God on earth. For sale at this office.

Key Words, or the English and Hebrew and Greek Concordance to certain words which throw important light on great doctrines; a reference manual. By Wiley Jones. 175 pages, cloth bound, for 15c.

Translated from the Greek text of Constantinus De Tischendorf, and other standard critical authorities, by Chas. Gardner, M. A. A book of 75 pages, handsomely bound in cloth. Price 60 cts.

The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. By L. O. Thomas.

Title page,—"The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. Also an Epitome of the Great Salvation; and an Appendix including various other subjects, in brief.

The perfect unchangeable moral law is considered and shown to be the basis and spirit of the old Sinaitic law, now dead in its entirety. The law of Moses and law of Christ are compared and contrasted, and the relation of both to the old and new covenants is treated at some length. The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the state of the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 350 pages. Cloth bound, Price $1.00.

THE RESTITUTION

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortalizate as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Sermon by L. C. Chase, of Adrian Michigan, on Individual Responsibilities and Duties, etc.

WEDNESDAY EVE. Nov. 21st, 1888.

Dear Brethren:

It is seldom that I speak from a text, but this evening, I have seen fit to introduce my remarks from the general Epistle of James; 25th verse.

"But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and cometh therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the word, that man shall be blessed in his deeds."

Law has been defined as a rule of action. When we go back to consider God's dealings with humanity, we see that whatever God has seen fit to set forth by precept, whether it be one commandment or one hundred; whether it be designed for one man or the millions, that for the time, and for the people, and for the age in which it was given constituted God's law. The only historical account which we have of God's law in the beginning, shows it all couched in one plain precept, and, yet there is one very important truth which we learn from the history given, that is, that precept and obligation go hand-in-hand,—they are indissolubly connected,—one cannot exist without the other. When you tell me, that there is an overruling providence; that there is first great cause. When you tell me that there is God, you admit at once of the responsibility to, and a right which that supreme being may exercise in the government of those who are dependent upon him. God has seen fit in ages past, by precept thus to deal with His children, thereby developing a character that he could approve. It is impossible for man to study the teachings of the Almighty God and acquaint himself with his precepts and requirements, without developing a character.

Wherever precepts have been issued, emanating from an infinite mind the result has been obligation at once, on the part of the one to whom the precept was given, and as a result of this, a character has been developed: either a character that God could approve, or else a character that God did disapprove. The law given to Adam in the Garden of Eden, was just as effectual in developing a character as all the laws issued from the mountain top. Adam's character was just as fully developed when he transgressed the one precept recorded in Genesis, "Thou shalt not touch it," as though he had transgressed the entire decalogue. Another thought now comes to my mind, which is this. As I go back over the history of mankind, I find that in all ages, certain propensities have prevailed in the minds of humanity. The first one of these which I notice, is this: When a responsibility devolves upon man, if that responsibility involves an action that is in any sense repugnant to him, the idea of shifting the responsibility and placing it elsewhere, is the first thought that enters the mind of the responsible creature. We see along the entire line so far as history runs, that this has been developed in instances that show to our mind the utter propensity on the part of mankind, to exercise his own will. God had no sooner given man his law, no sooner had man transgressed that law, no sooner was he called to an account for his misdeeds than a shifting of responsibility, was the character developed. "The woman that thou gavest to be with me, gave to me, and I did eat." There was not a single excuse set forth by the man that he had not understood this law: it was plain and palpable in each and every respect. Adam could not say to God that his law was so darkened that he could not understand it, but simply "The woman that thou gavest to be with me, gave to me, and I did eat." Here this propensity was developed in the very first character that ever existed. Come now to the second generation.

Here we find two characters portrayed, both individuals being responsible to the same God. One developed a character of obedience: the other of disobedience. Responsibility inhered in the commandment issued to them by Jehovah. One obeyed, the other disobeyed. The sinner was brought before the tribunal of the father, there to be judged. "Where is thy brother?" "I know not," says the man. "Am I my brother's keeper? Am I to look after this, my brother?" Is that a duty that belongs to me. "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground" Shifting responsibility again.

A little further in the history of man, and we find one high in authority, King Saul. A man of noble bearing and aspect. God had said unto him, "Go thou and destroy Amalek; do not leave a soul." Saul went and killed all the Amalekites, but he took their king Agag and the best of the sheep, and of the oxen and of the fatlings, and of all that was good. He did not do what his Lord had requested. And God said to Saul, through his prophet, "Wherefore didst thou not obey the voice of the Lord, but didst fly upon the spoil and didst evil in the sight of the Lord?"

"I have obeyed the voice of God," says Saul; "and I have gone the way of the Lord, and brought Agag, the King of Amalek and have utterly destroyed the Amalekites. I have brought the sheep, and the cattle and the fatlings home for a sacrifice unto the Lord." A little further in the history of events, God says to another prophet, "Go to that great and wicked city of Nineveh, and cry against it, for yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be destroyed." Did he go? No. He went down to the seaside an[illegible]ook a ship and went in the opposite direction. He did not want to go to this great and proud city, and there meet the opposition that perhaps he would have to meet. But God found means to bring the man back again. And said, "Go and prophesy against the city of Nineveh, that it shall be destroyed." Jonah now proclaims that this great city shall be destroyed in forty days, then he goes outside of the city and gets in a position where he can watch, as much as to say, I am going to see if this is fulfilled, and he sits there, but God wanted to learn that man a lesson. I tell you God learns people lessons sometimes, and sometimes very severe lessons. This man had a severe lesson. Here he is watching this great and mighty city to know if its destruction is a fixed fact or not. I show you this to illustrate how law developes character. Not only one character, but a diversity of characters. Here he sits watching this great city. God prepares a gourd which grew up in the night and wound its tendrils over the head of Jonah, and in the meantime God prepared a worm, and at the opportune moment, God had this worm destroy the vine, and now the burning rays of the sun began to beat on the head of this rebellious man, who was almost defying God Almighty. Jonah felt very bad about the gourd because he had lost its shelter. He felt very sorry. Well the time of forty days went past, and Nineveh was not destroyed. Now says he "Take, I beseech, my life from me; for it is better for me to die than to live." I have no interest in the future. I knew that you were a gracious God: I knew that this city would repent, and that you would forgive them. What was the matter with Jonah? He had a reputation at stake: he was a prophet of the Lord. He had told these people a prophecy which had been fallacious.

Jonah said "I knew all this. I knew they were going to repent." "Now," says God, "look here Jonah, Dost thou well be angry for the gourd." And Jonah said, "I do well to be angry, unto death." Because it sheltered him, and there was the whole case. Jonah was the man interested. Pure selfishness came to the front. And he would rather have the city of Nineveh with its six score thousand souls destroyed, than to have his reputation destroyed. Here is a purely selfish character brought to light under the responsibility that God had placed on him, and which he had failed to discharge. Making an excuse and telling how things ought to have been done. All this developed a character. For what? For shifting the responsibility somewhere else.

And Saul did just what a great many Christians of the present time do. Covered up a bad transaction under the guise of Christianity, and love for the cause of Christ. Those cattle that ought to have been slain, he brought down with him for a sacrifice unto the Lord. Did you ever know where God passed by an action of this kind? And God said to Saul through his prophet, "I will not return with thee, for thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, and the Lord hath rejected thee from being king over all Israel."

"The Lord hath rent the kingdom of Israel from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbor of thine, that is better than thou." We might follow this line of thought at some length. These Bible characters show that the propensities of the human family have been coming to the surface ever since man has existed on this earth. But now we come to the question of what is demanded of us. Character has been developed in the past: and character is being developed today. Your character and mine is being developed, under the directions of an Infinite and all-wise God that doeth all things well. There has been no dispensation in which character has not been developed for good or for evil. Now I say, what does God require of us? What obligations are there resting upon us? I am not here tonight to tell you of all that is resting upon us, but I want to tell you of just a few of the many duties which devolve upon us, and under what obligation we are resting tonight, for the discharge of those duties.

"I believe fully and freely, without hesitation or mental reservation, that God demands of every one of his people full and complete consecration. Is that too broad? What do you think about it brethren? Does God want you to reserve a little portion of yourself or what you have for selfish ends? Has he ever set forth that kind of a theory? How was it with the two who promised they would give all they had to their Lord, and gave a part, and put a part in their pockets? What was that? Covetousness. Yes covetousness and nothing more. But what did the Lord say to them? Why hast thou lied unto the Holy Ghost." God has always made these demands of full and complete consecration. I know it has come to that in the nineteenth century, that we talk a great deal about the goodness of humanity. We talk about good Christians and doctors and lawyers, but I tell you I feel tonight, my dear brethren, as Mrs. Browning does. It is satirical, I understand that but it is true in a great degree.

I am not here tonight to set up a standard of righteousness for any man, for I tell you my dear brethren and sisters that this is a failing of the nineteenth century.

Mrs. Browning says, "There is none good save God (said Jesus Christ) and if he in the first creation week called creatures good, the devil ever afterward has done it and his imps, the knaves who win and the fools who lose. The words grown dangerous. In the middle ages I think it was they called malignant fays and imps, good people. And who has not known good wives as chaste as Potiphars (or nearly so) and mothers, very good indeed who would use a child to better an intrigue. Good statesmen who for a theory risked a cause. Good popes who brought all good to jeopardy. Good Christians who sat still in easy chairs and damned a general world for standing up. Now may the Good God pardon all good men."

Now my brethren, all good men, I care not how much goodness people may possess, there is none good says Jesus, save God. God demands of us a consecration morally mentally, socially, financially, and any other ally. I say it is a full and complete consecration. Now let us see. We have an infallible rule by which we can try all men and that is God's word. Dear brethren I am going to try you a little tonight, and I want to say that when I quote a standard of righteousness from my Bible, I include as one amenable to that standard, and as a being for the development of character, L. C. Chase, just as much as any of my congregation. I want to accept the standard, and shall I for any cause lower that standard? I want to tell you, my dear brethren, that one of the greatest evils of the nineteenth century, is to lower the standard of righteousness. to meet the wants of humanity. The apostle says, as many as walk according to this rule, "Peace be on them." What was the standard? A full and complete consecration, mentally, spiritually, morally, socially, financially. Now I am going to try you: I am going to try myself. I am talking to you as laymen. I am going to include myself. What are the injunctions mentally? "Put off concerning the former conversation the old man which is corrupt according to the deceitful lust," Eph. iv. 22. You say that is very fine doctrine. I put that off years ago. Let me tell you you have done only one half of that which is demanded of you. What is the other half? "And that you put on the new man, which after God, is created in righteousness, and true holiness." It is very nice to quote the first part of that passage. It is still better for us, that we should put off concerning the former conversation, the old man. I want to say there is another painful habit existing among the professed Christians, that is this: they will prove just what they desire to prove, by the Bible. I say you may pervert, distort, change the Scriptures, but you do it only to your own destruction. Here we have the mental consecration. Putting off the old man which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts. And there is something more to do. We must put on the new man. Which after God, is created in righteousness and true holiness. Do not stop dear brethren at the half done work, when you have separated yourself from that which is contaminating, then cloth yourself with righteousness and holiness. Not with your own righteousness; that is filthy rags, but with the righteousness of God. Then God accepts the consecration.

Let us now try the rule for moral consecration. We have tried the rule that governs it. To that individual who has made a full consecration, God says through the Apostle Paul, "Peace be on him." But remember you must not stop at one half of the work. "Therefore," says the apostle, "put away all lying." That is good advice isn't it? There is a grand truth there. What will you do after that? Begin again. You have done just half of the work now. Half your consecration has been made to the Lord. "Speak every man truth with his neighbors."

Did you ever think that there are more ways than one that a man can lie to his neighbor? I must tell you a little story. I should not tell it as I am in a Quaker city, but it is so very apt. I love and respect the Quakers, notwithstanding the great difference which we entertain upon religious opinions.

The old Quaker had a horse to sell. He was very anxious to sell the horse. A man came along and said to the Quaker "Is your horse true?" "Well," says the Quaker, "thee wouldst be pleased to see him draw." That was enough, and the stranger took the horse. He soon hitched him to a load but the horse stood still. He was like some men, some I have known, he was established. So the man went back to the Quaker and said, "I have brought your horse back. I do not want this horse. You said this horse would draw, and that I would be pleased to see him draw. "Well," said the Quaker, "I said thee would be pleased to see him draw, so I would have been, but he would never gratify me."

I tell you there is more than one way to falsify. You by your actions, may speak in tones louder than thunder to an untruth. Here is the moral consecration. At all times speak the truth with our neighbors. If you have any property to sell, tell just what that property is. Make no moral reservations, but a full and complete consecration to the Lord.

Socially. Here comes another test. Let all bitterness and wrath and anger, and clamor and evil speaking be put away from you with all malice." What do you think about that dear brethren? I want to say just a little right here, in regard to the actions of my brethren and my sisters, in relation to their evangelical work, with those who differ with us. I want to give a little advice here, and I have been taking this advice for a number of years. I used to be in this same line of thought with other people. It has become a saying in the part of the country where I live, and there is a story that illustrates it, in regard to the Advent people and the denomination called Disciples. Well what is it? An old man came into the neighborhood and he put up his chart. He was a phrenologist. He went through his theory of phrenology and set up his ideas. He had portrayed on the wall the face of Alexander Campbell. "There," says he, "was a man who gathered around him a class of men who were constantly in a debate. A class of men who could do nothing else but debate." They are the same class found among these Advent people. No sooner is one of them raised from baptism than he wipes the water from his brow and asks is there any one here wants to debate? What is the social consecration? That "all bitterness and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking be put away from you with all malice." Now brethren and sisters, I care not what a man's religious proclivities may be, I am forced to believe that man is an honest man. Every man and woman in this world, with honest religous convictions, is entitled to respect. Believe a man is honest until he is proven to be dishonest. When you bring to me a man who says "My eternity hangs on my faith, I am forced under any circumstances to believe that man to be honest, if I believe that he believes anything at all.

You and I have a duty to do in this direction. But I want to say to you, that today, with all the glorious truths that we possess, we are a respected people. Let us present all our grand truths. Be ready at all times to give an answer and a reason to those who ask it of you. Fight it out, not "if it takes all summer," but then and without delay. Push your convictions. But be ye kindly affectionate, toward those who honestly differ with you. You may carry this beyond the debate; beyond the investigation. You may carry it into your homes, and in every single walk of life.

What is the financial consecration? I say it is demanded of every single one. I am not going to round corners. I am talking to you. I am talking to my brothers and sisters who are assemble here. I want to awake in you an interest, so that you shall go to the several homes or churches that you represent; that you shall so lay before them that which is their duty in this direction, as to cause them to take heart in this great work, and grasp with a firm hand the powerful lever of truth, with such an earnestness of purpose that if possible they will move the world. Paul says as many as are willing to be tried by this rule, "Peace be on them." I thank God that I have found some people in Philadelphia who are willing to be tried by this rule. "Let him that stole, steal no more." That is a grand saying. That is splendid. That embodies the right kind of doctrine. Here is a positive injunction for consecration to the Lord. "Let him that stole, steal no more."

But now I come to something else. "But rather let him labor, working with his hands, the things that are good, that he may have to give to him that lacketh." Work that you may have money. That is pretty good Scripture, isn't it? Work that you may have money to buy houses, and things to satisfy the carnal man. That is home made. Were I to measure the standard of righteousness tonight, by that which the professed Christians of the world are walking by, that Scripture ought to read just as I have last quoted it, but it does not happen to so read. Men are working and slaving themselves, and what is to be accomplished. For what are you laboring, let me ask you? What is the main purpose you have in view? You are wasting your resources of physical organization, your strength and manhood. What do you expect to get out of this world? I will tell you what I have gotten of this world. I have lived here forty years, and I expect to live until I go out of it. I have gotten what I wanted to eat and drink, and a shelter. That is all I have gotten out of this world. I have been laboring ever since I can remember, either mentally or physically, one line or the other. I have been an active man all my life, and I say tonight, that all I have gotten out of this world and this life on earth, is that which I have eaten and drunken, except the social relations which I entertain. So far as our physical organization is concerned, you and I can get for our labor just what we want to eat and drink. We brought nothing into this life and we can take nothing out of it. You cannot give a ransom then for your own soul. Paul never told a Christian to change his vocation. Whatever vocation you are occupied with; whatever is profitable, that he says labor in, and whatever you may have to give, give to him that lacketh. Why, you say, that is all right. I am charitable. A man came along the other day and I gave him ten cents; he was poor and he needed it. Here you are dolling out a poor miserable pittance to one that lacketh when "God loves a cheerful giver." What did one dear brother say last evening? He showed those ancient characteristics. He brought out the noble character of Jacob, but there was one thing he forgot about, that was, that Jacob did not come up to the standard. He stood off in a sort of "You keep me in this way and bring me to this land and I will give you one-tenth" manner. But Jacob became troubled, and he said "let us go up to Bethel." I think there are some of us who had better go up to Bethel. I say now, will the rule for giving apply to us as a people? That is a positive question, and I trust that you will meet it fully and frankly. I am not here to talk about myself. I am not here to tell of what I have done, but I want to bring to your mind a few of the faults that exist among us as a people. We do so much love the truth. We have truth that is eternal. But we want some one else to do the work. Is there any rule in this line or direction? O, yes. Is there a rule that applies today brothers? Let us see. "God has so ordained that they who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel." What did that mean? That those who go forth proclaiming the glad news of salvation to the hungry ones; going into the fields where the grain is ripe, should be cared for. A little while you preach and then go back to business. What is the trouble? Winter is coming on and the preacher has not things necessary to a comfortable existence. You have had to turn aside from the work of the Lord, and with your own hands labor for those things which are needful, and labor for those who are in your household. If you do not provide for your own household, you have denied the faith. You are worse than Bob Ingersol. Worse than an infidel. And who is chiefly to blame for all this? Let us see. Now I will carry you back to another historical event. There was a man after God's own heart. I have a great degree of reverence for that man, whose life in other respects was spotless, and when we look back to David's transgression, we can understand what the apostle means when he says "Lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us. But he transgressed the law of God. God sent his prophet to him. And that prophet rehearses a little story so simple and so plain. "There was a man in a certain city, and he had just one little ewe lamb, yet he loved it. He had raised it; he had fed it; he had cherished it, and he had protected and he loved that little lamb." But there was another individual who saw the lamb and coveted it. He took it forcibly from the man who nourished it. David says, "Where is that man; just show him to me, and he shall surely die." Brethren, you ministers who stand before me, I want in thought to place every one of you in line here. Just imagine yourselves standing side by side down this hall, with L. C. Chase at the head as the chief of all.

I will point to every one in that line and say "Thou art the man." Brother Dwiggins you are responsible for this work. Brother Chaplin, with all respect for your grey hairs and your tottering step, and the love and respect that we all have for you, You are the man! L. C. Chase, with the full vigor of manhood, who stands before you, Thou art the man! What is the trouble brethren? It is needless to ask you that question for you know that we are all at fault in this matter. I say the preacher's confession is good for the soul, too, and to make a long story short, you and I have not exercised the prerogative and duty that has been resting on us to educate our people. We could preach good news of the coming of Christ. I love to tell my own congregation how they may be saved, of the goodness and mercy of an infinite Father. But I do not like to stand up and say brethren and sisters, haven't you got a few shillings for the Lord? I do not like to do that. And here is a duty to educate our congregations that has devolved upon us as God's ministers. Can you and I stand up tonight and say that we have not shunned a responsibility? Nay, I cannot. I have not in this matter declared all the counsel of God. I do not know what would have been the outcome, had I freely and fully declared all the counsel of God. It is my duty to tell you this, and I want you to turn it to your own account; as Paul told his brethren. How much will stand to your account when the balance sheet is struck. How much will stand to your credit? Are you responsible my brother. There is another. Come out; confession is good for the soul. I know that we have allowed many of our brethren to glide smoothly along in this line of thought. There is one song very dear to them, but when the [illegible] they [illegible] "Sin has left a crimson stain, [illegible] it white as snow." Jesus paid it [illegible]

That is a very nice song, but I want to tell you that you have a duty that you owe to your brethren and to the Lord. When I go from this place, I have work to do in this direction, I am not going to do it for my own sake, but for the sake of others I am going to do this work that lies before me; to educate the congregation that I have, and the first sermon I will preach will be in this line of direction. You brethren have a duty to do just as much as myself. There are those always ready to say, There is the Scripture "feed the flock." I presume it is very consoling to those quoting it. "Not of filthy lucre, but of a willing mind. When the king comes, you will receive a crown of unfading glory." No doubt that is very consoling to some people, but let me ask that brother are you your brother's keeper? If so let me say that "God ordained that those who preach the gospel, should live of the gospel." I need not go further. I think we understand one another upon this thought. I will then close with this thought. Solomon said of making many books there is no end and much study is a weariness to the flesh, and after setting forth his proverbs to a great extent, sums up the whole matter. And I in conclusion, sum up the duty of every one present, in the language of the wise man. O, fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man. Amen.

SCHOLL'S FERRY, ORE.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed you will find one dollar for which you will place to my credit for THE RESTITUTION. I thank you for sending me this good paper when my time was out. I think I cannot do without it. I take delight in reading the letters written by the dear ones scattered abroad in the land. It makes us acquainted with each other; it reminds one of a good old social meeting, where all can tell the old, old story of Jesus and his love, if we will put our trust in him and are led by his word. His word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path. I want to be faithful and be ready when our Master comes and then he will claim me as one of his children. Hoping God may bless you in health and strength, I remain your sister in hope of immortality.

M. C. MILLER.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

Plymouth, Indiana, Jan. 23, 1889.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, Post Office, County, and State plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind.

Remittances should be sent by Bank Draft Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk; money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

As there are five Wednesdays in January our next paper will bear date Feb. 6. We are working in delayed manuscripts as fast as possible.

From a late Montreal paper we learn that another piece of rock has broken off the precipice at the Horse Shoe Falls perceptibly changing the shape of the cataract at that point. The jar was felt at the Table Rock House though comparatively slight. The form is now that of a double horse shoe.

C. Chiniquy, author of "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome," has decided to settle down in Montreal for the remainder of his days. He recently made the statement at Mount Hope, Ont., that he had succeeded, in his personal efforts, in so enlightening 35,000 Roman Catholics that they had abandoned Romanism. Within the last six months he says he has added 1,000 to that number, and within the last few days, even, he has had the gratification of receiving the names of some prominent persons as converts to Protestantism in Toronto. His book ought to have a wide circulation.

From the Pomona Times-Courier, a late California paper we clip the following:

A Pasadena dispatch of January 10th says: "Owen Brown, a son of the famous John Brown, of Ossawattomie, was buried here today. He was 74 years old; and has been living in this vicinity a quiet and uneventful life for the past seven years. He was the last [illegible] the Harper's Ferry affair in [illegible] and was one of his father's lieutenants at the battle of Ossawattomie. The funeral was largely attended. Five clergymen pronounced an eulogy over the deceased, his father and the events that have made the Brown family famous."

THE DEATH-STATE.

It is quite probable that the book of Job is the oldest written composition in the world. As such it is extremely valuable, and especially as giving us a knowledge of the religious views held by those living in the early ages, as well as of the ritual observances connected with their worship. Speaking of this book and its teachings concerning the nature and destiny of man, Dr. Good says:

"The tradition, indeed, of a future state of retributive justice seems to have reached this part of the world (the East), and to have been generally, though perhaps not universally, accredited; but the future existence it alludes to is that of the resurrection of the body, and not a survival of the soul after the body's dissolution. The oldest work that has descended to us from this quarter (and there is little doubt that it is the oldest, or one of the oldest works in existence,) is that astonishing and transcendent composition, the book of Job; a work that ought assuredly to raise the genius of Idumea above that of Greece, and that of itself is demonstrative of the indefatigable spirit with which the deepest as well as the most polished sciences were pursued in this region, during what may be comparatively called the youth and dayspring of the world. Yet in this sublime and magnificent poem, replete with the learning and wisdom of the age, the subject before us is merely as I have just stated it, a traditionary belief of a future state of retributive justice, not by the immortality of the soul, but by a resurrection of the body."

The correctness of Dr. Good's statement will appear obvious by formally quoting a few statements from the language of Job himself. On the gloomy death-state he remarks: "Are not my days few? cease then, and let me alone, that I may take comfort a little, before I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death; a land of darkness as darkness itself; and of the shadow of death, without any order, and where the light is as darkness." Again he describes the death-state as one of complete inactivity to be ended only when a great change shall take place in the heavens, and ended too only by the sovereign call of God himself. "Man dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep. O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave, that thou wouldst keep me secret, until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldest appoint me a set time and remember me! If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call and I will answer thee: thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands."

Again he says: "If I wait the grave is mine house: I have made my bed in the darkness. I have said to corruption, thou art my father; to the worm, thou art my mother and my sister. And where is now my hope? as for my hope, who shall see it? They shall go down to the bars of the pit, when our rest is together in the dust." They, i. e., my hopes, expire with me, they are buried with me. Once more he expresses himself in a most remarkable manner: "O that my words were now written! oh that they were printed in a book! that they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever! For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me."

As we have seen in a previous quotation that Job utterly despaired of any restoration to health, or of any vindication in this life—hopelessly sinking into the grave—he had but the one hope left, the hope of a future life. As to the exposition given by some critics, that Job expected his vindication and recompense "out of, or without the body" as explanatory of the words "in my flesh," i. e., "out of my flesh," it is well remarked; "It was his body that chiefly suffered; the resurrection of his body, therefore, alone could vindicate his cause; to see God with his own eyes, and in a renovated body would disprove the imputation of guilt cast on him because of the sufferings of his present body. That this truth is not farther dwelt on by Job, or noticed by his friends, only shows that it was with him a bright passing glimpse of Old Testament hope, rather than the steady light of gospel assurance; with us this passage has a definite clearness, which it had not in his mind. The idea in "Redeemer" with Job is "vindicator," redressing his wrongs; also including at least with us, and probably with him, the idea of the predicted Bruiser of the serpent's head. Tradition would inform him of the prediction. Foster shows that the fall by the serpent is represented on the Temple of Osiris at Phylæ; and the resurrection on the tomb of the Egyptian Mycerinus, dating 4000 years back. Job's sacrifices imply sense of sin and need of atonement."

So severe were the sufferings of this eminent personage of the Patriarchal times that he pronounced the direst maledictions on his natal day and ardently wishes it had been his doom to have had the day of birth the day of death. On the supposition that this had been his fate, he sets forth what would have been his condition in the death-state in language most sublimely though awfully descriptive. Had he then died he says: "Now should I have lain still and been quiet; then had I been at rest, with kings and counsellors of the earth, which built desolate places for themselves, or with princes that had gold, who filled their houses with silver, or as an hidden untimely birth I had not been; as infants which never saw light. There the wicked cease from troubling; and there the weary be at rest. There the prisoners rest together; they hear not the voice of the oppressor. The small and great are there; and the servant is free from his master." Job most evidently believed that the death-state was a state of calm, undisturbed, unconscious rest. The infant peacefully slumbers in the dust.

"Its cradle rocked it near its neighboring tomb."

The little hands have been folded over a stilly heart, and in the silence of a narrow grave the tiny eyes are closed in the darkness of lasting repose. That sleep will stretch on through the many days and nights, through the weeks, the months, the years, and that little heart will know neither joy nor sorrow. Spring may come with its bloom, and autumn with its falling leaves of yellow and crimson, but the sunshine that tints the flower, as it opens from the expanding bud, and colors the frost-smitten leafage, will send no rays down to the sleeper in the little coffin. The most exalted ruler, and the wisest counsellor find that,

"Paths of glory lead but to the grave."

Death's pale hand removes the crown and the garland, and the monarch descends from the throne, and the senator leaves the council chamber, and "their rest is together in the dust." In that grave where infants sleep, where kings, counsellors and princes lie, the wicked "cease from troubling." The chain, the prison, the rack, the fiery furnace, can torment no more. Death, that took the crown from the proud monarch, took off the manacles from the limbs of the captive and the slave. The cruel lash cuts into the fainting, quivering flesh no more.

"Past is all the cold world's scorning." The weary one has laid down all the burden of care, anxiety, and trouble; "the anguishing head is at rest," and the heart-throbs are all quieted. It is not of the grave, as a mere burial place for the body, that he is speaking. He uses the word sheol, Heb. שאול, that comprehensive term that comprises all that personal ruin and utter deprivation of all conscious existence to which death reduces all its victims. For proof we give all the places in this wonderful book where the original term occurs. Job vii. 9; xi. 8; xiv. 13, 16; xxi. 13; xxiv. 19 and xxvi. 6. Our readers will notice that the word is rendered into English by the terms, hell, grave and pit. One that dies is in this state of entire dissolution, decomposedness, corruption, whether buried in the ground or not. One may sink in the sea, be placed in a grave or tomb, be burned to ashes, or decay above ground, or even be embalmed as a mummy, yet each and every one is alike in the death-state. O, what is human life at the best?

"This is the state of man! Today he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope! tomorrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honors thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And, when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his shoot,
And then he falls."

Some are carried from the womb to the grave; some are of days few, and years swift,—their morning sun darkens into the shadows of night; the gates of death open for some in their full strength; and gray hairs go down into the gloomy regions of the king of terrors, but all, all go to the "land of forgetfulness." Psa. lxxxviii. 10–12.

"Sheol cannot praise thee;
Death cannot celebrate thee;
They that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth.
The living, the living, he shall praise thee as I do this day;
The father to the children shall make known thy faithfulness."
Isa. xxxviii. 18, 19.

"In those lone, silent realms of night,
Shall peace and hope no more arise?
No future morning light the tomb,
Nor day-star gild the darksome skies?
Shall Spring the faded world revive?
Shall waning moons their light renew?
Again shall setting suns ascend,
And chase the darkness from our view?"

The clouds that hang in deepest gloom over humanity reflect gleams of light from a distant sunshine; those rays of brightness are braided into the beautiful rainbow of hope in the chilly mists. In the latter days the heavens will be rifted, and the parted skies will reveal the Savior, "The Redeemer will stand on the earth." In human nature transfigured into incorruptibility; in renewed being vitalized into deathlessness, the redeemed will then and thus with their "own eyes," and "for themselves," see God "out of their flesh," in resurrection glory. This was the Patriarchal hope, this is the gospel hope, this is our hope.

Sheol is not Paradise—Death is not a Redeemer.

"It doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." To see him as he is, is to see him in his resurrection glory; and to be like him, we must be in the resurrection glory also. The Patriarchs were right that the glory-lands are beyond the death-state—beyond sheol.

Thank-Offering Corner.

In compliance with a request we start this "Thank-Offering Corner." A number of poor people are yet to be supplied with our paper for 1889. These have been paid for in the past only partially, and as we are not willing to stop any of them, we hope our friends will come forward with "Thank-Offerings" so that all may be supplied.

Twenty Days in Palestine.

I have already reported our arrival at Jaffa. We had hired Rolla Floyd to take us a twenty-days' trip through the land. He entertained us the night of our arrival at his own house, near the Jerusalem Hotel, and near the German colony. Who is Rolla Floyd? A Maine Yankee, who came here with his wife in 1866, a member of an American colony, led out here by G. J. Adams, of Newark, N. J. Nineteen adults died. Adams returned to America, as did others; but Floyd stayed, and has for many years followed the calling of a dragoman or guide through this country. He took Gen. Grant, wife, and son on a two weeks' trip to Jerusalem and the Jordan Valley. Many other noted travellers have traversed the country under his direction. He was at one time Cook's agent, but he now acts for Gaze and for himself. Cook once thought no one could equal Floyd as a dragoman. Now nothing is too hard for Cook's agents to say against him. But Floyd has the confidence of the people generally, and treated us with perfect fairness and Christian courtesy. He speaks Arabic fluently, and of course is well up in the Yankee dialect, which was a matter of great delight to us. He also floated the American flag over his tents. He is a very able Bible student, and has all the necessary texts and references at his tongue's end. He has for a lieutenant Demetrius N. Domain, of Jerusalem, who speaks readily seven different languages. Demetrius accompanied us through our entire trip. Mrs. Floyd is in rather poor health, but she received us with great cordiality, and enjoyed the songs and prayers of the evening, remarking that she was accustomed to see Methodist preachers in her Maine home in other days. Our plans were talked over, and our itinerary substantially laid out that evening.

Jaffa is an interesting place, but there is a strong desire on the part of pilgrims to push on to Jerusalem. For this reason, not as much attention is paid to this seaport town. Still, it has decided historic interest. Here Jonah started out on his disastrous voyage, trying to run away from God and duty. Here is shown the very house on the top of which Peter slept and dreamed. To this place Hiram sent cedar-wood for the temple and palace of Solomon at Jerusalem. Here Peter raised Dorcas to life. It was in the boundaries of Dan. Of course the historic places are shown, and we took them all in with as much of faith and confidence as we could. We went up to the roof of the house of Simon the tanner. Near the house is a well and a fig-tree, but there is no proof that any of these objects are ancient. The town is mean, its streets are narrow. No carriages are seen in the town, nothing but donkeys and camels. Here was seen excellent grapes, brought on the backs of camels from the valley of Eschol, near Hebron, a day's journey away. The camel is a most useful animal here where there are few carriage roads. He is worth from fifty to one hundred dollars, and will carry about six hundred pounds weight. Here I first saw the big tailed sheep. These tails weigh from five to twenty-five pounds. They are pure fat, and the material is very useful in all cooking, especially frying arrangements.

There are three convents in Jaffa; also three mosques. There is a German colony of about one hundred and fifty families. The orange groves are a feature of this place. Lemons and pomegranites are also raised in profusion. Before dinner we had looked over the town as thoroughly as we cared to. At nine o'clock we were in bed. On our arrival at Jaffa we had not forgotten to cable home, so we retired with the consciousness that our friends had that day heard directly from us.—Christian Witness.

Pernicious Sayings.

There are some common sayings that are so plainly conceived in sin, that one cannot help wondering how they ever came to pass into adages. Still they are heard from the lips of men making high professions of morality and even of religion, and are handed down from generation to generation as precious heirlooms of language.

One of the most common of these and one of the wickedest is: "It will make no difference a hundred years hence," applied to some error that might have been committed, or some word uttered that had better have been left unspoken. Now, if we stop and think, there is no simple act but that will make a difference a hundred years hence, and perhaps a great difference. The cackling of a flock of geese is a very simple thing, but it saved Rome and had its influence upon the succeeding years of a nation's existence. The impulse of one conspirator to save a friend saved the Gunpowder Plot from destroying a whole parliament, and perhaps changed the whole future of English history. A burnt finger may delay a journey that would have cost a life and turned the path of whole congregations. It is an insult to the good God, who does not let a sparrow fall without his cognizance, to say that any act, however simple, may not have his influence on following years and after ages.

There is another saying touching the sowing of wild oats, that is, perhaps, the worst of the lot. It has driven many a lad to destruction, furnishing him with an easily spoken excuse for youthful follies and youthful sins sure to bring misery in their wake. That Christian statesman and author, Thomas Hughes, has spoken most eloquently against the use of this saying. "In all the range of accepted British maxims," he exclaims, "there is none, take it for all in all, more thoroughly abominable than this one as to the sowing of wild oats. Look at it on what side you will, and I will defy you to make anything but a devil's maxim of it. What a man—be he young, old, or middle aged—sows, that, and nothing else, shall he reap."

Was there ever anything truer? We see boys sowing wild oats every day; and we see them as men reaping the crop they have sown. These wild oats bear bitter grain. Sometimes their fruitage is disgrace that is paraded out to the world as Satan's victory. Sometimes it is the dishonoring of a parent's tender love; and its fruitage is gray hair brought to the grave in sorrow, lines of suffering on the faces of loved ones, and bitter remorse that we have turned the sweetest thing on earth to gall. Oh, these wild oats! They are like the witch grass and the white-weed in the farmer's land;—they cannot be rooted out, and they taint every good crop that follows after their sowing. Boys need not sow wild oats. The ground is waiting for good wheat that will thrive and bring forth teeming harvests of goodness; and God is ready to care for the crop with the sunshine of his love and the tender rains that fall from his hand.

There is another saying that we hear now, that seems to me strikingly untrue in view of the lessons taught us by the world's history: "Vox populi, vox Dei"—"The voice of the people is the voice of God." We swamp all true progress by such a saying. Was it the voice of the people that called first for the Reformation? No; it was the voice of Heaven-endowed, defiant, impetuous Martin Luther;—and he was in a very small minority indeed when he began. The voice of the people and the hand of the people, saving some strong spirits, were against him; and had he listened to them as the voice of God, he would have accomplished no revolution against corrupt and thriving popes.

Oh, no! The voice of the people is not always the voice of God or Lot would have stayed in Sodom, and Lot's wife would not have been transformed into a pillar of salt. Was the voice of the people the voice of God when the people cried out, "Crucify him! Crucify him!" and shouted in derision as he climbed Calvary with his burden of the cross? No; this "vox populi, vox Dei" is a stumbling-block to progress; for through man's proneness to error it is often the cry of sin and oppression, of persecution and of shame.

Let us be careful with these and with other sayings, lest by uttering them we be guilty of light words and harmful words, which may injure our fellow men and displease God.—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

"The Mound of the Jews."

Prof. Lewis has read a paper before the Society of Biblical Archæology on the excavations made by Brugsch Bey, in 1871, at Tel-el-Yehudiyeh, "The mound of the Jews," which marks the site of the Temple of Onias, the rival of that at Jerusalem. Onias was the son of the high priest Onias III, and with the aid of Ptolemy Philometer (B. C. 160,) built the temple for those of his countrymen who had been driven from Palestine by the Syrian party and and had met with a hospitable reception in Egypt. It was supposed that the temple was predicted in the famous passage of Isaiah xix. 18 sq.: "In that day shall five cities in the land of Egypt speak the language of Canaan and swear to the Lord of hosts. One shall be called The city of the destruction [of idols, for which the Egyptian Jews substituted 'righteousness']. In that day shall there be an altar to the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar [i. e., an obelisk] at the border thereof to the Lord." This passage was shown, it is said, to the Egyptian king. According to Josephus, the new temple was built on the site of a deserted temple, of Egyptian origin, and was finally closed by Paulinus, after the destruction of Jerusalem. The city in which it stood was almost exclusively occupied by Jews, for whose use the Septuagint translation of the Old Testament was made.

At present the Tel-el-Yehudiyeh is a little over twenty miles distant from Cairo. It covers a considerable extent of ground, and from the highest part of it a wide view is enjoyed, from the mountains of the eastern desert, on the one side, to the fertile fields of the Delta, on the other. When the excavations were made by Brugsch Bey, it was found that the ruins of the temple were about half a mile long and a quarter broad, the whole being enclosed by a wall, which in the best preserved portions was fifteen feet thick, but in three thicknesses, like the walls of the tomb of Osiris at Abydos. Within the line of wall several remains were discovered, among them a subterranean passage extending under a part of the mound which is still unexplored, broken statues of granite, and a square chamber, enclosed by walls of well-cut limestone blocks and paved with slabs of alabaster. The walls of the chamber had been decorated with enameled tiles, some of which are now in the Museum of Boulak. These tiles are of various kinds—some with the patterns in relief and glazed with the ordinary Egyptian bluish-green glaze; others are inlaid with mosaics, others with brilliant enamels. No such work is known to have been used by either Egyptians or Assyrians for the decoration of their walls, though painted bricks, generally of Phœnician origin, were plentifully employed, and mosaic and enamel work was commonly used for small objects of personal ornament.

Nearly all the tiles found at Tel-el-Yehudiyeh have purely Egyptian designs. Some of them bear the cartouches of Ramses III, while others, which are always circular and without hieroglyphics, have stamped upon their under sides the Greek letters A and E, the presenting a curious form, peculiar to the time of the Ptolemies. A Hebrew inscription was found near the chamber by Signor Lenzone; but was, unfortunately, lost in the Nile before being copied, and a small fragment of another Hebrew inscription, in old characters, has lately been noticed by Mr. Sayce upon the spot. It is plain, however, that, as stated by Josephus, the Jewish Temple had been preceded by an Egyptian one. This, in fact, is proved by hieroglyphic inscriptions, which show that Ramses III—the Rhampsinitus of Herodotus—had erected a temple on the site to Sekhet, or Pasht, the cat-headed goddess of Bubastis. It was to this temple that the tiles bearing the name of Pharaoh belonged, as well as the red granite statues, one of which is still to be seen half buried in rubbish. To the Jewish temple, however, seem to belong two large baths, each cut out of a single block of stone. The largest, which is of colossal size, has a flight of steps cut from the top to the bottom of one side of the interior. The other, though externally of rectangular shape, has been hollowed out into an oval form. Close by is a stone sarcophagus, quite unadorned, which may be older than the Jewish period.—Independent.

Hebron Today.

From the article in the December Century entitled "From Sinai to Shechem," written and pictured by Edward L. Wilson, we quote the following: "We found ourselves encroaching upon the land of the Azazimehs, the descendants of Ishmael, and were overwhelmed by a storm of abuse from a delegation of the tribe, who, having sighted us afar off, stood awaiting us at the ford of the river which led up Beersheba way.

No day in Petra held more anxiety than this one did; for parting with the mutinous wretches into whose hands we had voluntarily placed ourselves at Akabah, compromising with those who held us prisoners, and arranging with the newcomers, required an amount of intolerable yelling and bluster which was more interesting than pleasant. Swords, pistols, clubs, spears, fists and guns were all used; but nobody was hurt—very much. Even the moon looked troubled by the time we took our departure. If such people infested this region when the spies came this way, it is not so wonderful that they returned to Moses and said, 'We were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight.' Certainly my longfelt sympathy for Hagar and Ishmael was much shaken by my dealing with their descendants. Nothing could be more lovely, however, than the region reached a day's journey farther north, when in the neighborhood of the 'brook of Eshcol.' The land rolls through 'green pastures' and 'beside still waters.' The wide valleys were clothed with verdure, spotted with daisies, buttercups, dandelions, poppies white and red, and many other flowers. Large flocks were there attended by their shepherds; the fellahin were at work, and the women, tall and erect, were everywhere carrying water in jars upon their heads. The fields were protected from the torrents by stone walls such as we saw in the wilderness, and olive groves and vineyards abounded. It was a grateful scene, made more so by the resemblance of the grey, [illegible] hills to those of old Massachusetts. Each vineyard of Eshcol was protected by a high stone wall; in every one was a low stone structure which served as the house of the [illegible]. The roof was the watch tower, [illegible] the day, to keep the birds and [illegible] away from the fruit. [illegible] the plains of Mamre.' There, reaching [illegible], is the [illegible] ground of the patriarchs, and in the distance, towering above everything else except the surrounding hills, are the minarets of the mosque which covers the cave of Machpelah. [illegible] is the oldest [illegible] in the world which has retained a continuous existence. The hills and the valleys are [illegible] clothed with olive groves, orange trees, and vineyards, figs, mulberries, almonds, [illegible] and [illegible] watermelons [illegible] and [illegible] the heart of the weary traveller."

Dear Restitution:

Since I came from our National Conference, I have visited the following places. First I came from Philadelphia to Clinton County, where my wife was. Preached on Sunday to the church at the Plummer School-house, at which time they reorganized the church. They number about forty members and intend to go to work in earnest. May the dear Lord help them to contend earnestly for the faith. From there wife and I came to Chicago and visited our youngest son, who is a compositor in the Tribune office. We also visited Sister Reed and family; Bro. Reed was not at home at the time. We also called on Bro. Thomas Wilson. We then left the city for Leaf River, in Ogle Co., Ill. Bro. Knodle met us there and took us out to Silver Creek, where I held meetings for nearly three weeks. It was a good meeting and the few were encouraged to renewed effort. They intend to follow out the advice of our National Conference, to do what they can for the truth in helping to sustain the cause by some financial help. There are but few there, only some five members.

From there I went to Oregon, the county seat of Ogle Co., where I held a few meetings with good interest. They only number six or seven, but they are alive to the cause. I will visit them again in March, the Lord willing. From there I made my second visit to Dixon, Lee Co., Ill., where I immersed two last fall. Had some good meetings. They have no house of their own, and have to meet in private houses; but they meet nearly every Sunday to exhort, and pray and commune. I will preach for them as often as I can. They are quite liberal in their help to sustain those that preach the word. God bless them is my prayer. From Dixon I went to Sterling, Whiteside Co., Ill. Held meeting from Thursday night till Sunday night. That was one of the best meetings I have held for many days. It is a new point. Bro. Shirley lives in Rock Falls on the other side of Rock River. There are two families of Shirleys that belong to the church, and another family by the name of Williamson, and they are all active in the cause; and with an effort put forth there with the help of those three families, there can be good done I think. I return there again in February to hold another meeting. Bro. Samuel Shirley with but little practice could be quite a teacher among them, and I am in hopes he will soon go to work in earnest. There is much to do and but few to do it. I find some fields that are open for a good work to be done, and if we can get the means to carry it on, it can be done.

Eleven more workers in Foreign Mission fields are yet to be provided with our paper for 1889. Who will pay for a paper to be sent to China, Japan, India, New Zealand, Italy, Palestine or Macedonia?

Blue Ridge, N. C., Jan. 10, '9.

A. R. Underwood—I thank God that he put it into the heart of some one to send me the good paper last year. I pray God to bless you all. I am still too poor to pay for the paper. I have been feeling sad, and like crying all day since my oldest boy found out that my paper would stop. Please enroll me on your list as one of the Lord's poor, for it makes my family sad to talk about doing without the paper. Two of my children were immersed in 1888. I wish you could send us the Christian Hymnal, as our old book is worn out, and we are very poor. O, please consider us.

Your brother in hope.

For obvious reasons we withhold the name of the writer of the above. We give it that all may see the nature of the calls we often get. We have a good number of patrons who, without the least inconvenience, can make the home of this poor brother [illegible] at least one day of each week [illegible]. Who wants the blessing that [illegible] for such a gift?

A WOMAN'S COMPLAINT.

I know that deep within your heart of hearts
You hold me shrined apart from common things,
And that my step, my voice, can bring to you
A gladness that no other presence brings.

And yet, dear love, through all the weary days
You never speak one word of tenderness,
Nor stroke my hair, nor softly clasp my hand
Within your own in loving, mute caress.

You think, perhaps, I should be all content
To know so well the loving place I hold
Within your life, and so you do not dream
How much I long to hear the story told.

You cannot know, when we two sit alone,
And tranquil thoughts within your mind is stirred,
My heart is crying like a tired child
For one fond look, one gentle, loving word.

It may be when your eyes look into mine
You only say, "How dear she is to me!"
Oh, could I read it in your softened glance,
How radiant this plain old world would be!

Perhaps, sometimes, you breathe a secret prayer
That choicest blessings unto me be given;
But if you said aloud, "God bless thee, dear!"
I should not ask a greater boon from heaven.

I weary sometimes of the rugged way;
But should you say, "Through thee my life is sweet,"
The dreariest desert that our path could cross
Would suddenly grow green beneath my feet.

'Tis not the boundless waters ocean holds
That gives refreshment to the thirsty flower,
But just the drops that, rising to the skies,
From thence descend in softly falling showers.

What matter that our granaries are filled
With all the richest harvest's golden stores,
If we who own them cannot enter in,
But famished stand below the close-barred doors.

And so 'tis sad that those who should be rich
In that true love which crowns our earthly lot,
Go praying with white lips from day to day
For love's sweet tokens, and receive them not.

To the Church of God in Christ Jesus, Greeting.

For it is better if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well-doing than for evil-doing. For Christ hath once also suffered for our sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh but quickened in the Spirit. By which (Spirit) also he (God) went and preached to the spirits in prison which sometime were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah while the Ark was a preparing wherein few that is eight souls were saved, 1 Pet. iii. 17–21.

The above portion of Holy Writ has been made a stumbling-stone by many expounders, both in the early days of Christianity as well as in our own times. Never have I seen it more sadly misconstrued and perverted than in the late copies of a leading British magazine, by one of the ablest writers of our day.

Being fully aware that that article will bring to many minds confusion of thought devoid of Scripture testimony I feel impelled to set forth the simple revealed truth as given in the Book. We read that God hath sometimes chosen "the weak things of this world to confound the things which are mighty." The preceding verses of the chapter quoted from is an exhortation to holiness, to righteousness, to well-doing, with the assurance that all our acts are known to God. Then in verse 17 we are told that it is better to suffer for well-doing than for evil-doing, and in verse 18 the example of Christ having so once suffered is brought before us. He was persecuted and made to suffer, even to the death of the cross for doing the will of his Father. This he did for the joy that was set before him in the eternal ages. In this joy our salvation was included. He the just One suffered in behalf of those who were at enmity with their Creator. He suffered for well-doing and his example is held up before us and we are exhorted to follow in his steps. He was put to death in the flesh, but quickened or brought to life by the Spirit. Here stop and consider by what Spirit was Christ made alive, and brought forth as the first fruits of them that slept, as the Prince of life; of immortal life. Surely it was by the Spirit or power of God, and by that same spirit or power did he, (God) preach through his faithful servant Noah to those wicked men who daily witnessed his faith in Jehovah for one hundred and twenty years while he was building the Ark. Here in verse 10 is brought to our notice the great mass of humanity who suffered for evil-doing in contrast with the few who escaped through the obedience of faith. In this entire connection reference is made to God and to the power and operations of his Spirit. Looking back to Noah's time we find it written, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh: yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years," Gen. vi. 3. This teaches beyond question that those with whom the Spirit of God then strove, were men and women in the flesh.

We have examples where the word Spirit is applied to and signifies person. See 1 John iv. 13. and we also read where Paul said to Simon, I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity. Here wickedness is represented as a bond, and a bond is in verity a prison. Therefore we may with all reason understand that it was the very men and women living in their sins, and bound up in their wicked ways, while the righteous Noah was building the ark, that Peter refers to as the Spirits in prison.

The writer to whom I have referred quotes Gen. v. 1–5; and from the statements there made he assumes that another race of beings are brought to light in those days, and that those fallen angels or Spirits, are they who are called the sons of God who took wives of the daughters of men and with them beget children, who—coming from such combined unholy parentage become so wicked as to call for the waters of the flood to purge the earth from such terrible iniquity.

Such a view of these Scriptures by whomsoever held, does the grossest violence to the fixed and immutable purposes of the Great Jehovah, which in the very beginning held established, viz: that everything should bring forth after its own kind. A violation of this law in Israel's time was punishable with death. See Lev. xviii. 23; xx. 15. We certainly have no grounds for supposing that immortal be[illegible] cohabited with mortals, nor that such beings have the power to procreate. What would the progeny be? But let us look at these Scriptures by the light of reason and in harmony with other Scriptures and we will find all clear as noon-day's sun, Gen. vi. 1. And it came to pass when men began to multiply upon the face of the earth and daughters were born unto them. 2. That the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair and they took them wives of all which they chose (or they took all the wives they chose). 4. There were giants in the earth in those days and also after that when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men and bear children unto them; the same became mighty men which were of old men of renown.

Observe that the word sons as given in verses 2 and 4 in the original signifies offspring, and the word offspring, signifies issue, produce, race or kind. Now turn to Acts xvii. 28–29 and read Paul's address to the Athenians. Here he tells them that their own poets have said, For we are his offspring, and Paul does not hesitate to adopt the thought for he says, "Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God," etc. From these texts we see very clearly that the sons of God who took wives of the daughters of men were nothing more nor less than men in the flesh. Therefore there is not the least necessity for forcing this language to refer to another race of whom nothing is revealed.

"There were giants in those days and also after that." The latest developments of science as brought out by Isaac Newton Vail in his Annular System explains why there were giants in the human family in those days, as well as in the lower order of the animal, and the vegetable world, as also why the bow appeared in the cloud after the deluge and never before. He shows the perfect harmony between the inspired account of creation and true science.

This writer on the "Spirits in prison" also gives Jude 6, as evidence of his adopted theory. "And the angels who kept not their first estate but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day." First on this passage let us note that the word translated angels signifies a messenger or agent, not of necessity a super-human being [illegible] appointed by a superior to do certain work, to discharge certain duties. Adam and Eve were appointed to care for and dress the garden which their Creator had planted for them. This was their first principality or habitation. But they were not content to remain as they were. They coveted or lusted after more than was given them even as Sodom's inhabitants, and so they were expelled from their first estate, and are now under the darkness or dominion of death unto the judgment of the great day.

Or if this be deemed to limited an application of this text we may observe that Israel who as a people were given their first estate in Canaan did not retain it in their possession but went after other nations and committed fornication with them in forsaking their God and King who had delivered them out of the hand of their oppressors the Egyptians.

Throughout the entire Book of God there is no evidence that it is a revelation either to, or of any other than the human race. It begins with man's creation and ends with his redemption through the Christ of God, who we are plainly told in Heb. ii. 16, "Took not on him the nature of angels," and by careful study we find that the reason why, is because the angels here referred to were unchangeable in their nature, being immortal but our race being but mortal by nature required some means whereby we might attain to an unchangeable or immortal nature.

In these latter days the flood gates of speculation are thrown wide open, in matters of religious beliefs as well as of science, and it behooves us all to move cautiously in the these matters lest unhappily we lead the weak and unwary to wander into the quagmires of unrevealed and unproven speculative theories which tend not to edification. Submitted in love of revealed truth. Your Sister.

Oliphant's Dream, the Colonization of Palestine by the Jews the Great Desire of His Life.

London, December 29, 1888.

The death of Lawrence Oliphant has removed a figure of unique worth and a peculiar character. I do not need to write in the way of a sketch of his life and career, which are too well "known and read of men" to be dwelt upon. But with the news of his passing away just communicated to us, it may not fail of interest to refer to the work which lay the nearest to his large heart, and for that reason the heaviest. I do not need to say that I refer to his labors for the Jewish colonization of Palestine, labor at once essentially eccentric and colossal, and commending their excellence to one who writes as a daughter of the city of David. For that reason may a pardon be accorded if I seem to feel a certain prejudice.

For more than a year he labored at Constantinople to secure the immediate realization of his heart's desire—an honest unselfish desire, such as few others than Lawrence Oliphant could feel. It was hard work, arduous, disagreeable and vexatious, undertaken in the face of difficulties at once disheartening, long protracted and in the end fruitless, as fruit is weighed and measured by the western rule and standards. While the outcome may not have been unexpected by the sanguine man, it was, to say the least, discouraging. No reasons was assigned for his failure; and, strictly speaking, it was surprising, inasmuch as the Ottoman Government has not infrequently shown the Jews marked favors, giving liberal hospitality when they were persecuted by other nations. The scheme was not disapproved of in any way, but it is possible that the Porte did not entertain other than some vague and unconquerable suspicions of its intent and purpose, as coming from one who had no connection by the ties of race or religion with the community for which he pleaded. Charity is always confined within the narrow limits of a common nationality in the Oriental countries, and it is not always easy for abstract philosophy to be appreciated or understood.

But the philosopher did not despair at his first rebuff. The efforts of 1880 were repeated in the two following years. But the idea took on a different shape. Instead of the matter being engineered by Mr. Oliphant, it was placed in the hands of M. Cazalet, an influential Jew, supported both by the original promoters and many leading Hebrews of England and the continent. Large financial resources were placed at the command of the enterprise, and every facility was given for carrying the vast undertaking to a successful issue. A representative was sent on to Constantinople, and the various stages of the endeavor were pushed as rapidly as possibly could be. It progressed favorably, although with provoking slowness, passing the ordeal to which all concessions are submitted by the Tophaneh Commission, sometimes deservedly nicknamed the "Undertakers' Commission," from the fact that it usually performs funeral rites over the proposals laid before it for consideration. After that it awaited the imperial Irade, which was expected in due course, but which has yet to be provided. Why? No one knows. So little was asked of the Porte, and so much was offered, that it is difficult to see why there could be any reason for withholding the grant. The offer was one almost unprecedented for generosity. In return for grants of Government land in any part of Syria, and of the Government's own choice, the company offered to expend $25,000,000 on settling them with Jewish colonies and in developing the resources of the country and the means of communication. But one condition was named, and that was that protection and full freedom for the construction of all works of utility should be insured. Perhaps the reason might be sought in the fact that Oliphant was an Englishman! Perhaps not. No one knows. At any rate, the second attempt failed as the first had done.

Had the scheme been realized, it is a question as to whether the hopes of the supporters would have been justified. Presumably they would, for there are many circumstances of the best interpretation. Experience has shown that the condition of Syria is favorable to such an enterprise as this proposed. The German and the small Jewish colonies already there are prosperous. Agriculture has grown there as nowhere else in the Orient, and the Russian Jews, on which the venture largely depended, are excellent in the adoption of agricultural pursuits. These factors of success are worthful, and though the attempts were ten times more hazardous there was nothing about the idea that was other than encouraging. Moreover, not only would it have advantaged the oppressed children of Israel, but it would have powerfully operated to promote and accelerate the civilization of a region in which all of the western world has the most especial interest. It is natural that in these days, when the Christians world is recognizing the rights of the Hebrews to defend their privileges, they should once more turn their thoughts to the Canaan of their fathers as a haven of rest from evil and persecution. The land is ready for the conquests of industry and intelligence—as Mr. Oliphant all along asserted—and to it they have every right to aspire. Turkey stands in her own light in not permitting an introduction of new life and light into one of her fairest and most unfortunate provinces. And now that the long-time visionary dream of enthusiasts had received such a large amount of practical support—both financial and intellectual—it really does seem a pity that the Porte should persist in remaining such a long way behind the modern times and the modern course of civilization.

But not only did Mr. Oliphant interest himself in the scheme which bears his name. He also felt a large and practical interest in the Jewish race. An incident is related by General Lew Wallace which is illustrative. He says:

"Through Mr. L. Oliphant I had an account (while United States Minister at Constantinople) of the Jewish exodus from Russia, and of the misery the refugees were undergoing in the towns north of this. My sympathy was naturally excited in their behalf. On the 6th of June two gentlemen were brought to the legation and presented a petition craving assistance for their co-religionists in Roumania, who wished to gain the privilege of colonizing in such districts of Syria as contained available localities. Mr. Oliphant was personally acquainted with them, and the interview resulted in my telegraphing for permission to give them my good offices in obtaining for them, if possible, permission to colonize themselves in Turkey.

"Mr. Oliphant and a Mr. Alexander, both respectable gentlemen, were the agents of the movement. By arrangement I visited the Minister of Foreign Affairs, who informed me that....the Jews from whatever parts could come and settle in Turkey....There is nothing to prevent all the Israelites on the earth from settling in Asiatic Turkey. They shall not settle in Palestine—that is the only prohibition."

This latter fact is another phase of the matter which shows the Moslem cunning.

It is an Oriental Oklahoma story. "Anywhere you please, but not where you please!"

I do not know what the Jewish World will have to say on the subject apropos the death of Mr. Oliphant but, as voicing the general Hebrew sentiment, I will quote the opinion of that excellent organ as recently expressed:

"The only possible way to facilitate the settlement of the Holy Land by the Jews would be to aid or encourage the settlement in small batches, of five to ten families—never more as a rule—at intervals of two or three and even five years apart. Not more than fifty families being sent in any one year, and the emigrants being selected. The cost would be comparatively trifling; the work could therefore be properly started, the emigrants well provided with every requisite necessary for agriculture....They would gradually make markets and create trade. And good markets are absolutely necessary to secure the success of an agricultural community. For the Jewish settler of today would never be content to make tools and implements as did his ancestors, nor would he be content to live as did his progenitors 2,000 years ago. Civilization has produced changes in him as in others. His wants would be greater than those of his progenitors. To supply these requires not alone a superfluity of produce, but markets wherein to dispose of or barter such superfluity."—Rebekah.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CLOSING SONG.

Lord dismiss us with thy blessing
Keep us in the narrow way;
May thy spirit ever guide us,
May our footsteps never stray.
We are weak, dependent children,
Lead us by a Father's hand;
We are prone to wander from thee,
Pilgrims to fair Canaan's land.

'Tis not riches, fame nor power,
All with time must pass away;
But true wisdom we implore thee,
With thy grace from day to day.
We are weak, dependent children,
All our help must come from thee;
Thou art able, thou art willing,
We will put our trust in thee.

When temptation's wiles surround us,
And our hearts are vexed with grief,
Then to thee we fly for refuge,
Thou alone can give relief.
We are weak, dependent children,
Guard us with a watchful eye;
Thou alone can guide, direct us,
On thy word we will rely.

BIBLE DIALOGUES FOR OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

NATURALIZATION.

"Well, brother Charles, do you remember what we were talking about the other evening?" said Harry Grey after they had finished their supper and adjourned to the sitting room.

"Of course I do, Harry; do you think I would forget so soon? Instead of forgetting, I have been thinking a great deal about it. When Uncle Ben came home from the polls the other day he said Mr. Strauss didn't get to vote, and I asked him why. Then he told me 'that when a man from another nation came over here to live, if he wanted to be one of us, he had to be naturalized,' that 'he had to give up his own country and king, and promise to take our country for his country, and our rulers for his rulers; then some papers would be given him to show that he was now a citizen of the United States.' Uncle Ben said it didn't make a bit of difference how good a man a foreigner was, he couldn't vote. You know what a nice man Mr. Strauss is? and that he has always obeyed the laws?"

"I wonder why they wouldn't let him vote then?" said Harry.

"Uncle Ben explained it in this way," answered Charles; "he said that if a man really loved our country well enough to make it his permanent home, he would love it well enough to want to be one of us, and would show his love by being naturalized, and becoming a citizen. If he lived among us and yet looked on himself as belonging to the country and king he came from, whenever there was war or any trouble came, Uncle Ben said, 'he could be called home to fight against us, or be made to join the army of his king, should they be sent here. He would be obliged to do as his king told him to.'"

"But Mr. Strauss," said Charles, "told the men at the polls that 'he thought he was a citizen of our country because he lived here, and obeyed the laws; he had always felt as if he were one of us, and he thought they would let him take some part in choosing the rulers of the people.' But Uncle Ben said 'his pleading did no good.' They told him, 'We have a law that showed him just what steps to take to become a citizen and that that law looked upon no foreigner as a citizen, until he had obeyed it.'" Then he got angry and told the officers he was 'just as good as they were, anyhow, and it wouldn't make him one bit better if he were to go and get the papers that they told him about.'"

"Then he isn't so nice as we had thought, is he Charles? It looks as if he didn't care whether he belonged to our country or not. I should be afraid of such a man if there was to be war. He must care more for his king and country than he does for us. Uncle Ben said, 'Mr. Strauss made him think of some men and women whom he knew.' It is wonderful how plain he makes things. I only wish you could have heard him talk. You were away that day at Aunt Ranep's. He told me that 'he had heard these men and women say that they knew God had forgiven their sins and made them citizens of his country, because they felt as if he had, and tried to do as near right as they knew how.'"

"Why they are just like Mr. Strauss, Harry! But it doesn't make them citizens of God's country to feel in their hearts that they are citizens, does it? Wouldn't God be a good deal more particular than the officers at the polls about his law being complied with? If baptism is his law of naturalization I should think they would be obliged to be baptized."

"They would not be citizens unless they were, Charles. Their feelings would have nothing to do with it. They must take what Uncle Ben calls 'the formal steps' first. They must give up their own country and king, and promise to take God's country for their country, and his King for their King; and they must do this just as he has told them to do it. God has a law that makes men citizens, and until they obey that law they are looked upon as foreigners, and can have no heirship in his inheritance, nor can they take part in the government of his country. They must have their papers to show. There must be no guess-work about it."

"Then we can know for sure, can't we Harry? I always wondered how people could tell whether they belonged to God or not, and how they could be certain he had forgiven their sins. But it is all so much plainer now. But what papers does he give us to prove that we are his children?"

"His words Charles, in the third and fourth chapters of Galatians; in Rom. vi.; in Acts ii. 38; and in Matt. and Mark. If you are baptized these words are to you; they are yours. If we take the name that belongs to the family for our name, by being baptized, in obedience to the law of our adopted country, it will be recorded in the Lamb's Book of Life, just as the naturalization papers of Mr. B. were recorded in a book at Washington. I am so glad Uncle Ben told me. Besides he showed me two such beautiful texts. I will read them to you. They are in the second chapter of Ephesians. 'But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometime were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ.' 'Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God.' Just notice Charles, that these words are written to those who are in Christ; it is these who have been made nigh by the blood; 'without shedding of blood there is no remission.' We are baptized for the remission of sins, and are then no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens."

"How plain and certain God has made it," said Charles. "I can know just when and where God forgives me, and just when I become a fellow-citizen with the rest of God's people. There is nothing so very hard to understand about it either. But it is too late to talk any longer now."

"Yes," said Harry. "it must be ten or eleven o'clock; we must go to bed."

To the Brethren in Nebraska.

Will all the Brethren and Sisters of the Church of God in Nebraska, send me their full name and P. O. address, that I may send to the Executive Board of the National Conference. Also state what you think might be done if a series of meetings could be held in your respective localities. Brethren and Sisters, it will be but little trouble for you to comply with the above request, and we hope to hear from all at once.

The time for work is short, so let us be up and doing. Let us unite our efforts and see what we can do for the Master in the State of Nebraska.

Who will I hear from first?

Almus Adams, Arapahoe, Neb.

My address will be Rensselaer, Ind., until some time in March. Should any desire my labors in the Gospel work, they can address me accordingly, at an early date, that I may arrange accordingly.

D. T. Halstead.

"THE CHRISTIAN HYMNAL.

A copy of the above named book will be sent postpaid to each one sending us the name of a new subscriber, with $2 00 for a year. Or you may select books to the amount of 50 cents from our list, and they will be sent to your address free.

AGENTS WANTED.

We wish to engage some brother or sister in every locality to act as Agent to solicit subscriptions and look after the interests of "The Restitution." We know there are thousands of brethren in full sympathy with the truths we advocate who do not take our paper, and many of them can easily be induced to become subscribers if the matter is brought to their notice, and they are personally solicited. If some one in each locality where The Restitution now goes will take hold of this work we can have ONE THOUSAND new names added to our list immediately.

Who will take up this work with a will, and make it go? Show your paper to a brother who does not take it, or to a friend in whom you are interested, and ask him to try it for a year. It will not take much exertion or time to ask your neighbor to take our paper—and there are few who cannot afford to help the cause we are all laboring in that much—but we do not ask you to do even this for nothing. We will pay you a liberal Cash Commission for your work. Send for terms to agents and samples.

NOW is the time for the friends of The Restitution to show their good will by adding to our list, and thus enable us to give you a better paper. We will enlarge it, and give it a new dress of clear, bright type, just as soon as we possibly can. Would you like to see the change? Do you want to see it bad enough to induce you to try and get at least ONE new subscriber? It depends entirely on how much YOU are willing to do. Do not think this is meant for some one else than you, dear reader, for it is written for you INDIVIDUALLY—no one else is meant. The success of the "dear old Restitution" depends as much on YOU as it does on Editor or Publisher.

Who will send the largest list of new names?

THE INAUGURATION.

The number of visitors to Washington for the inauguration of President-elect Harrison is expected to [illegible] the number in attendance [illegible] ilar previous event. The great [illegible] way companies whose lines lead [illegible] Washington are vieing with each other in preparing for the enormous traffic. The Pennsylvania System owns over two thousand passenger coaches, more than any other railway system in the country, and the requisite number of locomotives for their movement. This extensive equipment, together with Pullman Vestibule Sleeping and Parlor Cars, will be at the service of the pilgrims to the Capital. The prompt movement of the Pennsylvania trains is ensured by the excellent road-bed and precision of the methods of operation. The Pennsylvania Lines propose to accommodate their patrons by selling excursion tickets at cheap rates and running trains in safety and on time, through from all principal points. The Inaugural Committe on Public Comfort has made preparation for the accommodation of half a million visitors during the ceremonies, and there is no question that people will fare well by placing themselves in the hands of this committee. For full information write or make personal application to the nearest passenger or ticket agent of the Pennsylvania Lines. It will be well to remember that the spacious depot of the Pennsylvania Lines in Washington is just off Pennsylvania avenue, almost within a stone's throw of the Capitol, and near all places of interest. The Pennsylvania road on its way to Washington leads through the famous and ever beautiful scenery of the Allegheny mountains.

We trust our friends will not forget the poor. We have calls every week for papers and books to go to persons too poor to pay for them, and we can only supply these as our charitable patrons furnish the means to do so. Those who are able can find no better Present to give to a poor brother or sister than The Restitution for a year.

Poetry.

"A LITTLE WHILE."

"A little while, and ye again shall see me."
Surely thou tarriest long,
Bridegroom, beloved! When shall this night of weeping
Be turned to song?
With heaven so far beyond us,
And earth so near to lure and beguile,
How long? Oh! thou didst promise but to tarry
"A little while."

"A little while;" the sorrowing and the sinning
Are not forever;
These charms that earth and sense have wound around me
Thine hand shall sever.
How long ere I awaken
Where nothing enters that can me defile?
I hear the voice of my Beloved say gently—
"A little while."

"A little while;" my flesh and heart are failing,
So long the night;
My feet are sore; mine eyes are dim with straining
Toward the light.
Oh! when wilt thou array me
In glorious body, no more weak and vile?
Come quickly? Thou didst promise but to tarry
"A little while."

"A little while," I say with wistful glances
At yon bright skies.
"Where is the promise of thy Master's coming?"
The world replies.
How long shall I be weary
With hearing man thy name and laws revile?
Oh! teach them that thou didst but mean to tarry
"A little while."

"A little while;" the whole creation waits thee
In hope and fear;
Surely the sound of that swift-driven chariot
At length I hear.
O earth! earth! arouse thee!
Wake from thy tears, put on thy glory-smile!
Surely he cometh; and he will but tarry
"A little while."

LESSONS FOR EARNEST STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.—No. 46.

SPIRIT.

Golden Text.—The Spirit of God hath made me and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life. Job xxxiii. 4.

No word in the Scriptures is more misleading than the term Spirit, for the reason that it is used to convey such a variety of meanings: being used indiscriminately by our English translators to represent supernatural beings, breath, wind, atmosphere, life principle, mind, disposition, etc. The context of all texts containing the term should therefore be carefully studied in order to determine its proper meaning. The original Hebrew and Greek words should also be studied in order to properly understand their meaning.

Question. What is a spirit?

Answer. From a popular standpoint as defined by Webster, it is, "The intelligent, immaterial and immortal part of man; the soul in distinction from the body in which it resides."

Q. What is a spirit from a Bible standpoint.

A. Generally speaking when applied to man it refers to the vital power or life principle, its root meaning, being wind or air.

Q. What are the original Hebrew and Greek words rendered spirit in the English Version?

A. Ruach, meaning breath, air, wind or spirit, and its Greek equivalent pneuma. In addition to these there is the Hebrew neshamah meaning breath, and Greek phantasma meaning apparition, each of which is twice rendered Spirit.

Q. Is the spirit something peculiar to human beings?

A. No! it is common to all living, breathing creatures.

Q. Can you give instances where the term spirit, either in the original or English is applied to other than human beings?

A. In numerous instances we read of the spirit of God, and of evil spirits. In Gen. vi. 17, and numerous other instances, the term (ruach) is applied to the brute creation in the expression "breath of life." In Eccl. iii. 19–21, it is expressly stated that the spirits of man and of beast are identical. The Revised Version shows this very clearly. "For that which befalleth the sons of men, befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth so dieth the other; yea they have all one breath (ruach, margin reads spirit) and man hath no pre-eminence above the beasts; for all is vanity. Who knoweth the spirit of man whether it goeth upward and the spirit of the beast whether it goeth downward to the earth?" In Psa. civ. 29, 30, the word (ruach) is applied to reptiles and sea-monsters, and in the next verse to God, in the one case being rendered breath, and in the other, spirit.

Q. Is the spirit the breath?

A. In some instances it appears to have that meaning, but in its general application it has a much deeper significance than mere atmospheric breath, referring to that God-given, subtle, life-giving force that pervades the atmosphere and all nature, which gives life to the breathing creation, and when taken away is followed by death. This is illustrated in Job xxxiv. 14, 15, "If he set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath, all flesh shall perish together and man shall turn again into dust; thus reversing the order of creation as given in Gen. ii. 7. This also explains such expressions as that in Eccl. xii. 7: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit (ruach) shall return unto God who gave it." If the popular conception of the human spirit be true this last text would teach that at death all spirits, good, bad and indifferent are taken away to God; but with the broad Scriptural conception it teaches that at the dissolution of the human being the matter returns to earth, and the life-giving force or spirit is again absorbed into the fountain of life.

Q. Is the spirit the same as the soul?

A. They are closely allied but not identical, the spirit being the life-giving power, and the soul being the manifestation of that life.

Q. Do the Scriptures teach that the human spirit is immortal?

A. The term immortal or any equivalent is never applied in the Scriptures to the spirit of man.

Q. Is there any evidence in nature to teach the immortality of the human spirit?

A. Only in the sense that the spirit of God that fills all creation is eternal, just as matter is eternal.

Q. Do the Scriptures anywhere teach the seperate conscious existence of the human spirit after death?

A. They do not! but on the contrary they positively teach that with death all human intelligence ceases, as the Psalmist says, Psa. cxlvi. 3, 4, "His breath (ruach) goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." See also Psa. vi. 5; cxv. 17; Eccl. ix. 5, 6.

Q. How would you briefly recapitulate this lesson?

A. Spirit in the Scriptures is a term very often used to indicate the mind, disposition or courage of men; it is a vitalizing power from God. It is common alike to man and beast. The material organism that is permeated by it becomes a living being or soul, and when it is removed death or dissolution follows. It is not a separate consciousness independent or organism. It is not a being, but a force or influence which in conjunction with a corporeal body causes that body, be it of man or beast, to manifest the phenomena of life peculiar to its organism.

We read in Gal. iii. 23, "But before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed." Some very pious people conclude from this statement, the justification by faith in Christ Jesus dates no further back than the cross. This is a very superficial view. If we take the chapter in which this statement is found, we learn something that will set aside such a conclusion. See Gal. iii. 8. And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, in thee shall all nations be blessed. This has a two-fold significance. First, individual selection out from the nations; afterward the nations at large in their national capacity, when the select seed, with Christ their glorified head shall be manifested.

It is very evident that faith was a vital principle in active operation before Christ came. We read, the law was added. Added to what? To the promise. What did the law give? Nothing but a clearer insight into native sinfulness. It was added because of transgression, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made. Having served its purpose, what remained? Justification by faith in Jesus the promised Christ without the deeds of the law. He who had been promised had come. He whose day Abraham had rejoiced to see. He that was all David's salvation and desire, and for whom Moses chose rather to suffer affliction, esteeming the reproach for Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt. The godly and righteous in all ages had faith in the Christ. They believed the promises of God, all of which found their centre and circumference in him. They looked forward to his first advent. We look to the time when he did come. But all the people of God look forward to the day of his glorious manifestation. This same apostle, in writing to the church at Corinth, said, he determined not to know anything among them, but Jesus the Christ, and him crucified. This is a very comprehensive statement. Mark the order as Paul puts it. First Jesus the Christ; second, and him crucified.

Where did Paul get his knowledge of Christ. Certainly from the Scriptures. Must we not get it from the same source? This is life eternal to know the only God, and Jesus the Christ. Does not this knowledge antedate the crucifixion. Paul tells us that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures. A knowledge of the Scriptures then is necessary to a knowledge of Christ. How could it be possible to be shut up to a knowledge and faith in Christ when he was the theme of all the prophets and the one in whom all the promises centre. Whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning, that we through the patience and the comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope. Rom. xv. 4. Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers. Rom. xv. 8. No matter where we may turn in the writings of Paul, we find him in harmony with himself; no self-contradictions. The promises in Christ are the subject matter of his teaching from beginning to the end of his teaching. The third chapter of Galatians is made up of their importance. See how important he considers the covenant made with Abraham. And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of God of none effect. The promise holds good though the law is done away in Christ. That the promise of God might be sure to all the seed, not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all. It would be a little singular to be the children of Abraham and yet know nothing about it, or care either, for that matter. To be in ignorance of God's covenants of promise is to be without God and without hope in the world. See Eph. ii. 12. The hope of these promises constitutes the one hope of the gospel. Paul declared there was but one hope. Where should we be without it?

JOHN GOODLIFFE.

Alms, or Hires Which?

We want to consider these words as related to our ministry; that which they receive,—is it to be looked upon as alms, or as the well-earned reward of faithful service?

In our horror of a gagged and salaried priesthood, we have come to act as if our ministers were mendicants. Are they mendicants? If not, why do some of our brethren scrupulously conceal the amount of moneys drawn from their income for the support of the ministry? Why in this case do they contend that the left hand must not know what the right hand does?

But, let us look at the words in the light of the Bible.

Alms means "kindness, kind acts." Jesus says, when we are going to do a kind act we are not to send a trumpeter before us that a gaping crowd may follow to see us do it. We are not to boast about it even to our nearest friends, but are to keep the matter private. It is one of the religious duties, one of the acts of righteousness, that is not to be paraded before men. Yet, in our church relationship, we may take up collections for the poor. They did this at Macedonia and at Corinth. It was enjoined upon each individual that they hand in their contributions each first day of the week, and they were so faithful in their subjection to the requirements of the gospel in this respect, that Paul boasted of their liberality to other congregations.

Yet how each one could give and others of the congregation not know about it, is a question that is hard to solve, if we take the view that is most common of the language of Jesus. The money was for the poor at Jerusalem. Delegates were to bear the gift to relieve their distress, but the donors might not send a herald ahead to notify the world of what they were going to do.

Ostentatious giving is what Jesus condemns. Our private charities are to be kept to ourselves.

But the collections at Macedonia and at Corinth were not for the ministry. In every instance where preachers are referred to, the word "hire" is used. God never uses the word "alms" in this relation. He never says that the laborer is worthy of his "gift," but that the laborer is worthy of his "hire." Dictionaries define the word as meaning "wage" or "reward." See Luke x. 7.

When you ask a preacher to speak for you, you virtually hire him, and are not to defraud him out of his pay, (unless he, like Paul, waive the question of wages on his own behalf.)

God does not send men out to war at their own charges. He has "ordained that they which preach the gospel shall live of the gospel." 1 Cor. ix. 14. There is nothing said about concealing the amount that we are to pay to our preachers; it is not "alms," it is "hire."

The Coming Age—Its Nature and Proximity. By J. P. Weethee.
This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of His coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $3.00. Send to this office for this work.

The Eastern Question
In its various phases,—Egyptian, British, Russian, Ottoman, Hebrew, American and Messianic, by J. P. Weethee. The title of this book gives a good idea of its contents, and the reputation of the author is a guarantee of its worth. The subject as a whole, and in its different divisions is handled in a masterly manner, and the reader is convinced at once that the author has spared no labor in the study of his topics. The work is thoroughly done and any one who carefully reads the 640 pages of this book will be well repaid. It is just the book for the time in which we live. Cloth binding, clear, pleasant type to read, and good paper. Price $1.50. Send to this office; orders will now be promptly filled, as we have received an invoice of the book, and will send direct from here. The two books, "Coming Age" and "Eastern Question" if ordered together, $4.00.

Dr. Smith's Bible Dictionary.
A Dictionary of the Bible comprising its Antiquities, Biography, Geography and Natural History, with Sixteen full-page Engravings, numerous smaller Illustrations, besides Maps of the Holy Land in the time of David, the time of Christ, and General Maps of the Countries mentioned in the Bible. It contains every name in the Bible concerning which anything can be said. It gives an account of each of the books of the Bible; explains the civil and religious institutions, the manners and customs of the Jews, as well as other nations alluded to in the Scriptures. This work by Dr. Wm. Smith, is just the "aid" to Bible study that you need, and every thorough student should place a copy on his table—you cannot read a chapter in your Bible without coming to some question on which you wish more information, and the best help you can get is Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary. Bound in cloth, 776 pages, price $1.50.

Fifty Years in the Church of Rome. By Chas. Chiniquy.
A handsome volume of 832 pages, printed in clear type, on fine tinted paper. It is bound in strong cloth, marbled edges, and gilt stamp on side and back. Contains two portraits (one representing him in priestly robes) of the author.

The book contains, among other startling revelations, thrilling chapters on, The Bible and the Priests of Rome; the Confession of Children; Festivities in a Parsonage; Protestant Children in Convents; the Traffic in Masses; Rome and Education; the Miracles of Rome; Murders and Thefts in Quebec; Papineau and the Patriots; Perversion of Dr. Newman; Grand Dinner of the Priests; the Abomination of Auricular Confession; Some of the Thousand Acts of Folly and Idolatry which form the Life of a Monk; the Vow of Celibacy; the Impurities of the Theology of Rome.

The Gospel of the Kingdom.
Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses, by Wiley Jones. A book of 258 pages, clear type, cloth binding; price, 31 cents single copy, or 10 copies for $1.00. While devoted mainly to a systematic statement and defense of that gospel which the Lord Jesus and his apostles preached, this book contains also a prophetico-historical chart of the empires, and a key or outline of the Apocalypse. Pages 228 and 230. It shows the nature of future rewards and punishments, and points out the prophetic "signs" among the nations — Russians, British, Jews, Turks, and Roman Kingdoms—which portend the speedy and personal coming of Christ to raise the dead, judge the world, destroy the wicked, and establish the glorious and eternal Kingdom of God on earth. The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. By L. C. Thomas.

Title page.—"The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. Also an Epitome of the Great Salvation; and an Appendix including various other subjects, in brief.

The perfect unchangeable moral law is considered and shown to be the basis and spirit of the old Sinaitic law, now dead in its entirety. The law of Moses and law of Christ are compared and contrasted, and the relation of both to the old and new covenants is treated at some length. The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed [illegible] somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the state of the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 330 pages, Cloth bound, Price $1.00.

'THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.'

VOL. XXXVIII. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEBRUARY 6, 1889. NO. 5.

THE RESTITUTION

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications

Discourse by P. G. Bowman, at the Philadelphia Conference.

My text is from the first letter of Paul to the Corinthian Church, 1st chap. 30th verse.

"But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto wisdom, and righteousness and sanctification and redemption."

Now I have no time for an introduction this evening, and secondly, I will try to elaborate two ideas which the text presents to my mind,—First, what man is; secondly, what Jesus Christ of God's boundless love, has been made to man. First then, what man is:

The text assures us that Jesus is made unto us wisdom, hence, man is in a state of ignorance; in a state of the most profound ignorance, a state of greater ignorance than any other animal upon the face of God's earth, and it is one of the greatest difficulties of the Christian preacher, when he tries to talk on the nature of man and man's nature in the abstract—Man's nature dis-associated from all those various and elevating influences which we find around us from our birth to our grave. There is our difficulty. When the child is born, it is situated where there are a thousand remedial influences all around it, to civilize, to educate and to Christianize, and to develop in every way; but now take the child, isolate it, dis-associate it from all those influences, and throw it upon its own unassisted resources from its birth, and what are you going to have? Look at it. See its ignorance as well as its utter helplessness and dependence, far beyond anything that comes into life in the whole animal world. The child would just as soon eat a lump of poison as a piece of sugar. Just as soon take hold of a razor as a stick of candy You will not find anything else do that. The chicken hatched an hour ago, will not eat anything to kill it. None of the animal world will do it, but the child will. It is the most perfectly helpless of the whole animal creation. Take for instance Peter the German boy, who was caught in a wood in Germany in the seventeenth century. He had been lost when a child, and every effort to recover him failed, and they concluded they had lost the child for good. When he was twenty years old, he was discovered and captured and taken, the wildest of the wildest animal. It is said that the child will get wild quicker and become more wild than any other animal. Well now, they carried this young man through a process of civilization and education, and what was the result? They asked him, after he was sufficiently educated and developed to talk on these questions intelligently. Now when you were in your wild isolated state, did it ever occur to you that there was a time that you did not exist, and that there would come a time when you would cease to exist? "No," he said, that never occurred to my mind. The inquiry was never started in your mind whether there were any other creatures like you in the world? Never. He showed them conclusively that he was nothing in the wide world but a creature of passion and appetite. When he was thirsty he drank, and when he was hungry he ate.

That is what we would be today, and every one else, and yet you are to be a great thing. A wonderful thing. Nay, my brethren, you can never properly appreciate the condescending, the almighty goodness and love of God to the race, until you first find out what that race really is; its necessities, its requirements, etc. Now I know very well that Dr. Bailey in his evidences, takes this ground. He says that man without the Bible, by confining his studies to the book of nature, can work through nature to the first cause, and he tries to illustrate it in this way: He says that if a man walking along, were to stub his foot a dozen times on a stone, it would not attract his attention, but if he were to strike his foot against a watch, he would be inclined to pick it up and by handling it he finds it opens and inside of it he finds a number of curiously wrought metal wheels and they are all in motion, and by [illegible] his investigations he finds that the object of this is to keep the seconds and minutes and hours as they flit around. Now, says he, the question is, though that man never saw a watch before, and knew absolutely nothing about it, yet when he examines the design, the wonderful machinery of the watch, will he conclude that that watch is the production of nature or of cause? Will he suppose that the rains that fell around, had washed all these invisible particles of gold and silver and brass together and formed this machine, or will he come to the conclusion that it had a maker? That is what he would conclude."

I do not believe a word of Dr. Bailey's arguments on this subject, but I haven't time to reply to them now. But suppose that we admit that a man may think in this way. Now says he, look at the vast machinery of God: look at all these worlds and suns and centers and systems in their respective spheres; look at everything in nature, and will you conclude that it is the production of chance? This thing is far superior in mechanism and contrivance to all human productions. Will a man conclude that it is a production of a wise and great God? Now then do you suppose, that you can be searching the book of nature, and out through that process, that there is a first cause? A great and wise master-builder and producer of all these various contrivances and causes, or simply results? Now what sort of a being is he? That is the question now. You have found him out through his work, but who is he? What is he? How is he disposed towards the production of his hands? Is he all goodness, mercy and love and pity towards the workmanship of his hands. Now then, if the sun should always shine, if all nature was forever smiling and glad, clad in its gayest [illegible] around was [illegible] ness, then [illegible] perhaps, that [illegible] is full of good[illegible] some volume reveals to you a being of implacable hate. It brings to you a being full of vengeance and wrath, who loves to riot in the destruction of what his hands produced. Look at the dark cloud arising: hear the mutterings that shake the heavens and earth; see the forked fires as they alight upon that dark bosom, and now the rains descend Judgments and furies and wrath pour down. All is gone,—all is gone! The big fish devour the smaller ones; the stronger animals destroy the weaker ones, and nation raises against nation.

Pestilence and ruin spread everywhere, and therefore, if this volume is to teach you there is a God, you have the strongest evidence to believe that he is a God of wrath and a God of fury. God, my brethren, is the way to himself, and all the wisdom of the world and the angels of God, never can teach you who God is nor what God is. He has to do it himself. By a special interposition, by a special communication from himself; then, therefore, take this volume. This is the only way to God. Man by searching, cannot find out God; the wisdom and nature of God. You cannot come across him at all. The darkness that surrounds all, is a darkness that cannot be penetrated. God, my brethren has made himself known to us in the manifestation of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is his great pity, and great love and great wisdom and great power all concentrated in the revelation of Jesus Christ to this ruined race. This deplorable race. Here you have wisdom, and you can get it nowhere else. Talk about nature. Talk about cause and effect. God, as Mr. Watson says, is the way to himself. You cannot find him out any other way, no matter how much you may search. I haven't time to elaborate, but in the next place, Jesus Christ, the text says, is made unto us righteousness, or justification, and justification is a legal term. It is purely a law term and in common parlance it means a vindication from any charge that involves a man's moral character, and according to the teachings of God's book, means that and more than that; it means a restoration to peace and amity between two antagonistic parties, a restoration to reconciliation. Justification, therefore, is simply a change in man's relation to law. Let me illustrate. Here is a man next Monday who is to be hanged on the public gallows. He has rebelled against the law of Pennsylvania, and involved himself in guilt of murder in the first degree, and he must die; therefore he stands condemned by the law of the state, because he has transgressed it. He has nothing to make compensation. Now when he is under the gallows; when he is about to be hung, a reprieve arrives from the Governor. The Chief Executive sends a paper signed and sealed by the highest authorities of Pennsylvania, that that man shall not die, but he shall live. He shall go free. What is that but a justification; but a vindication? What is that but changing the man's relation to the law. His external relation? Is it not so? It does not change his nature, it only changes his relation to law. And so it is in this case. It is pardon, the free and full pardon and justification to an unrighteous condemned man, and therefore, if his application extended no farther than this application to mankind, there would be a defect in it, but the apostle says here that Jesus Christ is made unto us sanctification. Here you see a different thing altogether. Here is a work that is not only done for a man outside of a man, but a work accomplished in a man. It is a change of a man's moral character before heaven and earth. What can do it? Could the blood of bulls and goats and the ashes of a heifer? Could all sacrifices accomplish it? Could all the angels in God's heaven, how much they might pity the human race, have accomplished a work like this. Jesus my Lord, thy blood alone, hath power sufficient to atone. Thy blood can wash me white as snow. All the blood of the thousands of victims for years and centuries, who have bled and died, only pointed to the blood of the Lamb of God. All were typical of a coming Lamb. A sacrifice, whose [illegible] rich blood was sufficient in vir[illegible] to cleanse a universe from sin. He [illegible] made unto us sanctification. A change of man's nature as well as his relation. But now if the process stopped, here, there would be a defect in it. Great as this is: superhuman as this is, far out of sight; far above all men are the angels, yet there would be a defect in it, it is true. A man can be justified freely from all things which the law of Moses could not justify him. If death ended all, it—sanctification—would be a blessing for some beings, because it would make them better; we would get along better; have better governments and better relations, etc., but still there would be a terrible defect.

There would be a terrible defect in it, it is true. A man can be justified freely from all the things from which the law of Moses could not justify him. If death ended all, sanctification would be a blessing for associated beings, because it would make them better beings. We would get along better; have better governments, and better relations, etc., but still there would be a defect in the scheme if it extended no further than the renovation and regeneration of man's moral constitution here. Why? Why the apostle says he is made unto us redemption. We have to die brethren. The best men and women that have ever lived have had to die, and we are all dying. We begin to die as soon as we begin to live, and we keep dying until we are dead. Now what are you going to do?

At one period in the history of France, they brought a fallen woman decorated in the most gorgeous manner, set her up as the personification of liberty, and they made men come in their robes of office and bow down before her, the personification of the God of France, and they wrote upon the cathedrals and tombstones, "Death is an eternal sleep?"

Now put this Bible away and what are you going to come to; what hope have you, what expectation? None whatever. Death is then an eternal sleep. All the wisdom in God's creatures put together, could not raise one dead man to life, no more than make one good man out of the devil. This whole thing is an interposition or revelation of the boundless love of Almighty God through Jesus Christ towards you. Redemption, glory be to God, brings eternal life. The man who has never felt in any degree the hope of redemption by that precious blood, has now a basis to stand upon. He cannot hope to depend on earthly arrangements.

What is it? It is the blessed hope, it is the eternal hope. Just as certain as Jesus Christ came into the world to seek and save that which was lost, just so certain is he coming back again to redeem the world. Redemption means to buy back again. You write a check in one of the banks here, and on Monday morning you take a thousand dollars to redeem it. You say, Well this money is due, and I must go to redeem my check or my note. Redeem it? Why redeem it? How redeem it? By paying the thousand dollars in order to compensate those who have loaned you the money.

The world is cursed and everything in it. The whole human race and the whole beautiful world that God made, was all brought under a curse and derangement and disorganization. How the eternal fires are held back. How the earthquakes come, as they did in South Carolina several years ago, and their houses were shaken down, and the earth rumbled and terror took possession of their hearts, for they thought the end of the world had come. They thought the last day had come. When God moves just a finger, as it were, all the kings and mighty men of the earth crouch down before him. It is cursed. It is cursed. Jesus Christ is coming here to remove the curse; to rescind the curse, and then he will conquer death. He fought that grim monster single handed, and went alone through the dark territory of the king of terrors. There he fought but he came up laden with the spoils of his conquered enemy "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forever more." Amen. And he has the keys of death, and can open that none can shut, and shut that none can open. He is the Almighty Savior. Soon he is going to remove this curse. These [illegible] will be changed. The [illegible] Our dead at once will spring into life [illegible] beauty and immortality and an eternal life. The church of Jesus Christ shall come from the east, the west, the north and the south, and from all parts, and from all countries, and will make a covenant with him. They who overcome will be saved. They will be crowned, and sceptered like he is, and they will judge or govern the angels and govern this world. 'Know ye not that ye shall judge angels and judge this world?" You do not know what a mighty destiny lies before you. No wonder there are a parcel of people in this world who pray for that coming of the Lord, and pray for him to come quickly.

Dr. Dick said, that "when this grand event shall take place; when Jesus shall come and the dead shall be raised, and the devil be chained then evil shall be removed away, and temptations to sin be gone, and then all the redeemed shall stand forth." When, as Dr. Cummings said, "God shall pass his hand a second time over this earth, he will save the world with its inhabitants." And he presents it very good. The next time it will stand out the brightest light yet in the sisterhood of worlds, and the old Scotchman said, that "forever and ever, in all ages to come, this world will be regarded with more appreciation on the part of God, than any other world he ever made." "Because," he said, "there would be reminiscences connected with this planet that belong to no other portion of the outlying provinces of the Almighty." So God was manifested in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached to the Gentiles, believed on in the world, and was received up into heaven.

Here he suffered on the cross, the most shameful death that mortal ever suffered, and after going through all this tribulation, there will be a reminiscence connected with it that will belong to no other portion of God's universe. From the many declarations in the Bible, particularly the saying of Jesus, "As I have overcome and am set down with my Father upon his throne, so if you overcome you will sit down on my throne." Are we not to suppose then that that class is ultimately to occupy a higher relationship a nearer relationship to Almighty God than any other beings? We are to be one with Christ, who is nearer to God than any one, and we are to be one with him, identified with him, sceptered with him, and crowned with him, and honored with him; and we are to govern with him, and reign over the nations and over the earth. We ought to try and qualify ourselves as far as possible for any position that we may be called upon to fill in the coming age. Dr. Dick said that this redemption from death, is going to work a great deal more wonders in the human being, than we now have any idea. He says if we are to be like Christ, then after the resurrection, when this mortality has put on immortality; when this natural body shall become a spiritual body, then, he said, all our movements will be just as completely under the dominion and power of our wills as our thoughts are now." Look at Christ. He said that "Every one that is born of the spirit shall be like the wind, going and coming, and you cannot tell where it comes from and where it goes to. So is every one born by the spirit of God, and made spiritual beings. Now Dr. Dick thinks that we will be so associated and related to the divine jurisdiction and power that govern this world, that we will be sent, not on railroads, but like Jesus; simply by power of the will. And so when you are sent off to some of those glorious manifestations of God's power, you will go in the same way, and as you pass over one world of grandeur to another, and you rise higher and higher and shine brighter and brighter among the mighty constellations, you will shout louder, O great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty. Heaven and earth are full of thy glory. Glory be to thee, O Lord Most High."

Will you go with us. We are on our journey now. I feel just like I could come out and take you in my arms. Will you give up everything for these bright prospects? Will you turn your back and your hearts to the world and its dissipations, and will you come here that you may be crowned and sceptered by the King of kings and the Lord of lords, and be made one with him and reign with him on the earth? God bless and save you for Jesus sake. Amen.

Conversion: What Is It?

The dictionary gives it thus: "Change from one thing, state, or religion, to another; transformation; a turning." This we accept as correct, and proceed to enquire what is meant by the conversion of a sinner? and how is it affected?

A sinner to be converted must be changed in heart, mind, affection and disposition. His heart and affections must undergo a real, radical change, so much so that he is turned right about. When a sinner, he loves and associates with such sinners and sin; in short, it is in about all he cares much for. He swears and takes God's name in vain because it is fashionable and he thinks it is smart; he chews tobacco and smokes cigars for the same reason. He goes to the ball and carouses around all night simply to have what he calls fun. When converted, he is so completely transformed in mind and disposition that he willingly bids adieu to all his former vain follies, and leaving them behind he turns his face Zionward, and seeks a different class of associates. He sets his affections now on things above, not on earthly things; he meditates day and night on the goodness of God, and his matchless love as manifested in the plan of redemption. And unless his whole course of life (as manifested in word and action) be changed, radically so, we may be sure his conversion was only superficial at most.

When a sinner is converted to God, he is expected to love and serve him, he loves to read and hear his holy word, he takes delight in meditating and talking of the many great and precious promises left on record for our consolation. And if our conversion is genuine we will certainly manifest the spirit of our blessed Master, whose life and time was occupied in doing good and in reproving sin. If our life does not correspond with our profession we may be sure that the cares of this world and the deceitful riches of this life are choking out the word of the kingdom, and we at last are found completely snared in this most common but fatal deception.

The sinner takes no interest in the hereafter, his great ambition is to get rich, have a good time eating and drinking and making himself merry, antediluvian-like. But when he is turned about by the power of God as manifested in the gospel, then he counts all these earthly perishable things and pleasures but loss and dross, that he may win Christ. They are and must be regarded of very small importance as compared with a real, substantial home in God's glorious kingdom with the good of all ages as our associates.

Every creature in nature lives and enjoys itself best when permitted to breathe its natural atmosphere and live and roam in its natural element with its own kind, and mankind is no exception to the rule. Sinners from choice prefer their kind for associates, and worldly minded people love to associate with their kind. While politicians seek the company of politicians, while Christians are expected to be peculiar in this respect; they love God and his children, love to breathe freely heaven's pure atmosphere. If they love God as they profess to, they will certainly manifest much interest in the blessed cause of our blessed Master. It will be first in their mind and actions. We love to read and learn of God in his word and works; we love to read and hear from his children, the household of faith. How it cheers us when otherwise lonely to read or hear read the many good letters and sermons in THE RESTITUTION from our dear brothers and sisters, our Father's family. Why, bless your soul, how can it be otherwise? All belong to one family, all are children of our heavenly Father, and all expect to meet and live together in the kingdom of God, and no sympathy and affinity for each other here? Impossible. "The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law."

Having now spoken of some of the principal marks of true conversion, which include true honesty to God and man, pure piety and chastity at all times, and a holy godly life of self-denial, we, will now enquire how this change is brought about, what causes the sinner to change sides? We answer, first, he knows he is a condemned sinner before God, and he knows by observation that his life is short at most, and having a desire to live he accepts God's proffered mercy. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." In this is made known God's great love to a lost world. "He sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." He came into the world that we might have life, and that more abundantly, or eternal life. Then in the language of an inspired apostle we would say, "For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge that if one died for all, then were all dead." And as John says, "We love him because he first loved us." Love prompted the Father to give his well-beloved Son, who undertakes for us, who lived and died for sinners.

How hard must be the heart that does not appreciate such an exhibition of pure love. A kind friend and a loving Savior dies for poor, helpless sinners, and yet how few are moved to action. Oh, the hardness of heart. Now the Savior, the one that could still the tempest, the one that could and did open the blind eyes, and raise the dead to life, has said to poor, helpless, sinners, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." The way to come is by heartily believing and accepting the gospel of Christ which is God's power unto salvation to every one that believeth. Christ preached the gospel of the kingdom of God, and said it must be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations. Then he sends forth his disciples to finish the good work he had begun, and tells them to go into all the world and preach the gospel unto every creature. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be damned." "When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near; let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon."

T. E. ADAMS.

Dear Restitution:

Judged by what we see in the great cities this world is truly a medley. Yesterday, Sunday afternoon, I walked from the Palace Hotel, where I am stoping in San Francisco, up Market St., to the Mechanics' Pavilion, a distance of about one mile, to attend the three o'clock services being held there by D. L. Moody and his assistants. Market is the principal street in this city. The afternoon was one of California's best and the people were out in large numbers. The cigar and tobacco stores were all open and doing a thriving business. You know our Indiana Supreme Court decided some years ago that tobacco was a necessity, and therefore while it was a criminal offence to sell bread on Sunday, the vender of cigars and tobacco was a public benefactor whose business should not be interfered with by enactments to prevent the desecration of that day recognized and kept by all civilized nations as a day to be devoted to the worship of God. I am glad that later the same Court, composed perhaps of men who smoked less and thought more reversed this singular decision. I fear the fact of the reversal has not reached this coast. Some of the saloons were open, and some of the business houses had a shutter down and were doing [illegible] business on the sly.

Within one block of the Pavilion where more than three thousand people were listening to the gospel [illegible] being sung by a choir of more than three hundred voices, and the burning words of Mr. Moody in defence of the Bible from the attacks made upon it by the infidel world, there is a vacant block where I found a mountebank show which was being largely patronized. A rod or two from this show were some of the Salvation Army people singing their wierd songs as they only can sing, with a densely-packed crowd around them. Six or eight rods away was a man selling at auction some worthless stuff to the gaping crowd that was listening to his vulgar jokes and stale rant. On the opposite side of the block an anarchist was making a speech to a large crowd. He was howling himself hoarse and gesticulating like a jumping jack, to convince his hearers that the government is responsible for all their ills. A few rods away was the City Hall where the laws are enforced and the prison where the violators of the law are incarcerated and made to feel that it is not a good thing to trample the laws of the country under foot.

Suppose we ask the infidel world to unite their combined wisdom and tell us what they would do with this inharmonius mass of human beings, should our Heavenly Father withdraw his over-guiding hand, withdraw the Bible, the churches, the Christian men and women with all their influence for good, and put them in charge. A religion that makes a humitarian out of a murderer, that makes an honest man out of a thief, that makes a sober man out of a drunkard, that changes a blasphemer into a devout Christian, that causes the wife-beater to become a loving and devoted husband, that makes a saint out of a sinner, is the religion that the world needs.

As the warm rains and the beautiful sunshine causes the flowers and grass to bloom and grow in the Pacific vallies, so may our prayers, exertions and right living cause the vineyards of the Lord to produce abundant fruit that shall ere long ripen for the near approaching harvest and be garnered by the angels, is the prayer of your brother in hope of eternal life.

My address will be Rensselaer, Ind., until some time in March. Should any desire my labors in the Gospel work, they can address me accordingly, at an early date, that I may arrange accordingly.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, Post Office, County, and State plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshal, Co. Ind.

Remittance should be sent by Bank Draft, Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk: money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscript. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering [illegible] copy of the paper [illegible] you are addressed [illegible].

When [illegible] give both your old and new address.

By complying [illegible] you will save [illegible] and your orders will be attended to more promptly [illegible].

IN our next we propose to place Bro. [illegible] before our readers. We also have an excellent article from Dr. J. H. [illegible], of Rochester, N. Y., on "Mind and Scientific Thought," which will appear either next week or the week following. It is an article of merit and well adapted to the needs of the times. Give it a careful perusal.

ON Jan. 30th Rudolf the Crown Prince of Austria, was found dead. At first it was thought he had died of apoplexy. An autopsy, however, disclosed a wound in his head made by a bullet, which led to the surmise that the Prince had committed suicide. Later developments lead to the conclusion of assassination by the hand of another person. The course of history is shaped by events of this character.

THE following notice is late in appearing, as we published no paper last week:

"By request of some of the members, and by authority of the President, I hereby call a meeting of the Executive Board of the Conference to convene at Austin, Ill., Saturday, Feb. 9, and continue over Sunday. Please make a note of this in THE RESTITUTION, and ask any one, who has any suggestions to offer to forward them to me before the meeting of the Board.

JAMES W. WILSON,

Corres. Sec'y.

We are just recovering from the prostrating effects of a severe cold. We may, or we may not be able to attend this meeting. We desire to do all we can for the cause, but cannot always do as we would desire.

WE take the following article from the San Francisco Evening Bulletin of Jan. 12, 1889. Surely we are living in an eventful period of human history. Palestine is rapidly becoming a wonderful center of interest both in a religious and political point of view. Some of the most remarkable events that have ever transpired have taken place within the narrow limits of this oriental land; but these are soon to be transcended by coming wonders that will astonish the world. That country is "Immanuel's land," and any existing nation that undertakes to control its destiny, by getting a supremacy established at Jerusalem, will find that God will make that city "a burdensome stone" on its hands. When Jerusalem is next restored to lasting prosperity it will be the "City of the Great King." The true King once wore a crown of thorns in that city, but the crown and throne of Universal Empire now await his soon coming.

From a letter in the Westfield Times, dated at Jerusalem, October 30th, we copy as follows: The recent visit of a Russian Duke and Duchess was quite an event, and I think fully 50,000 people waited for hours to catch a glimpse of these illustrious people. The decorations were splendid on the French and Russian grounds, and the illuminations were the finest I have ever seen in this city.

The new church on Mt. Olives was dedicated while the Duke was here and named in honor of his mother. Those who saw them say the dresses worn by the Duke and Duchess at the dedication were something marvelous. He laid the carpets down with his own hands. He is said to be very fanatical and no one saw him smile while he was here. The entire party spoke English.

The tower of Mt. Olives was illuminated and was a most conspicuous object at night. The huge bell was also rung for the first time.

The Pasha paid him marked attention and he seemed much gratified by his visit to the Holy City, which he evidently considers ought to be wholly under Russian control.

The principal topic among all classes now is the new railroad to Jaffa, which I suppose is already commenced. As soon as the firman was secured and the matter settled, telegrams were despatched to the leading men in Jaffa and Jerusalem.

The company were obliged to give bonds to commence to build within a limited time, heavy bonds, too, which they signed.

We are told that 10,000 men are to be set at work immediately. I suspect that the French have a hand in it; they made a practical survey some years ago which has never been brought to light until recently, and this same survey is just the right one.

Now we have good road-making begun in good earnest. The Jordan road is graded as far as Bethany; one of the most able engineers is employed in the work. What a wonder a fine carriage road will be to the Jordan!

Es Salt (ancient Ramoth Gilead) beyond the Jordan, is one of the most productive places on the earth. The finest grapes and raisins are grown there that anybody ever saw. But it is so isolated that the people have little incentive to improve agriculture.

Now also a road is being built to the Ain Kerim ([illegible] from Jerusalem, emptying into the Dead Sea), said to have been the birthplace of John the Baptist. It is a lovely valley, very fertile. The inhabitants are mostly Greeks and Latins. The Russians own large tracts of land and have built fine buildings with lovely gardens and vineyards. The ain, or fountain, is large, always flowing, clear and sweet. These roads are sure to open up the country to colonists and agriculture.

Soon men will commence operations on the Nablous road. Nablous is a thriving city, situated about forty miles north of Jerusalem.

THE PLANET MERCURY.

Although it had been our ardent desire for many years to see this planet, yet that desire was never gratified till last week, when Mercury was at its greatest Eastern elongation. As it revolves in an orbit so close to the sun it is not in sight of the naked eye only about 15 or 20 minutes. We saw it on three different evenings. It was a beautiful sparkling gem in the white back of the evening twilight. Our attention was drawn to this appearance of this planet by the following item taken from one of the journals of the day. It is said that Copernicus lamented on his death-bed that he had never been able to see this planet.

The planet Mercury will be visible on the last three or four days of this month, January, in the west soon after sundown. It revolves very close to the sun and can only be seen at five or six periods each year, but is very easily found if people know where to look for it. It appears of the first magnitude, white and bright, and is seen in the twilight close after the sun has set. It will have its greatest elongation east on the 30th, and cannot be mistaken for any other star, as Venus is far to the east of it, and Mars is also east of it, but nearer and much smaller in apparent magnitude and brilliancy than either. It is worth while to see this planet, as many amateur, and some professional, astronomers have gone to their graves without setting eyes on it.

SOME SIGNS OF THE TIMES. No. 1.

THE GENERAL CIRCULATION OF THE SCRIPTURES.

And this gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness to all nations: and then shall the end come. Matt. xxiv. 14.

It is a fact too well known to all, since the formation of the different Bible Societies, that there is not a language of any very general employment into which the word of God has not been translated. It is more particularly our present object to note some of the interpositions of God in the removal of otherwise insuperable obstacles that were in the way. Then, firstly under this head, we may remark that comparatively a few years ago the Empire of Japan would hold no intercourse with other nations as a general thing. In 1854, M. C. Perry was sent by the U. S. Government to enforce intercourse with that country. This was effected, and the same privilege has since been granted to other nations. While political observers only discern worldly advantages growing out of this intercourse, enforced as it was at first, the student of prophecy, and observer of the signs of the times, can see that "God is in history." Commander Perry opened up the way for the translation of the Scripture into the Japanese language, and the circulation of God's word among that people. In the next place let us note the condition of the Southern States only a few years ago. It was unlawful to teach the enslaved blacks to read; hence they were deprived of any considerable knowledge of saving truth. "God was in history" again. Although it required one of the greatest conflicts ever known in human history to emancipate this down trodden class, yet the conflict was precipitated by those that had most at stake. The human design was the Secession of the Slave-holding States; the Divine design was the liberation of the multitudes unjustly deprived of all rights, but especially of becoming acquainted with the way of salvation, as revealed in the inspired Volume; and the design of heaven was accomplished. The slave can now learn to read, and then can study the Bible. In the third place the Papal despot was enthroned in Rome down to 1870. On the 18th of July that year the infallibity of the Pope, as head of the Church, was decreed and promulgated, and on Sept. 20th, the army of Victor Emmanuel entered Rome, after a short resistance, and put, as we believe, an eternal end to the Pope's temporal power. The way was opened for Christianity to enter Rome, and for the circulation of God's word among the people of Italy. We here insert a news item from the December number of the Converted Catholic as strikingly illustrative of our text.

THE BIBLE IN ITALY.

"The proprietor of Il Secolo, the leading daily paper at Milan, Italy, is issuing the Bible in serial parts at one cent each. Fifty thousand copies of the first part were sold in one week. It is a popular edition, with notes and illustrations, translated from the Latin Vulgate. The Pope cannot 'boycott' the paper or the Edition of the Bible, as the proprietor could sue him for damages. Thank God, times are changed in Italy, and the word of God has free course there."

LEAVING GREAT BABYLON.

And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities. Rev. xviii. 4, 5.

These verses, and their connection, show us that just before the terrible judgments of God descend with annihilating force upon Papal Romanism, a solemn warning to abandon Babylon will be given to all the honestly disposed who are entangled in the horrible meshes of Romish idolatry. This work is now being done, and, therefore, Babylon nears her dreadful doom. Our readers will call to mind a paragraph in our last number relative to the work and success of C. Chiniquy, in bringing so many thousands out of that heaven-hated communion. Since penning that paragraph two numbers of a monthly—The Converted Catholic—have been sent to our address, from which we learn that numbers larger than we were aware of, including some very prominent and influential Priests, are escaping as Lot out of Sodom. Speaking of one of his contributors in an Editorial, the Editor, James A. O'Connor says: "The first contribution to our pages by our brother, Rev. Dr. McLoy, will attract attention. It is the plea of an able man, of wide observation and great experience, who sees that the Roman Catholics, the priests as well as the people, are ready to come out of that Scriptural Babylon, if God's people will welcome them into the household of the faith; and it is not the 'weeds from the Pope's garden' that are coming, but the flowers of his flock. There are many weeds in the old man's garden and comparatively few flowers. These latter we cull and present to our readers every month; the weeds we leave to him as congenial company."

Thus we briefly outline for our readers this week the signs of the "approaching end of the Age," both of which are very important. Like all other indications of coming doom, the careless world will overlook them, and pass them by as events of no marked significance. We have here been calling attention to those events that have been occurring in the last forty years to show how the Scriptures may be fulfilled right before our eyes, and the great majority "reck little what betideth" this generation—probably the last passing generation of this gospel dispensation. In another paper we may call attention to two other signs, in their happenings contemporaneous with the events noted in this paper. Christian churches can now be built in Rome, and the Scriptures can be circulated in Italy. The Pope, that Old Fraud of the ages, is self immured in the Vatican, which will probably be his narrow domain for the remainder of this age. Both coquetted and snubbed, as he has been for the last thirteen months, there let the Old Fraud remain. So we believe Heaven wills it. He will never again occupy a throne. Amen, so let it be.

Please take notice that we cannot fill any more orders for "Romanism" by A. J. Grover. We have exhausted the supply. Those who have ordered it will please order other goods in place, or inform us what to do with the money.

Eleven more workers in Foreign Missions are yet to be provided with our paper for 1889. Who will pay for a paper to be sent to China, Japan, India, New Zealand, Italy, Palestine or Macedonia?

JEWISH FAITH.

Notwithstanding the snow and threatening appearance of the weather a fair sized congregation last evening attended at the Church of the Blessed Hope, on Cumberland street, Brooklyn, New York, to listen to a sermon on "The Hebrews," advertised to be delivered by Dr. George R. Kramer. A good deal of enthusiasm was manifested throughout and at the close of the discourse, many exclamations of "That's so; we ought to have some Jews here," coming from the audience, several of whom at the conclusion of the service accosted Dr. Kramer and asking his explanation of certain passages which they had not properly understood. Dr. Kramer took his text from Romans xi. 1, 25–25: "I say then, Hath God cast away his people? God forbid. For I also am an Israelite of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin. For I would not, brethren, that ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." He said among other things:

My attention has been called to this theme by the recent prominence of the question as to the mission and destiny of the Hebrew people. This prominence has been occasioned by the patriotism of the plan of Baron Hirsch, a wealthy Jewish philanthropist of France, to amalgamate his race with the Christian and thus forever solve what is designated as the Hebrew problem. It is contended that he has misspoken or been misunderstood, and that the mission of Judaism is not to be swallowed up in the great mass of mankind but to further the gradual evolution of the future religion of humanity. It will be admitted by men of all beliefs that in this eleventh chapter of Romans we have the views of one of the most eminent of the Hebrew race. He was a Hebrew of the Hebrews both by birth and education, and it is conceded that he was a genius. His influence is admitted by such writers as Bauer, Renan and Pfliederer, as well as by the most orthodox Christians. Therefore, his opinions as to the mission of his race are worthy of great consid[illegible] of C[illegible]d Webster [illegible] be of the American people and the views of Gladstone as to the English. The Apostle Paul is far above mediocrity and towers as an historical character. He believes that the people of his race are not to be swallowed up, that their identity is not to be annihilated, and that they are not to remain in their present state but to become the light and glory, not only of Asia, as Edwin Arnold held, but of the whole world. In a word, to become the evangel of the nations and the missionary of mankind. This is a high destiny for a race. In addition to the deserved prominence of this Hebrew of Tarsus and the consequent attention demanded by his views, there are those who accept him as an inspired teacher and find his belief to be in accord with other inspired authorities, for example, the ancient prophets of Israel; and from this standpoint I propose to consider the interesting question. And the claims of such a consideration will be seen from the fact that the present condition of the Jew is itself an evidence of the inspiration of the Bible. This is true as to Old and New Testament deduction. I wish to call attention to the Hebrew literature; I say nothing of the Talmud, the beauties of which are pointed out by Emmanuel Deutsch, but of that remarkable book of which everything that is valuable in Hebrew literature is a mere reflection. This race gives us that record of creation which has demanded the notice of the centuries. From them we have the ten commandments, and who can in poetic elevation compare with the rich ideality of the prophets of Israel? Their bards look down on the flight of other men. The New Testament is from Hebrew writers. The old fashioned Bible, the dear family Bible, is a Hebrew book and it is accepted by the most civilized nations today as the greatest of all books. How did it push itself into power. The wizard of the North said of it, "Bring me the book," and England's queen gave it to the ambassador who asked the secret of England's greatness. Mankind is indebted to the Hebrews. Wherever missionaries go they carry Hebrew literature. The ecclesiastics of Westminster and St. Paul's, with the Vatican, acknowledge the authority and splendor of this Hebrew book. The Hebrew in Religion. Their religion and literature are essentially united. This literature is accepted because of its religious nature. Let skepticism and agnosticism account for the widespread influence of the Hebrew literature. Hebrew religion is the only true religion, for the Apostle Paul says to Christians, "Thou being a wild olive tree wert grafted in among them and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive tree; boast not against the branches, but if thou boast thou bearest not the root but the root thee." Abraham, David, Isaiah, Daniel, Peter, John, Paul are the religious standards. They were Hebrews; so was the Virgin Mary, ever to be honored, and so was her immortal son, Jesus of Nazareth. Christianity is orthodox Judaism. Christianity is not a religion. Abraham was a Christian, Jesus said: "Abraham rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it and was glad." Jesus Christ is the Hebrew Messiah. He who accepts Christ accepts the true Hebrew faith. The Jew is to see this and accept Christ. The nation of Israel will look on him whom they have pierced. Rejected Joseph saved his race and forgave his brethren, and Jesus Christ will solve the Hebrew problem. The Hebrew in politics. I use the term politics in the sense of the science of government. The politics of the Hebrew will always be found connected with his religion. His government is a theocracy. He never had and will never have any other kind of government. The rejection of their religion caused their dispersion, they rejected their Messiah. Jesus is their King. His throne is a Hebrew throne. The angel said: "The Lord God will give unto him the throne of his father David and he will rule over the house of Jacob forever." This must be literally understood. "Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom of Israel?" was asked by the disciples of Christ after his resurrection. What shall be the position of those who now confess the Hebrew Messiah while he is rejected by the Hebrew people? Those who are now Christians will reign with him. Christ said to the twelve representatives of the church, "Ye shall sit on twelve thrones ruling the twelve tribes of Israel." The Hebrews will accept Christ as their King and then they shall be elevated as the highest nation of the earth. In that mighty empire the present Christian church shall be the queen and Christ the King of the Jews, as it is written over his cross. When he comes he will immortali[illegible] his church with resurrection glory[illegible] the prophet says, "In that day [illegible] Jerusalem be the throne of the [illegible] and all nations shall be gathered unto it." Wars shall cease. The Hebrew people shall be a millennial nation. "For the gifts and calling of God are without change." Therefore the people originally chosen by God shall be restored to Palestine. "For the Lord will have mercy upon Zion. The Lord shall comfort Zion. He will comfort all her waste places and he will make her wilderness like the garden of the Lord: joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody."

At the conclusion of his address Dr. Kramer said that he would speak next week of "The True and False Messiahs of the Hebrews." The Rev. P. G. Bowman, pastor of the Household of Faith, Cecil County, Md., founded by Dr. Kramer four years ago, rose from his seat in a front pew and said:

I should like to ask all of you people present to invite every Hebrew with whom you are acquainted to be present next Sunday. Last season in South Carolina, my native State, I became acquainted with a Hebrew, a Mr. Moses, one of the wealthiest men in that part of the country, an able scholar and a true gentleman. I used to talk with him on the subject just discussed by your pastor, and he said: "I cannot believe that Jesus of Nazareth was the true Messiah, because the Bible distinctly states that when the Messiah comes he will redeem our nation. Jesus did not do so, and consequently I do not believe him to have been the Messiah. I love Jesus because he was my brother Hebrew, and because he did more for our race than any other Jew. He is the most prominent Jew who ever inhabited this earth. He is accepted by all the nations of the earth. I should like to believe in him, but I cannot. If you can bring evidence that will convince me I will go down on my knees and worship as devoutly as any of his followers." My brethren, there are many educated Hebrews who feel the same way. There is now a wonderful movement agitating the minds of all the thinking men of the race, and a little argument will convert many to the true Judaism as followers of Christ. Aid in this work and bring every Hebrew of your acquaintance and ask him to bring his friends to listen to the truth.

Communications.

Dear Children of the King:

As you all love to hear the stories of actual experience, from the lives of those who have traveled the rugged way before you, perhaps it may encourage you to venture out more boldly, if we should tell you how it has been with us in this matter of giving. At the time of our marriage, more than twenty years ago, I thought that it was right to give something to the Lord, but when I saw the greater liberality of my husband, and the freedom with which he poured out from his little store, to help forward the struggling cause, I felt alarmed. We should never have a home, nor any of the comforts of life. I remonstrated, but he kept on giving, calmly assuring me "that if we sought first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness all the rest would be added." The years went by and we prospered. Our crops did not fail and our losses were few and insignificant. On all that we put our hands to do the blessing of the Lord was upon it.

I was convinced, "God's way, was better than mine, I would walk in it." Henceforth I was with my husband, looking carefully to the ways of my household that nothing be wasted, or expended in foolish, and needless things that we might have the more to give. God has given us a delightful home. He has showered more blessings upon us than I can tell. We grow more and more grateful, and now, instead of giving one-tenth of one per cent, we intend setting apart one-fifth of our income for the Lord.

We have found like Bro. West, "that the nine dollars, goes farther than the ten used to go." And wherefore? The tenth dollar was not ours. If we used it, it was robbed from God. He is our landlord, we are the tenants on his land, one-tenth he demands as the rental due. It must be paid or we shall not prosper. "There is that which withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." Yes dear ones, just as sure as you live, when you hold on to that which belongs to God, just so sure will it be taken from you, some unforeseen cause will sweep it away. You will be tempted into the maelstrom of speculation and lose your all, flocks and herds will die and crops will fail. [illegible]here is no chance[illegible] have promised [illegible] that you will [illegible] has put into [illegible] back! [illegible] one-fifth, and even more than this, the amount seems far too small, looking at the magnitude of the work to be done. Do not ask that the General Conference help to build your churches, go at the work with your own hands, donate labor, timber, sand, anything to help. The South Sea Islanders dragged logs with their own hands nine miles, over mountains, streams and gulches, to build a church. They dived to the bottom of the sea for the lime, they had little or no money, but the church was built.

The intention of the Conference, is, to evangelize, to send out the news of a coming King and kingdom, (the poor must be relieved at home) who will come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty?

War or Peace.

If I see and speak of a time of trouble which is synonymous with uneasiness, perplexity, annoyance and weariness in every phase of public as well as private life, national, international and social, political and civil, secular or religious, in the near future, I am set down as an alarmist, a radical, as one that troubles Israel, disturbing her quiet repose as she sleeps with her voluptuaries in the bed of adultery, and yet the Spirit speaketh expressly, "There shall be a time of trouble, such as there never was since there has been a nation." And the peace which the clergy are prating of is written in these words, "When they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them," and of this they are not only "willingly ignorant," but persistently so. "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse," "and then shall the wicked be revealed.... whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power, and signs and lying wonders." "The great day of the Lord is near.... the mighty man shall cry there bitterly, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation." The people say unto their ministers, "prophesy unto us smooth things," for we are at ease in "Zion." But God says I will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk like blind men, and their blood shall be poured out like dust and their flesh like dung. Can the will of God be thwarted, are not the firm mutterings of the people all over this wide world ominous of the coming storm, and if we see the sword coming and warn not the people, will that avert the consequences to either them or us. "The Lord cometh Anathema Maranatha."

In today's Tribune, (N. Y.), the following editorial from a secular standpoint sheds light.

There has been of late a deal of peaceful talk in Europe. Monarchs and Ministers began the new year with promises that it should be a year of peace. But what a farce it all is! Not counting Great Britain, Spain, Sweden, and Norway, Denmark, Portugal and the Low Countries, all of which are armed and some heavily, there are more than ten million men in Europe today actually enrolled for military service at an hours notice: more than eight millions more who are trained to arms and ready to serve the moment their country is invaded; and more than nine millions more who are liable to be called out as final reserves. There are, then, more than twenty-eight million Europeans practically under arms and likely to have their lives endangered in battle in the next war; more than one-half of the entire adult male population. And the cost of maintaining this military establishment is more than $600,000,000 a year. What kind of peace is that?

Notice to the Churches.

Dear Brethren:

At a meeting of the Executive Board of the General Conference Nov. 25, it was decided to issue a Sunday School Quarterly, if the needs of the churches justified it. Will every church in the United States and Canada write me at once telling,

1. Whether you have a Sunday School or not.
2. Whether you would take or use such a quarterly in your school.
3. How many copies you will take, provided the quarterly is issued.

Yours for the truth,

A. J. EYCHANER.

Belle Plain, Iowa.

Report of Treasurer of Executive Committee to Feb. 1st.

Collected at Conference for expenses of forming a church at Grand Rapids	$139 66
Albert O. Young, two contributions of $10. each towards Committee's expenses for printing, etc.	$20 00
Duplicated as per offer made	20.00
	$40 00
From the church at Raisin, Mich. per L. C. Chase, through the hands of the Secretary for Evangelistic Fund	$29.00
Duplicated as per offer made	29 00
	$58 00

The above sums have been deposited in the Bank of America at Philadelphia to the credit of the Treasurer of the Executive Committee. These are, we trust, the first droppings of the shower. The church at Raisin is the first to start the Evangelist's Fund. How many more are to follow?

Dear Restitution:

Since my last I have visited Blackhawk Co., and held meeting one week; thence to Benton Co., for a week; and then back to Lester, Blackhawk Co., where I held meetings in the Freewill Baptist Church. Two were baptized, six others confessed the faith, and many others are deeply interested. I am now at Alden in Hardin Co., and have just commenced. Can hardly tell what the result will be, but may the Lord bless his word. Brethren, pray for us that success may attend us. Amen.

T. J. WHITESITT.

Thank-Offering Corner.

In compliance with a request we start this "Thank-Offering Corner." A number of poor people are yet to be supplied with our paper for 1889. These have been paid for in the past only partially, and as we are not willing to stop any of them, we hope our friends will come forward with "Thank-Offerings" so that all may be supplied.

HIS WAY.

By cross and by loss our God leads us
  Along a mysterious way;
By loss and by cross he reveals it,
  As wisest and best day by day.

By storm and by sunshine he mellows
  Our hearts, that his seed may take root.
By sunshine and storm he develops
  The beauty and bloom of our fruit.

By gifts and by grace he rewards us,
  Even here, with the "finest of wheat;"
By grace and by gift in his kingdom,
  At last will receive us, complete.

All praise unto him we would render,
  His way leads to holy estate.
His clouds drop the dews of rejoicing,
  His gentleness maketh us great.

Communications.

The Declaration of Faith of the National Conference Held at Philadelphia, Commencing Nov. 10, 1888.

Without presumption I may perhaps claim the right to say a word on the above subject.

In October, 1846, I listened to the eleven discourses delivered by Dr. John Thomas in the Disciples meeting house, No. 80 Green Street, New York. After the Dr. had returned to Richmond, Bro. Oscar M. Boland said to me, Bro. Stacy, if the Doctor's arguments are logically sustained, then the things he advocates, namely the things concerning the kingdom of God as manifested by the personal reign of the Lord Jesus the Christ on the throne of his father David in Jerusalem, and those concerning the name of the Christ, constitute the gospel to be believed, before any one can be intelligently and Scripturally baptized into the name of the Lord, and are therefore the Scriptural items, that constitute the gospel. I agreed with Bro. Boland and suggested that he write Bro. Thomas to that effect, which he did. In the mean time and before we heard from Bro. Thomas, we both made a public confession of the above as our faith, and Bro. B. immersed me and afterwards I immersed him. That was perhaps the second "first day" in Nov., 1846. The following Thursday I immersed my wife, and thus was constituted the nucleus of the church in New York.

In No. 10, Vol. 3, of the Herald of the Future Age, on page 235 Dr. Thomas refers to this nucleus in these words, "From the scanty information that has reached us we learn that several have laid hold of the gospel of the kingdom, as we pointed it out to them in the word, and as a matter of course have been immersed into the hope of it though immersed before." I name this fact to show that I was at least one of the first who was separated to and for the defence of "the gospel of the kingdom." I do this to show that my range of observation has been as wide as that of any other man. And I want to state what are the results of my observations, which are as follows, namely, that every organization that has adopted these as fundamental conclusions, have invariably assumed that to them as the church was conferred the right to exclude all who did not or could not adopt their formula of faith.

Latterly some congregations have relaxed the rigidity with which they apply this rule, still the majority of the individuals of those congregations enforce it in their individual action, and thus not only refuse to fellowship many whose lives shine brilliantly as "the lights of the world" and whose daily savor demonstrates them to be "the salt of the earth." But no matter how the lives of men are controlled by the teaching of the word and are presented as a living sacrifice, or are crucified daily, if they cannot pronounce their faith in the same words that these tenacious brethren do, they are adjudged by these brethren as having no part or lot in the Lord's inheritance. In other words these brethren set up the claim that Father has invested them with the right to sit in judgment on their brethren, and to pronounce sentence upon them. And the recognition of this right and its exercise is at present, and ever has been, the cause of all the divisions that have occurred, or that do at present exist.

Now I want to affirm that there is no justification in the word of the living God for the presentation of a set form of words that express the gospel. Inasmuch as many formulas express what constitutes "the gospel" and to limit the expression to one set formula is to narrow and contract the gracious proclamation of Father's name, nature and action. And farther the only divine test of living faith, is living action. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Faith that does not "work by love," is "dead faith." My brethren you have done well when you say, "We, however, realize the evils that have arisen from binding the human mind by formulas and creeds, thus preventing true progress in divine knowledge, and causing unfaithfulness on the part of Christ's people and ministry; and being desirous of knowing God, we accept as our sole rule of faith and practice his word in its fulness and simplicity according to his mind and will therein revealed."

Now brethren and sisters accept this utterance fully, and grant to each and every one that which you claim for yourselves. If Father is the best interpreter of his own word, and will guide every honest inquirer "into all truth," think you that he prefers to guide you farther than he cares to guide others, or that he favors you more than they? Nay, rather believe that he gives each mind into the conception of, and comprehension of all that he or she has the capacity to digest and assimilate. Do not call in question their honesty, their sincerity, and therefore do not pronounce judgment upon them, and above all, do not cast slurs at them, or manifest your irritation with them by giving them a sly hit every time you put pen to paper. This last course only manifests your own doubt of your own position. Let the Master be our exemplar. "A bruised reed he shall not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench." But, "He shall bring forth judgment unto truth."

G. B. Stacy.

Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think anything as of ourselves, but our sufficiency is of God. 2 Cor. iii. 5.

Dear Brethren and Sisters, Greeting:

It is a fact that all men trust in some condition or power, to do the things they do in life. Some trust in others, and are disappointed; some trust in opportunities, and are in despair; for the expected opportunities never appear.

Not only is this true in relation to the things of this life, but it is equally true in relation to the life and world to come. Many trust in fellowman to bear them over the rugged paths of duty to the glory-world. But the times of priestcraft should be ended, for it is necessary to have more than human power to intercede in our behalf, to make us sure of heaven.

Some trust in social [illegible] some in wealth. Social [illegible] far as this life i[illegible] bring credit to y[illegible] laurel for your [illegible] honors upon you and [illegible] prove to be a ladder too short to reach the glory-world.

Your wealth may rust, it may take wings and be gone in a moment, and leave you "poorest of the poor." True, men will praise you when you do well for yourself; so it is written in Psalm xlix. 18; but men who trust in wealth to pave the way to eternal glory "shall go to the generation of their fathers, and shall never see light." Psalm xlix. 19.

"Our sufficiency is of God," says the text. What a blessed thought. If this be true, which it is, as true as is eternity. Let us trust him; let us not trust in chariots, let us not trust in horses; "but let us remember the name of the Lord our God. For the Lord will save his anointed, he will hear him from his holy heaven with the saving strength of his right hand." Psa. xx. 6, 7.

"Our sufficiency is of God." Well, what is God able to do for us? Let us see. Turning to 2 Cor. ix. 8, we read, "And God is able to make all grace abound toward you, that ye always having all sufficiency in all things may abound to every good work."

Then again in Eph. iii. 20, we read, "Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly, above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us."

O, what a blessed promise! who can comprehend its height! who can comprehend its depth! Who can comprehend the length and breadth of Divine favor and love! Why should some go empty-handed, bare and barren through this world, when our sufficiency is of God—so true, so noble, so powerful! Let us rather rejoice in the sentiments of that beautiful hymn, "I'm a child of a King."

To be sure we once were outcasts and strangers on earth. Sinners by choice and aliens by faith; but we have been adopted; our names are written down as heirs to a mansion, a robe and a crown.

O, the riches of grace! How it thrills with joy. O, the riches of glory! how it enhances desire.

A gentleman one day took a friend upon the leads of his residence to show him his great possessions, and waving his proud hand aloft said, "There is my estate." Then pointing a great distance on one side said, "Do you see that farm?" "Yes," was the reply. "That is mine." Then pointing the other side said, "Do you see that house over there? Well that is mine also." Whereupon his friend said, "Do you see that little village yonder?" "Yes." "Well there lives a poor widow in her poverty that has more than that." "What has she?" was the query. "She can say 'Christ is mine.'"

Blessed thought! The wealth of immortality and eternal glory, through Christ can make the peasant's heart to leap for joy, and his face to sparkle as a sunbeam on the water.

"Our sufficiency is of God."

N. H. Giselman.

The Pillar and Ground of the Truth.

The above expression occurs in 1 Tim. iii. 15, and refers to the Church the house of God as the pillar and ground of the truth. There could have been selected no better figure of speech by the Apostle, to set forth the relation which the church sustains to the truth. In Eph. ii. 20, 21, this same Apostle represents the church in a different—I might say opposite relation—built upon. Here it is said to be built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. Built upon the truth as proclaimed by the apostles whose message embraced with the new revelation the old revelation or testimony of the prophets. Jesus Christ as the embodiment and center of all divine truth is the chief cornerstone in whom all the building (church) fitly framed together (cemented, Dodridge) groweth unto or into a holy temple in the Lord. Jesus the Christ supports the weight of the entire edifice of living human stones. Take him out, or sank him on a level with man, even the most gifted of the human race and the whole system of Christianity and the church with it must fall. He is the living head to which all the members are joined in vital union.

There is no contradiction between the two thoughts brought to view by these beautiful and expressive figures. The church in fact is built on the truth, and it is just as absolutely true that the truth rests on the church, as on a ground and pillar.

God's Church in all the ages was such by virtue of the truth. It has always been absolutely necessary for men and women to believe and obey the truth in order to bring themselves [illegible] saving relationship to the Divine [illegible] to secure pardon of all past [illegible] find favor, love, and mercy [illegible], not fashioning themselves according to the former lusts in their ignorance, 1 Pet. i. 14. It is the truth believed and obeyed which makes the distinction between God's children and the "children of wrath" and "of disobedience."

God's word is truth, and by it his people are called, 2 Thess. ii. 13, 14. Their moral qualification, and fitness for the inheritance of the saints in light, rest upon God's word. All that they are and hope to be, depends upon a revelation of his will. Where his word has not been preached he has no church, and men are aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world, Eph. ii. 12. They are represented as being in darkness and ignorance, and in alienation from God by wicked works. What a deplorable state, and all for the lack of God's word, the entrance of which giveth light and understanding to the simple, Psa. cxix. 130. I will here ask the reader to read the whole of this remarkable Psalm, and note how often God's word under different names, spoken of, as judgments, statutes, commandments, law, truth, precepts, testimonies, word and words, and observe what a wonderful weight of emphasis burdens God's word in this inspired Psalm. What importance attaches to it, and how it made the Psalmist different in life, relationship, character, and understanding, from men of his day who forsook the law. It was God's word which gave him hope and consolation in the dark hour of affliction when his enemies approached him and princes spoke against him. David in Psa. xix. exclaims; The law or doctrine of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the Lord is sure making wise the simple. The statutes of the Lord are right rejoicing the heart; the commandment of the Lord is pure enlightening the eyes.

How God's word is praised and exalted by the inspiring spirit, and how these divinely guided penmen drew upon the capitalousness of two rich languages, and brought to their aid the finest and most fitting figures of speech to set forth the importance of God's revelation, to impress all future readers with the same reverence and delight and joy which inspired their own hearts in their meditations upon the heavenly doctrine.

The Great Teacher lays double emphasis upon what had been written and spoken before quoting from the law. Man shall not live by bread alone but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God, by which quotation he foiled the arch adversary of men, proved to angels and men his loyalty to the Father's will when temptation was overwhelmingly strong under the cravings of physical nature intensified by a forty days fast.

Paul says: The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, Rom. i. 16. Seeing then, that inspiration places such a high estimate upon the word of truth, it comes in bad grace from men therefore, to undervalue its importance as we have often heard them do, as, when they say; this and that Scripture is nonessential; this is immaterial; baptism is a carnal ordinance, and is not necessary to the remission of sins; and it makes no difference what you believe if the heart is only right, if one is honest in his convictions; that the wheat buyer did not ask by what road his customers came to Cleveland, but only wanted to know about the quality of their wheat; that they care not where the future abode of the saints will be if they can only get there; and many other similar statements showing a sad lack of faith in Bible teaching but betraying a good deal of confidence in human feelings and opinions.

The church must support the truth; must have, hold, and promulgate it. No other association of men and women; no human organization will do this. Mainly the church has always done the work. The service rendered by unbelievers has only been incidental, hired and heartless. It has added to the material part of the work but nothing to the moral force and spiritual influence of Christianity. Men of the world may do useful things, things which the church readily turns to account—set type, print and bind the word of God, and print Christian literature and be hired to scatter it. A pirate's corsair with Captain Kid in command would do as much by transporting Bibles to a distant heathen shore. The heart and soul of the Christian enterprise is the Christ of God in his church; his spirit, life and love and character transfused through the whole body of believers, energizing every part; and the measure of results must be proportioned to God's work in the church to will and to do his own good pleasure. Any local church is a power in a community, if all its members, at all times are found walki[illegible] Divine will. Christians are commanded [illegible] hold forth the word of life; but, back of the work of holding forth stands the moral force, the real light which like a city on a hill cannot be hid. Hear what Paul says on this vital point. Do all things without murmurings and disputings. What for? That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons, children of God without rebuke in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation among whom shine ye (margin) as lights in the world; holding forth the word of life, Phil. ii. 14, 15, 16. This church planted and watered by the apostle, if it lived up to the high moral standard erected in the gospel would be a cause of rejoicing to him in the day of Christ; that he had not run in vain neither labored in vain. Every pastor and teacher will, if faithful, share with Paul in rejoicing over such Godly churches, in the day when the results of all Christian labor, effort and prayer shall be summed up.

The mission of the church is to declare the truth to the world, to make known God's purpose as revealed in his word. Paul after stating the object of his call to the apostleship, to be that of announcing among the nations the glad tidings, the boundless wealth of the anointed one, then declares that this is in order that now may be made known to the governments, and the authorities in the heavenlies, through the congregation the much diversified wisdom of God, Eph. iii. 8–10. While it is true that Paul, as an apostle to the nations stood as an important factor, an absolute necessity in the preaching of the gospel, he was only a small part of the church whose mission was, as he affirms, to make know the wisdom of God. Along with able public ministers of the word must be associated in co-operative work the whole body of believers; each member, whether possessing little or much, is, by the apostle, laid under tribute to Christian service. The plea, I have but one talent, will not justify the laying up of that one in a napkin. Luke xix. 20. The meager, as well as the more imposing gifts must be put to use. There is no exemption from this service. How much is embraced in these talents committed to our use! All, and every thing that can be turned to use in forwarding the Master's cause; the intellectual, moral and physical powers; the gift of speech and of song, and last—shall I hesitate to say it—property real and personal, and money, the thing so necessary in every enterprise to which man lends the energy of body and mind. Under the law this fact was recognized, and acted upon systematically; and under the gospel money or its equivalent was used to subserve the great end of spreading abroad the gospel. Paul refers to the manner in which the priesthood was sustained by partaking of the things of the temple and altar, and then says; Even so hath the Lord ordained that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel, 1 Cor. ix. 14. This text is sufficient to settle the point, though several more might be quoted. God has appointed that his servants who labor in word and doctrine shall be paid for their outlay of strength, of time, and talent.

John L. Wince.

THE SECOND OR SPIRIT BIRTH.

That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, ye must be born again (or born from above, margin). John iii. 6, 7.

In the verse preceding, Christ said to Nicodemus, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit." Not as is commonly interpreted, as being like that of the blowing of the wind, but when that auspicious time shall come (and that I trust will soon come), then, and not until then, will the saints, the resurrected saints, be enabled, like our resurrected head, our elder brother, Christ, to go and come at will as he did, after his resurrection.

We shall undoubtedly be told by some one that Christ always possessed this power, but to assert this is to go beyond the record, and be "wise above what is written." In order to fully understand Christ's teaching relative to the new birth, born again, born from above, born of the water and of the Spirit, born from the dead by a resurrection therefrom, etc., we must remember that Christ always taught by parables, figures, symbols, etc., and he either gave the interpretation of the same, or else he gave the key by which the mystery could find its solution. Figures in the abstract are void of meaning unless we associate them with the facts which underlie them; facts are in their very nature, literal objects. In the very nature of things figures could not exist separate and independent of certain facts, no more than shadow could be cast, without a substance, as there could be no such thing as a shadow of a tree, unless a tree existed to cast the shadow; so something literal must exist as the basis of the figurative.

"That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the spirit is spirit." This shows that both states cannot exist at one and the same time; there must be an interval of time between. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown a natural body (or flesh body), it is raised a spiritual body (or spirit body). The spiritual is not the first, but the natural, and afterward the spiritual. See 1 Cor. xv. 42–49. The whole chapter is an elaborated argument, or discussion of man's condition, both as regards his natural birth, and also his spirit birth, under the figure or similitude of the sowing of grain; its development, or ripening, and also the harvest as the crowning glory of the whole. The apostle, in this chapter, predicates the whole thing on the resurrection from the death state, of which his Corinthian brethren began to be rather sceptical. For said he, if the dead rise not, then is not Christ risen. Then they also who are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.

If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first-fruits of them that slept. For since by man (the first Adam) came death, by man (the second Adam, Christ) came also the resurrection of the dead. (A reliving or living again.) For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall (future tense) all be made alive. See verses 16–22. Our Universalist friends very readily seize on this text to sustain their position relative to the universal salvation of all men, and that too, irrespective of moral character or condition. They emphasize the words, all, instead of the words, in. Now if the question should be sprung, Are all in Adam? the unanimous response would be, Yes. To the second question, Are all in Christ? No, would be the ready answer; if one should answer yes, then other questions would follow as a sequence, Are all new creatures? Are old things passed away and all things become new?

No condition is required in the first birth, or birth of the flesh, all are passive; but a condition is attached to the second, or spirit birth, a belief in and obedience to the gospel, the gospel of grace (or favor) of God, of salvation from death's embrace, and the gospel of the kingdom, the good news, the glad tidings relative to the same, for by and through this kingdom arrangement all the blessings promised to the "little flock" will come. The kingdom, the great central idea of revelation is nothing less than a commonwealth, the "commonwealth of Israel," and those who are strangers to it, are also aliens from it, and are as a consequence, without God and without hope in the world. Eph. ii. 12.

Adam, after his fall, incurred death, as the penalty, no other definition can be given, no other idea attaches to it, than a cessation of being, a negation of life. Life is the positive state, while death is the negative. By Adam (our federal head) we became mortal like him our progenitor. It is axiomatic that "like begets like," and there must occur an interval of time from begetting to the consequent birth, termed a period of gestation. So the analogy holds good with regard to those who are "begotten again by a hope of eternal life," like Peter, after Christ had arisen from the dead. Peter's hope was gone, was buried, when Christ was buried, for said he, "I go a fishing." He did not at first comprehend the power which was vested in the resurrection to impart new life. Christ was "the first born from the dead," i. e., the first of whom it is said "could die no more," and that "death hath no more dominion over him." Christ became the first-fruits of them that slept, the antitypical sheaf of the harvest which will, we trust, soon follow.

More than eighteen centuries have passed, a period which I think may not inappropriately be termed a period of gestation. This idea is fully sustained, because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now; and not only they, but ourselves also, who have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to-wit, the redemption of our body. For we are saved by hope, but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it. Rom. viii. 20–25. When any doctrine or Bible theme is brought forward for discussion, and parables, figures or symbols are employed as illustrative of the different points or phases adduced, the law governing the employment of those is, to follow strictly the analogy of the literal facts adduced, unless the context, or other portions of Scripture, forbid it. As a case in point I will cite the figure of grafting, which Paul employs in the case of the grafting of the Gentile (the wild olive tree) contrary to nature. Contrary, from the fact that there is by this process no improvement. See Rom. xi. A nation is to be born in a day. This will be after Zion's travails, the nation of Israel is to have its second birth, David reigned over Israel as king; David's greater Son is to sit on the throne of his father David. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end. See Luke i. 31–33; also Isa. ix. 6, 7.

DIED.

Bro. Christian F. Snoke, of Maxinkuckee, Ind., was born in Kosciusko Co., Ind., Jan. 3, 1840, and died Jan. 24, 1889, aged 40 years and 21 days. It was his wish that Bro. Connor be at his funeral, but this was impossible as he was in a distant part of the state. The funeral ceremonies were conducted by members of Miles Tibbitts Post G. A. R., of which he was a member.

B.

Rebecca Siple, at Norfolk, Nebraska, died Jan. 9, 1889, of pneumonia. She was born in Canada West, Feb. 11, 1815, and was the mother of eight children, four daughters and one son (Bro. Elias Siple) survive her. She embraced the truth and was baptised by Bro. Ramsey about nine years ago, and has since lived a consistent Christian life. She was on a visit to her daughter in Nebraska when she died, and was brought to Blackhawk Co., Iowa, for burial.

A sermon was preached by the writer from 1 Thess. iv. 18, to a large audience. She leaves many relatives and friends to mourn their loss, but they sorrow not as do those without hope.

AGENTS WANTED.

We wish to engage some brother or sister in every locality to act as Agent to solicit subscriptions and look after the interests of "The Restitution." We know there are thousands of brethren in full sympathy with the truths we advocate who do not take our paper, and many of them can easily be induced to become subscribers if the matter is brought to their notice, and they are personally solicited. If some one in each locality where The Restitution now goes will take hold of this work we can have ONE THOUSAND new names added to our list immediately.

Who will take up this work with a will, and make it go? Show your paper to a brother who does not take it, or to a friend in whom you are interested, and ask him to try it for a year. It will not take much exertion or time to ask your neighbor to take our paper—and there are few who cannot afford to help the cause we are all laboring in that much—but we do not ask you to do even this for nothing. We will pay you a liberal Cash Commission for your work. Send for terms to agents and samples.

NOW is the time for the friends of The Restitution to show their good will by adding to our list, and thus enable us to give you a better paper. We will enlarge it, and give it a new dress of clear, bright type, just as soon as we possibly can. Would you like to see the change? Do you want to see it bad enough to induce you to try and get at least ONE new subscriber? It depends entirely on how much YOU are willing to do. Do not think this is meant for some one else than you, dear reader, for it is written for you Individually—no one else is meant. The success of the "dear old Restitution" depends as much on YOU as it does on Editor or Publisher.

Who will send the largest list of new names?

One of the most delightful of Susan Coolidge's stories, "Who ate the Queen's Luncheon?" opens the February Wide Awake, with a beautiful frontispiece by Garrett. Another short story as singularly humorous, a valentine story, is entitled "The Apple of Discord," and will entertain all the grammar-school boys and girls. "Princess May-blossom," with its eight pictures, is a dainty fairy story. "Children in Italian Sculpture," is a model art-paper for young people, with interesting pictures. The serial stories by J. T. Trowbridge and Margaret Sidney are very popular for family reading. Phronsie's "dragons" are irresistible. "The Tupper Children" is a short story of the old war-days. "Forty-eight Hours a Day" will interest all astronomically-minded young folk and their elders as well. "Nonsense Animals" is very amusing and affords a hint for home-fun of an evening. "An Old-Fashioned Boat" is an interesting chapter in the progress of invention. Mrs. Sallie Joy White in her chapter on "The Use of the Oven" tells how potatoes are baked in the Boston public schools. Mrs. Goddard Orpen gives the history of the famous Spanish crown pearl, the Pelegrina. Prof. Starr, in his geological series, describes some of the gnawings of "The Tooth of Time." In the new department, "Men and Things," are all sorts of good original anecdotes and breezy "short talk." The poems of the number are many and good, the Llamas, Post-Office, Puzzle and C. Y. F. R. U. sections very full and entertaining. Only $2.40 a year. D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

Through Cars to the Inauguration.

The Pennsylvania Lines will sell excursion tickets at low round trip rates and run through cars to Washington for the inauguration of Gen. Harrison. Preparations already under way indicate that the Pennsylvania management intends to surpass its record for the prompt, safe and satisfactory running of trains in the case of the enormous traffic over its lines to the Capital. For full information apply to the nearest passenger or ticket agent of the Pennsylvania Lines.

We trust our friends will not forget the poor. We have calls every week for papers and books to go to persons too poor to pay for them, and we can only supply these as our charitable patrons furnish the means to do so. Those who are able can find no better Present to give to a poor brother or sister than The Restitution for a year.

Poetry

PATIENCE.

Oh, wait, impatient heart!
As winter waits, her songbirds fled,
And every nestling blossom dead.
Beyond the purple seas they sing!
Beneath soft snows they sleep!
They only sleep. Sweet patience keep
And wait, as winter waits the spring.

And hope, thou heavy heart!
If thou [illegible] violet fair
But kiss her cheek—on morning's air
It [illegible] note shall fall so soon,
Sweet spice [illegible] to smile,
Through [illegible] so [illegible]. Do hope the while
She [illegible] full golden June.

Work, work, thou restless heart!
As royal summer works to warm
To richer life, and hold from harm
Her [illegible] with gold
And [illegible] fruitage fair.
Only [illegible] with studious care
At autumn's feet her wealth unfold.

And [illegible], O doubting heart!
As autumn [illegible] bright [illegible]
Puts by, and calmly lays down
In winter's cold [illegible]
God will [illegible] thy faith
Of [illegible] the morning [illegible]
As bursts new life above the snow.

LESSONS FOR EARNEST STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.—No. 47.

IMMORTALITY.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. xv. 53.

Question. What is the meaning of the term, immortality?

Answer. Webster defines it, as "The quality of being immortal; exemption from death and annihilation; unending existence."

Q. Is there any being to whom the term may properly be applied?

A. To God, of whom it is said, "Who only hath immortality." 1 Tim. vi. 16

Q. Are the terms immortal, immortality, deathless, or any of their equivalents ever applied in the Scriptures to man?

A. Never, in the sense of being a present possession.

Q. How many times do the terms occur in the Scriptures?

A. "Immortal" occurs but once, and is applied to God. 1 Tim. i. 17. "Immortality" occurs five times, and is once applied to God as a present possession; in the other instances it is applied to man as something to be "sought for" and "put on." 1 Tim. vi. 16, Rom. ii. 7; 1 Cor. xv. 53, 54; 2 Tim. i. 10.

Q. What are the original Greek words here used?

A. In Rom. ii 7 and 2 Tim. i. 10, the Greek is aphtharsia, signifying "incorruption;" in the other three instances it is athanasia, signifying "deathlessness."

Q. Can you refer to a text, as an illustration, wherein both terms occur?

A. The "golden text" at head of this lesson, "For this corruptible must put on incorruption (aphtharsia) and this mortal must put on immortality (athanasia).

Q. Then, speaking critically, how many times does the term immortality occur in the Scriptures?

A. Three times; once applied to God as a present possession, and twice to man, to be "put on."

Q. What distinction is there between immortality and incorruption?

A. One refers to life, and the other to bodily condition. When applied to a living object incorruption carries with it the thought of immortality, because the living being who never sees corruption will necessarily have endless life.

Q Are there any other terms used in the Bible to convey the idea of immortality?

A. The expressions, eternal life, everlasting life, and endless life.

Q. Are any of these terms ever applied to man or any part of man as a present possession?

A. In not one instance.

Q. What do the Scriptures teach as the condition of man by nature

A. That he is of the "earth, earthy." 1 Cor. xv. 47-49; made of dust and returns to dust; Gen. iii. 19; Job xxxiv. 14, 15; deprived of means of perpetuating life; Gen. iii. 22-24; mortal; Job xiv. 1, 2; frail as a flower, fleeting as a shadow; Job xiv. 1, 2; of same nature as the brute creation; Eccl. iii. 18-20; in death are asleep and unconscious; Eccl. ix. 5; Job iii. 13; Isa. xxxviii. 17. 18; Psa. cxv. 17; vi. 5.

Q. As man is by nature mortal, is there any hope that he may become immortal?

A The Scriptures abound with evidence upon this subject. In fact it is the central truth of the gospel and object of the coming of Christ. As Jesus said. "I have come that ye might have life, and have it more abundantly." John x. 10.

Q. As man is mortal, where and how can he obtain immortality?

A. It is a natural law that like begets like. As God only hath immortal life, if man would become partaker of this "divine nature" it must be transmitted to him. This life has been conferred by the Father to his only begotten Son. See John v. 26. And this divine life that is in the Son will be given to all who are regenerated through his power, John v. 21, as he promises, "Because I live ye shall live also." John xiv. 19. Christ is therefore the federal head of the new, or spiritual creation, just as Adam was of the old, or natural creation; "and as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall we also bear the image of the heavenly."

Q. What is the means or power whereby we may be saved, or as the Syriac renders it, "have life?"

A. The gospel is the "power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Rom. i. 16.

Q. Can you refer to some Scriptures teaching that the gospel is the divine power for transmitting the divine life?

A. "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures." James i. 18.

Q. Before going farther, what do you understand by the expression "first-fruits of his creatures?"

A. To carry out the simile, it must refer to the first ripe or perfect fruits; the purpose of God being to make man in the divine likeness, i. e., to bear the image of the heavenly," 1 Cor. xv. 49, as it is written, "Christ the first-fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor. xv. 23. This does not refer to the old, or natural creation, but instead, to the new or spiritual creation; and no fruit of this creation can be ready to be garnered until it is perfected, or like him at his coming. 1 John iii. 2. This perfection must include immortal life, as well as moral likeness.

Q Continue with texts showing the gospel to be the divine channel for communicating spiritual life.

A. "Being born (begotten) again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." 1 Peter i. 23. This seed by which the "new creature in Christ Jesus" is begotten is "incorruptible," and must according to natural law which is divine law, bring forth a creature after its kind, which must necessarily, therefore, be "incorruptible," and "live and abide forever." "In Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel." 1 Cor. iv. 15. From these three texts we find the begetting power for the new life termed, the "word of truth," the "word of God," and the "gospel:" which can truly be said to be the power of God unto salvation unto everyone that believeth."

Q How is this life-giving word received?

A. Through belief, or faith. "Without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Heb. xi. 6

Q. Can you refer to some Scriptures that directly connect faith or belief with the hope of eternal life?

A. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John iii. 16. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life." John iii. 36. "Everyone which seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." John iv. 40. "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John v. 11, 12. See also 2 Tim. i. 10; Tit. i. 2; 1 Tim. vi. 12; 1 John iv. 25; John v. 24-26; Gal. vi. 7, 8; John vi. 27, 57, 58; Rom. vi. 22, 23; Luke xviii. 29, 30.

Q. Upon what other virtue is the possession of eternal life predicated?

A. Obedience; for "he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." John ii. 17.

Q. What proof can we have of the possession of this divine seed, or immortal life in embryo?

A. By its manifestation in our lives; for "by their fruits shall ye know them," and as the Savior says, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." John xiii. 35. We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death. 1 John iii. 14. "Every one that loveth is born (begotten) of God and knoweth God." v. 7. "If we love one another God dwelleth in us." v. 12. "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." v. 16

These Scriptures demonstrate that he who has been begotten of God through faith, will manifest a "faith that works by love," and thus demonstrate that the divinely implanted seed, or "indwelling of God," is a living reality by bearing the "fruits of the spirit." Gal. v. 22, 23; otherwise, "faith without works is dead," Jas. ii. 17; and the good seed having fallen into barren soil, cannot grow and "bring forth fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." Rom. vi. 22.

Q. When will this new, divine, spiritual incorruptible and immortal life be manifested?

A. At the second coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead; as it is written, "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order; Christ the first-fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor. xv. 22, 23. "When he shall appear we shall be like him." 1 John iii. 2. "If the dead rise not....then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." 1 Cor. xv. 16–18 See also 1 Thess. iv. 13–18; Luke xiv. 14; Phil. iii. 8, 11; 1 Cor. xv. 16–20; John vi. 39, 44, 51, 54; Acts xxiv. 15; John v. 27–29; Job xiv. 14, 15

Q. How would you recapitulate this lesson?

A. 1. That man by nature is mortal; 2. Immortality is a divine attribute; 3. Man can only obtain it through union with God; 4 Such a union is provided by the gospel, which shows how man may become united to Christ who has received this divine life from the Father, and thus partake of the divine nature; 5. The union with God through Christ is by means of faith; 6. This faith is proven by obedience to the divine will and commandments; 7. The vitality of this union is demonstrated by love, which is manifested by the child of God as a natural fruit of his growth into the divine likeness; 8. Therefore, without faith, obedience and love no mortal may hope to attain unto immortality.

GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICE.

THE CHRISTIAN HYMNAL

The above is the title of a New Hymn Book just issued from THE RESTITUTION office, containing 158 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, printed on fine paper, from good clear type. Music on every page, followed by two to four sets of words that go to the music, making over 400 hymns. To this is added 23 pages of Hymns for Children to use in Sunday Schools or at home. We want some good brother or sister in every locality to take this work in hand and introduce it to the friends in your neighborhood. Will every minister of our faith please send us the name and address of some good, energetic worker in each congregation where he labors.

Price 35 cents each; 3 copies for $1.00; 6 copies for $2.00; 12 copies, $4.00. Special rates to congregations wishing larger quantities to place in churches, or to those who will act as agents and introduce the work in their neighborhoods.

Report of Conference.

The Michigan State Conference convened at Watson. Jan. 18, as per announcement. President called the meeting to order. After singing and invocation the usual committee of arrangements was appointed. Bro. Hoyt then spoke from the words, "Put on the whole armor of God."

Jan. 19 met at half-past nine for social meeting. At half-past ten the business meeting began by the Secretary reading a communication from the church at Millbrook endorsing the bearer, L. D. Decker as their delegate, and asking his acceptance as such. Delegate accepted. The work of the Philadelphia conference was then taken up and discussed at length. There was a great deal of misunderstanding about just what was done at that meeting. After much time had been consumed in explanations, the following resolutions were passed.

Moved that we heartily endorse the action of the Philadelphia Conference, and recommend that each church in Michigan adopt the same.

Moved that we recommend that each church in Michigan take action at once and by individual contribution and pledges (where not convenient to pay immediately) do their utmost to raise the amount necessary to secure the munificent offer of Bro. G. F. Work, thereby placing the National Conference on a good, financial basis at once.

Moved that we recommend that each church report at once to the Secretary of the National Conference (Bro. A. J. Eychaner, Marshalltown, Ia.) if they want Sunday School Quarterlies and how many.

Adjourned till 7:30 p. m., at which time Bro. L. C. Chase spoke from Acts xxii. 16

Sunday, the 20th, met at 9:30 and enjoyed an hour of prayer, praise and exhortation, after which Bro. B. W. Woodward spoke from Rev. iii. 2: Met again in the evening when Bro. Chase spoke from Psa. xxxi. 19. We then ate the Memorial Supper and "sang the hymn." Notwithstanding some differences of opinion existed at the first on business matters, the meeting was entirely harmonious and the best of feeling prevailed.

L. C. CHASE, Sec.

To the Brethren in Nebraska.

Will all the Brethren and Sisters of the Church of God in Nebraska, send me their full name and P. O. address, that I may send to the Executive Board of the National Conference. Also state what you think might be done if a series of meetings could be held in your respective localities. Brethren and Sisters, it will be but little trouble for you to comply with the above request, and we hope to hear from all at once.

The time for work is short, so let us be up and doing. Let us unite our efforts and see what we can do for the Master in the State of Nebraska.

Who will I hear from first?

ALMUS ADAMS, Arapahoe, Neb.

The Coming Age—Its Nature and Proximity. By J. P. Weethee.

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

It contains over 300 large pages, bound in Cloth, Price $1.50. Send to this office for this work.

The Eastern Question

In its various phases,—Egyptian, British, Russian, Ottoman, Hebrew, American and Messianic, by J. P. Weethee. The title of this book gives a good idea of its contents, and the reputation of the author is a guarantee of its worth. The subject as a whole, and in its different divisions is handled in a masterly manner, and the reader is convinced at once that the author has spared no labor in the study of his topics. The work is thoroughly done and any one who carefully reads the 540 pages of this book will be well repaid. It is just the book for the time in which we live. Cloth binding, clear, pleasant type to read, and good paper. Price $2.50. Send to this office; orders will now be promptly filled, as we have received an invoice of the book, and will send direct from here. The two books, "Coming Age" and "Eastern Question" if ordered together, $4.00.

Dr. Smith's Bible Dictionary.

A Dictionary of the Bible comprising its Antiquities, Biography, Geography and Natural History, with Sixteen full-page Engravings, numerous smaller Illustrations, besides Maps of the Holy Land in the time of David, the time of Christ, and several Maps of the Countries mentioned in the Bible. It contains every name in the Bible concerning which anything can be said. It gives an account of each of the books of the Bible; explains the civil and religious institutions, the manners and customs of the Jews, as well as other nations alluded to in the Scriptures. This work by Dr. Wm. Smith is just the "aid" to Bible study that you need, and every thorough student should place a copy on his table—you cannot read a chapter in your Bible without coming to some question on which you wish more information, and the best help you can get is Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary. Bound in cloth, 776 pages, price $1.50.

THE RESTITUTION

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Synopsis of a Sermon Delivered by Eld. B. W. Woodward in Philadelphia, November 22, 1888.

> The Scriptures, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. Gal. iii. 8.

How few professed Christians have ever stopped to consider how much is said in the New Testament Scriptures concerning Abraham and the covenants of promise, and that Abraham understood and believed the fundamental principles of the gospel, although the covenant which God made with him was about four hundred and thirty years before he made the covenant with Israel at Sinai. Gal. iii. 17. Even as Abraham believed God and it was accounted to him for righteousness, know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. Gal. vi. 8. Hence to be a child of Abraham it is necessary for us to have a like faith. Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made; he saith not, and to seeds, as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ. Gal. iii. 16.

No other name given under heaven or among men, whereby men can be saved. Christ the one seed came into the world to fulfil the promises which God made to the fathers. Luke i. 72, 73. To perform the mercy promised to our fathers and to remember his holy covenant, the oath which he swear to our father Abraham. On the fulfilment of this covenant—on this holy covenant—and hearty belief in its fulfilment, we rest our hope. The covenant underlies all dispensations, it is the bed rock of the Christian's hope. The covenant which was four hundred and thirty years after cannot disannul that it should make the promise of none effect. Gal. iii. 17. It was added because of transgression till the seed should come; it was Israel's pedagogue and died by limitation after fulfilling its mission, not affecting the original promise. How are we to become heirs to this promise? By being grafted into the one seed, which is Christ. How is the grafting to be performed? Gal. iii. 26, 27, tells us exactly how this is done, "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus; for as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."

The gospel has broken down all national distinctions and partition walls. Jew and Gentile, male and female, are on one common level; the gospel is the great leveler. We become heirs of the original promise by being adopted into Christ's family. "And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." We can trace God's promise through the Scriptures with as much accuracy as a good surveyor can determine any given part or parcel of land from his field notes from the original survey.

Now we will trace God's holy covenant for a little while according to his promises. We find in Gen. xii. 2, 3, the original promise; just what Paul calls the gospel. And in Gen. xiii. 14–17 the Lord said unto Abraham after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes and look from the place where thou art, northward and southward and eastward and westward, for all the land which thou seest to thee will I give it and to thy seed forever. How few have ever thought or realized that when Abraham was told to look to the four points of the compass, and that so much land was to be given him, that it had anything to do with the gospel. In chap. xv. 18 we get the immutable covenant with its partial geographical boundaries, but we have a much more comprehensive view of this promise in Rom. iv. 13, "For the promise that he should be the heir of the world was not to Abraham or his seed through the Law, but through the righteousness of faith." Please read Gen. xvii. 6–8. In Gen. xxii. 17, 18, we have our text repeated. Again in chap. xxvi. 1–5 we find that God has not forgotten his promises to Abraham and his seed. Here we find the promises confirmed to Isaac, and again in chap. xxviii. 10–14, we find Jacob's wonderful vision. He sees a ladder reaching from earth to heaven where the beautiful angels were ascending and descending on it, but not one immortal spirit there; but good old Jacob had a glorious confirmation of the grand old original promise made to his father in the 13th verse, "The land whereon thou liest to thee will I give it and to thy seed."

Where has the fatal mistake been made. We have been taught to gaze heavenward into starry space where rested the top of that angel-thronged ladder instead of listening to their silvery-tongued utterances of "The land whereon thou liest to thee will I give it and to thy seed." Now lest we become tedious we will omit very much evidence. Reaching nearly the middle of the Bible we find our Heavenly Father has not forgotten his promises as men sometimes do. In Psa. cv. 8–11, "He hath remembered his covenant forever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations." I once heard a man quote the 8th verse and apply it to the covenant which God made with Israel at Sinai, which was four hundred and thirty years younger than the one God was speaking about. He told the people to imagine themselves a hundred thousand years in the future and still that covenant would be binding. What a perversion of Scripture! Which covenant he made with Abraham and his oath unto Isaac and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law and to Israel for an everlasting covenant, saying, unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance. Sometimes we hear people say, O [illegible] hope is so literal, so very earth[illegible] not think land has anything [illegible] the Christian's hope; yet, w[illegible] the same class grasping [illegible] land and often mortgage th[illegible] stead to secure a little [illegible] estate. And moneyed men [illegible] anxious to secure a first-clas[illegible] on some man's house. Wh[illegible] cause it is considered the best and safest security. Now we want a home in good old Abraham's farm when he becomes heir of the world; but we want the curse removed, with all its attendant evils; and Daniel tells us in chap. vii. 27, "And the kingdom and the dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heavens shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Then let us pray constantly that our dear Lord's prayer may be speedily fulfilled, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." We shall all be satisfied when that glad time comes, with pain and death all removed, and the glorious restitution age makes all things new.

We find the New Testament Scriptures in perfect harmony with the Old. Luke i. 72, 73 reads, "To perform the mercy promised to our fathers and to remember his holy covenant the oath which he swear to our father Abraham." The same difficulty exists today that did in Paul's time. Eph. ii. 12. That at that time ye were without Christ being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers to the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world. We find in Acts vii. good old martyr Stephen filled with the Holy Spirit preaching an excellent gospel sermon. He tells us that God had not yet given Abraham the long promised inheritance, no not enough to set his foot on though he had promised it to him. Heb. xi. gives us a long list of worthy ones who all died in faith not having yet received the promises but having seen them afar off and were persuaded of them and embraced them. If all those faithful ones saw these promises afar off and embraced them, how ought it to be with us who are almost in reach of their fulfilment. Heb. xi. 39–40, "And these all having obtained a good report through faith received not the promises, God having provided some better thing for us that they without us should not be made perfect."

Hence we see how beautiful is Paul's idea that the church of God should all be perfected together, that all may partake of the fulfilment of those most glorious promises at one and the same time. Heb. vi. 13. For when God made promise to Abraham because he could swear by no greater he swore by himself, saying, surely, blessing I will bless thee and multiplying I will multiply thee. Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath. That by two immutable things in which it was impossible for God to lie we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us, which hope we have as an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast and which entereth into that within the vail, whither the forerunner is for us entered.

We find the whole Bible full of this grand theme. Matt. v. 5 gives us words from the Savior's life, "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth," not heaven. Psa. xxxvii. 29, "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever." Matt. vi. 10, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven." Rev. v. 9, 10, "And they sing a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof, for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests and we shall reign on the earth!" not in heaven! When will these promises be fulfilled? "And behold I come quickly and my reward is with me to give every man according as his work shall be." Rev. xxii. 12. Even so come Lord Jesus.

[illegible] OF GOD."

[illegible] his [illegible] that God has som[illegible] him. The possession of life is not dependent upon any man's faith or obedience. The first man was formed and made alive absolutely by the pleasure of the Creator. His continued possession of life was dependent upon his obedience to the will, word or command of God. He was disobedient and thus his life was cut off and limited to a few years. The cause of the limitation being man's disobedience and that alone, it is manifest upon reflection that until the limitation is removed by him who placed it there, man cannot live beyond the limit of his natural strength.

THE SECOND MAN.

It is just as clear from the record that God has given concerning Jesus Christ the second man or Adam that his existence was due to the will of the Creator as much as that of the first man. Jesus had no more to do in the matter of his first existence than Adam had to do with his. The first man was formed out of the ground and the second was made of a woman. God formed the first and he likewise begat the second.

Adam was in possession of life independent of any act of his own and so in like manner was Jesus. In the matter of the possession of life they were both alike. The continuation of life was made dependent upon Adam's obedience and so was the continuation of the life of Jesus. There was no death in the first man by his creation, neither was there in the second by his being made of a woman. The first man was disobedient even unto death. The second was obedient even unto death, even the death of the cross. The first man's obedience involved no sacrifice of his life. The second man's obedience involved his death for the ungodly.

The possession of life in both was the gift of God and independent of either faith or obedience. The continuation of life in both was upon the same principle, viz., that of faith and obedience. The possession of life, such as Adam had before he disobeyed the word of the Lord cannot be given to any of Adam's descendants. They all, without exception, require to be generated again and living before they can be placed under law for the continuance of their begotten life. It is, however, by the word of truth that every one is begotten. No son of man can beget himself. The only one who can beget is Jehovah, and the only begetting power is his word which is spirit. So that for a son of Adam to become a son of God he must be begotten by God himself by his word of truth.

While therefore no man can beget himself into the family of God he cannot be begotten against his will. He can and does resist the begotten word in every instance where that word is brought to him and he remains disobedient to it. In itself the word of the Lord is perfect and is injured by anything added to it or taken from it. Man is the only creature who can take from or add to or make that which is in itself living and incorruptible of no value to him.

Now this word of God is that special message which he sent by Jesus to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. It is expressed in a great many different ways and under a great many different names. At first it is presented to them in the form of a special messenger from heaven who announced the begettal of a son who was to be called Jesus. Second, by another angelic visitation announcing the birth of this child. Third, by the preaching of John the Baptist heralding the approach of Jesus to Israel with a message from God. Fourth, there was the baptism of Jesus by John and his being anointed by the Spirit of God to manifest God's power and disposition to heal Israel. Fifth, there is the period occupied by Jesus in delivering this message and the disposition of Israel towards him which g[illegible] their putting hi[illegible] of l[illegible]

Th[illegible] by distinct developm[illegible] ing over the affairs of men form the framework which encloses and fixes for this age God's word or message to Israel first and then to mankind at large.

This chain cannot be broken by any human power. It is the permanent demonstration of the state of mind which Jehovah has towards mankind. It is the detail of how he was and still is in his Son reconciling the world unto himself. It appeals to men who have eyes to see, ears to hear, and hearts to understand, and who wish to turn to him and be healed. It is styled by pre-eminence the glad tidings of great joy unto all people, because of its perfect adaptation to the miserable condition of mankind by disobedience to produce a perfect and permanent cure. It is the gospel of health and life. It is called the gospel of peace because it is a message of peace to men who are at war with God and with one another. It is the message of love to men who are hateful and hating one another. It is the message of purity to those living in the depths of impurity, in thought, word and deed. It is the message of light to men sitting in darkness and in the shadow of death. It is the message of life to man sinking into eternal death. It is the message of glory, honor and immortality to men who have none of them and who are deceived by the shadow of them. In brief it is the message of God whose thoughts and ways are as high as the heavens are above the earth above the thought and ways of men. It is engraven in deeds which smell sweet and blossom out of the dust when man and all his highest efforts have gone for ever.

The Lord Jesus Christ, the son of love, lives forever, the perfect embodiment of his power, wisdom and favor. He now is, and will for ever remain to all the future ages, the image of what Jehovah personally is and of what he wishes to make every one who hears him. Israel refused to hear Jehovah's message and failed to form or be formed into his image. They stumbled over the form of the messenger and persisted in ignorance of the only true God and Jesus his Christ whom he sent unto them. Jehovah in his love and kindness sent the same message to the Gentiles, most of whom were serving dumb idols. These at first received it gladly and continued for a time to walk in his light, but like Israel of old they soon corrupted Jehovah's message by inventions of their own which have made his word of no power to save men from sin and from death eternal which is the wage of sin. Few indeed of the many prophets who have gone out to speak to men in the name of Jehovah have eyes to see what he has done, or ears to listen to what he has spoken, or hearts to understand what he commands men to do, and hence the mass of the hearers are unconverted to God and remain just as they were before these prophets came to speak unto them. The mass of hearers are truly in their sins and are quietly rejecting God's message, which exists and is within the reach of the great mass of mankind altogether independent of any prophet, priest or preacher. Instead therefore of the modern preachers being a help to men who are seeking after God they are a hindrance, and those only succeed in finding him and in finding life eternal who turn from them as those in the first century turned from dumb idols to serve the living and the true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven to change their humble mortal body into the likeness of his body of glory, and give them possession of his power to heal men as he did when here before.

W. ELLIS.

"None of Self."

[illegible]aving once for all given ourselves [illegible] Lord, our business is henceforth [illegible] that we make ourselves wholly [illegible] our care is to to that in every[illegible] "we please the Lord." If we have given a great deal for the cause of truth, and from right motives, what [illegible] it matter whether the brethren [illegible]y appreciate the fact or not? [illegible] do is to be done "as unto the [illegible] If, in all our giving, in our [illegible] to meeting through heat and [illegible]old, in the hard toil of hands for others' good, we keep this in mind, it will save us a thousand pangs and heart-aches. Our comfort will be that "the Lord approves," that he is our friend, and that he will cause our righteousness to shine forth as the light by and by.

We are the Lord's, what does he want us to do? To keep our poor sinful selves so magnified and set before our eyes that we cannot see his face? To watch every word and every little stone, that is flung at this, our idol, and grow angry, and disobedient and neglectful of duty, because of the sleights put upon it? Not at all, my dear brethren. If things are not quite smooth, he wants us at our post. He wants us to go right. He wants us to be still a part of the pillar and ground of the truth. Our post is in the church. We are needed there. The Lord wants us there, and he will bless us in being there. The love of the Gallilean must conquer, "Lo he cometh with clouds."

Notice to the Churches.

Dear Brethren:

At a meeting of the Executive Board of the General Conference Nov. 26, it was decided to issue a Sunday School Quarterly, if the needs of the churches justified it. Will every church in the United States and Canada write me at once telling,

1. Whether you have a Sunday School or not.

2. Whether you would take or use such a quarterly in your school.

3. How many copies you will take, provided the quarterly is issued.

Yours for the truth,
A. J. EYCHANER.

Selections.

THE FIRST RESURRECTION.

From the Christian we quote the following extract from an article on The First Resurrection, by the Rev. John Urquhart:—

They who are Christ's, and who have often, like him, closed their eyes in death amid seeming defeat, shall triumph where they seemed to fail. They will hold the redeemed earth for God. It may be well to arrange what we are taught in regard to this great hope as answers to the following questions:—

What is the Scripture doctrine regarding the first resurrection? The meaning of the above words, Rev. xx. 4–6, is unmistakable. It is that the resurrection of all the dead is not simultaneous. There are favored ones who will rise first. These will reign with Christ for a thousand years, and when the thousand years close, the rest of the dead will be raised, the present mode of life upon the earth will be brought to an end, and there will be a new heaven and a new earth, Rev. xxi. 1. But, explicit as these statements are, the doctrine is so startling that we naturally inquire whether there is anything to show that the words are to be taken literally. Is there anything elsewhere in Scripture regarding the first resurrection? We have a similar representation in Dan. vii. 27: "And the kingdom, and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High: his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom and all dominions shall serve and obey him." And the book closes with a promise which appears to give to Daniel himself this very hope of the first resurrection: "Go thou thy way till the end be: for thou shalt rest, and shalt stand in thy lot at the end of the days," xii. 13. There are references to the same truth in several passages of the New Testament. Paul says in 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17, that "the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: so shall we ever be with the Lord." The resurrection of the dead in Christ is here spoken of as an event by itself, and as taking place while the earthly life of the nations still continues. In 1 Cor. xv. 23, 24, the resurrection is described as having three stages or epochs: "But every man in his own order: Christ the first-fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father."

There is the resurrection of Christ, who, with a perfect and complete humanity, with a body as well as a spirit redeemed from death and the grave, has passed into the presence of God, the firstfruits of that mighty harvest which will yet be reaped from the fields of sin and death. That is the first stage. The second is the resurrection of those that are Christ's at his coming. The third is what the Scripture names "the end," that is, the end of Christ's mediatorial work, and of the period of grace—the time of the last resurrection and of the eternal judgment, when fates are fixed beyond recall, and the kingdom is given to God who gave it.

We have another reference to the same hope in Phil. iii. 11. The Apostle explains the purpose of his unceasing endeavor to reach still higher heights in the Christian life. He states it in these words, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." What does he mean? No man bad or good, will be able to escape the resurrection, and if there is no separate and anterior resurrection of the Christ-like, the Apostle's words are pointless. But if we understand him to look onward to this first resurrection from the dead, everything is clear. He desires to make sure of his being one with Christ now that he may be one with Christ then. The same hope is plainly indicated also in the words of Jesus: "When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just," Luke xiv. 13, 14. The resurrection of the just is plainly a resurrection which the righteous alone shall know.

Let us ask now, what is the glory reserved for those who will in this way be claimed by the risen Redeemer as his own? They will share his triumph. They will not be mere spectators of his glory; they will be participators in it. "I saw thrones," says the Apostle, "and they sat upon them." "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High," Daniel vii. 27. Who may tell the glory of that dominion, which is after the image of Christ's? What earthly dominion equals his now? Which, of all that men have ever known, has been so founded on the heart's deepest affections, which has so grasped the inmost thought, so swayed the deepest purposes, so purged the desire and imagination, and so moulded anew the soul of man? What beauties, and noblenesses, and glories have risen up in man's life under the rule of Jesus! What divine peace, what Godlike joy and splendor have revealed his presence in the human heart!

And if all this has marked his sway during this period of waiting, what shall we say of it when the kingdom is made his in very truth, and the earth is indeed the Lord's? What shall it be when hearts are his as they have never been his yet, when every opposing power has been swept away, when God's will and not man's shall be accomplished everywhere, when the earth shall be the place of fulness and joy God meant it to be, and every life shall attain to his ideal? If we could conceive and [illegible] the glory of that reign, we [illegible] our glory will be. Incredible as it m[illegible] appear, this is the future in store for us. We shall reign with him, and hold the earth for God.

Two other expressions in the description should be weighed. "Judgment was given unto them." The judges, the heroes, who were Israel's true kings long before that people lusted after a nominal and external royalty, not only decided causes which were brought before them: they delivered the land from oppression, and cleansed it from idolatry and sin. They who reign, shall reign thus. They shall be heroes and helpers after the pattern of these. The Apostle adds: "They shall be priests of God and of Christ." Their service will cover the whole sphere of human need and human life. It will not only remove national and social ills: it will also meet the burdens and the yearnings of man's deepest spirit. They will stand midway between men and God and Christ with such a fulness of blessing as the mightiest earthly ministry has never yet known. They shall cause hearts to come to the Redeemer and to God with a completeness and ardor of which the Christian life of today affords no example; for they will reveal God and Christ to human thought with such an unveiling of the divine majesty, and of the riches of divine grace, as will mark the completion of God's work upon the earth. That risen life will hold the world by the Spirit's power. "They shall be priests of God and Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

We trust our friends will not forget the poor. We have calls every week for papers and books to go to persons too poor to pay for them, and we can only supply these as our charitable patrons furnish the means to do so. Those who are able can find no better Present to give to a poor brother or sister than THE RESTITUTION for a year.

Please take notice that we cannot fill any more orders for "Romanism" by A. J. Grover. We have exhausted the supply. Those who have ordered it will please order other goods in place, or inform us what to do with the money.

My address will be Rensselaer, Ind., until some time in March. Should any desire my labors in the Gospel work, they can address me accordingly, at an early date, that I may arrange accordingly.

Plymouth, Indiana, Feb. 13, 1889.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, Post Office, County, and State plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co. Ind.

Remittances should be sent by Bank Draft Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk: money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

OWING to the lateness of our return from Chicago, we must omit some notices till next week.

ON Saturday morning we left home to attend a meeting of the Executive Board of the National Conference held in Austin, Ill., a suburban town adjoining Chicago. As our Secretary will give an account of this meeting we confine our remarks to some incidental circumstances connected with this assembling of the Board. It was arranged to have several gatherings of the Church at Austin for public services during the time that some of the brethren from abroad were there. Accordingly Bro. A. J. Eychaner preached in the evening of Saturday, Feb. 9. at Giles' Hall, on the "Coming of the Lord." On Sunday Bro. Samuel Wilson preached at 10:30, a. m., on the "Fountain of Life." On Sunday Bro. Thomas Wilson administered the ordinance of baptism at 3 p. m. at the Baptist Church after which we spoke on the "Death of Christ." In the evening at 7:30 p. m. Bro. H. V. Reed delivered a discourse on "Heaven." In this address he made some very strong points in favor of plain Bible teaching, in a peculiarly happy style. The Church at Austin has rented Giles' Hall for one year, and the brethren expect to hold services there every Sunday at 10:30 a. m.

This is a new Hall just finished, and this was the first time that it had been occupied. The attendance was fair throughout, and on Sunday evening quite full. We have neither the time nor the space to say more now.

Trials of Life.

God knows what keys in the human soul to touch in order to draw out its sweeter and most perfect harmonies. They may be the minor strains of sadness; they may be the loftier notes of joy and gladness. God knows where the melodies of our nature are, and what discipline will bring them forth. Some with plaintive tongues must walk in lowly vales of life's weary way; others, in loftier hymns, sing of nothing but joy, as they tread the mountain-tops of life; but they all unite without discord or jar as the ascending anthem of loving and believing hearts finds its way into the chorus of the redeemed.

The Bible.

To multitudes of our race this book is not only the foundation of their religious faith, but their daily, practical guide. It has taken hold of the world as no other book ever did. Not only is it read in all Christian pulpits, but it enters every habitation from the palace to the cottage. It is the golden chain which binds hearts together at the marriage altar; it contains the sacred formula for the baptismal rite. It blends itself with our daily conversation, and is the silver thread of all our best reading, giving its hue, more or less directly, to book, periodical and daily paper. When the good mother parts with her own dear boy, other volumes may be placed in his hands, but we are sure that, with tearful prayers, she will fold among his apparel a Bible. On the seas it goes with the mariner, as his spiritual chart and compass; and on the land it is to untold millions their pillar-cloud by day, and their fire column by night. In the closet and in the street, amid temptations and trials, this is man's most faithful attendant, and his strongest shield. It is our lamp through the dark valley, and the radiator of our best light from the solemn and unseen future. Stand before it as a mirror, and you will see there not only your good traits, but errors, follies and sins, which you did not imagine were there until now. You desire to make constant improvement. Go then to the Bible. It not only shows the way of all progress, but it incites you to go forward. It opens before you a path leading up and still upward, along which good angels will cheer you, and God himself will lend you a helping hand.

SOME SIGNS OF THE TIMES. No. 2.

PAPAL POWER OVERTHROWN.

Thus he said, The forth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces. And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise; and another shall arise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings. And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his own hand until a time and times and the dividing of time. But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it to the end. Dan. vii. 23-26.

The above prophetic outline is designed to represent the Roman dominion in the twofold point of view that history has since fulfilled these remarkable predictions. Rome was, firstly, a united monarchy under a single imperial ruler; and, secondly, was divided into separate kingdoms bound together by an ecclesiastical system of such an influential and tyrannical character, as to constitute these divisions a decem-regal government. The cruel iron despotism, that was supreme among these decem-regal subordinates, was the "little horn" arising after the other ten, and of which power the symbolisms of prophecy have surprisingly met their fulfilment in the history of Papal Romanism. In predictions concerning Romanism the prophets distinguish between the ruling class and the people ruled. Daniel is speaking of the governing power, and employs the symbol "little horn," and John in Revelations, speaks of the whole ecclesiastical system under the most appropriate figure possible—"The mother of harlots." As a monarchy the Papacy had a political status among the nations that it has lost forever, but the ecclesiasticism remains—but only for a very short time longer. Our present paper is designed to show more fully, than the preceding one did, the circumstances attendant upon the overthrow of the Papal throne. The temporal power of the Papacy is gone forever, and the whole Babylonish system is now on the verge of its terrible doom. To show our readers how the temporal power was wrested from the Papacy we will quote from H. Grattan Guinness' late work—"Light for the Last Days."

"The year 1870—the final fall of the temporal power. The four years 1866—1870, years fresh in the memory of this generation, witnessed the final stage in the overthrow of the long-falling temporal power of the Papacy. The first Napoleon had dealt it heavy blows of such stunning force that it seemed almost dead. But it still possessed some vitality, and revived for awhile. The injuries received had nevertheless been fatal, and the recovery was more in appearance than reality. The powerful reactionary policy of the allies, and the fears of the generation which had witnessed the French Revolution, and of the succeeding one, threw back the cause of liberty and the progress of nations for a time. The former tyrannies were reinstated, and maintained with a vigilance born of fear; and just as France had to submit to the old Bourbon despotism, so Rome had for a time to submit again to the Popes. The submission however was an unwilling and restless one during the whole period from the peace of 1815 to the overthrow of 1870. Italian aspirations for national unity and for political liberty—kindled by the French Revolution, and quickened by subsequent ones and by the examples of other nations—formed a powerful factor in the question. The Popes adopted a line of conduct which could not have been better chosen had they desired to secure their own overthrow. They had learned no lesson from the adversity they had suffered. Pius IX, who became pope in 1846, attempted at first some liberal reforms, and had he continued this policy he might have staved off the evil day. But it was not to be; the long impending downfall was to reach its close during his pontificate, and all unwittingly to himself, he consistently acted as if he wished to hasten it. The adversities of his predecessor, and his own, had taught him no wisdom. Even after the revolution of 1848, which made him for two years an exile, he pursued the same tyrannical course. When in 1850 he returned to Rome, under the protection of French soldiery, his policy became only more suicidal than ever. He re-established the Jesuits, re-opened the dungeons of the inquisition, and deliberately set himself to reorganize the European commonwealth on the model of the darkest days of the darkest ages. On his own sole authority, without the concurrence of even a council—a thing that no pope had ever done before—he added a new dogma to the faith of the universal church, the foolish and idolatrous doctrine of the "immaculate conception," which all men were required on pain of damnation to receive. He reorganized a Roman Catholic hierarchy for Protestant England, and busied himself in canonizing saints and gathering around him in Rome numerous and imposing bodies of bishops and dignitaries from every part of the world. He enforced in Rome a law prohibiting Protestant worship save at the embassies; persecuted those who dared to read the Scriptures in the social circle; and at last compiled and published his famous "Syllabus;" gathered his great Œcumenical Council of the Vatican; so managed it that the assembled archbishops, princes, cardinals, patriarchs, bishops, abbots, generals of orders, etc., had no liberty even to discuss the great question brought before them, but were fraudulently forced to pronounce in favor of the superlatively absurd and monstrously wicked dogma of Papal infallibility. This new canon of the Roman Catholic Church was decreed July 1870. The blindness of the Roman Pontiff and his hierarchy to the truth, to the temper of the times, to the State of Europe, and to the doom immediately impending over them, was complete.

A strange judicial insanity seemed to have befallen them. Men marvelled at their madness, and Bible students recalled the solemn statements of the apostle about this Romish apostasy—that because they would not receive the truth of the gospel in the love of it, therefore God would send them, in judgment, strong delusion, so that they would believe a lie, to their own condemnation and ruin. Very speedily was the blasphemy of this infallibility decree rebuked by the Most High! The same day that it was published, there was despatched from Paris to Berlin the declaration of war which sealed the fate of the Second French Empire, and with it that of the temporal power of the Papacy.

July 18th, on which the pope read, amid the thunder and lightning of an awful storm, the decree which marked the climax of Papal pretension, the announcement of his own infallibility, Napoleon III. despatched his challenge to Germany. We know what fol[illegible] how Protestant Prussia hum[illegible] self before God by a da[illegible] prayer on the 27th, and b[illegible] blessing on her quickly [illegible] armies; how the wicked and w[illegible] and blood-stained emperor of Cat[illegible] France, accompanied by his poor u[illegible] tunate boy, assumed the next d[illegible] command of the wretchedly [illegible] French troops at Metz; ho[illegible] mans defeated the Fren[illegible] Wessembourg and at Ge[illegible] August 4th, and on the 6th at Worth and Forbach; how they bombarded Strasburg and defeated Bazaine, and drove him back into Metz, gained another great victory—Gravelotte, and forced the emperor and the entire army into Sedan, where, on September 2nd, they had to surrender, and were all taken prisoners; how 300,000 men marched on Paris, and establishing their headquarters at Versailles, besieged it in September; how other German armies overran all France; how Bazaine had to surrender Metz and 173,000 men in October; and how, before the end of the year, France lay bleeding and prostrate at the feet of her Protestant foes, without an army in the field or an ally in Europe. And we know also how, long before this crisis arrived in France—Rome having been evacuated by the French troops, which were sorely needed at home—the pontifical government fell, to rise no more. The King of Italy forewarned the pope of his intention to occupy Rome on September 8th, and did so in the following month. Rome decided by an overwhelming vote for union with Italy, and was, with its surrounding territories, incorporated by royal decree with the Italian Kingdom in October, 1870. This was the fall and final fall of the temporal power of the Papacy. It was on the day of the last meeting of the council which had deified a man by declaring him possessed of the Divine attribute of infallibility that Victor Emmanuel's announcement reached Rome; it was on the day that the German armies closed round Paris that the Italian general Cadorna reached Rome. The struggle lasted but a few hours; the pope understood that further resistance would be more wanton waste of life, for his Zouaves numbered but 8,000, and 50,000 Italians were arrayed against him. As soon as a breach had been made in the walls of Rome, the word to surrender was given." Mr. Guinness here quotes another author, W. Arthur, M. A. as saying:—"There, yes, on the proud dome of St. Peter's, being raised, and beginning to flutter, was the white flag; and there, unwinding itself, did it float out in the breeze, and waved in the forenoon sun—waved over pontiff and cardinal, over the circus of Nero and the inquisition of the popes. Was it real? Eyes would be wiped to see if they did not deceive. Eyes—ay, the eyes of the soldiers—would be wiped from thick hot tears. Could it be—could it ever be? Come at last! The hour for which millions of Italians had died. Italy one! Her arms, outstretched from Etna and Monte Rosa, clasping at last every one of her children; and even availing, by their returning strength, to lift up her poor old Rome from under the load of the priest and the stranger. He who two brief months before had, amid deep darkness at noon-day, read out by artificial light the decree of his own unlimited power and irreformable law, lay down that night amid a rude and intrusive glare streaming from across the Tiber into the multitudinous windows of the Vatican. It came from the lights of Rome, all ablaze with illuminations for the fall of the temporal power."

Then Mr. Guinness quotes from Cardinal Manning, who admits that this fall was unlike any other fall that had taken place in the previous calamities that had befallen Papal Rome. The Cardinal says:—"There is one point in which the present crisis of the Holy See and of the Christian Church differs from all that has gone before it. Always in the ages past, when one or more of the European powers were in conflict with the Holy See, one or more of the other powers were friendly and gave it protection. Now not one stands in its defence; they have all with one accord hid their faces from the vicar of our Lord; they are all consenting to the deed. The princes and rulers of Christendom have forsaken their Master, and their silence in the hour of danger is flight. Never till now have all the nations of Europe consented in the deed of the nations who have usurped Rome. Never till now has the public law of Europe been changed to sanction the usurpation. For the first time the Head of Christendom is excluded from the Senate of Christian sovereigns, though the temporal sovereignty of the supreme pontiff, is of Divine institution."

We will now return to quoting directly from Mr. Guinness' own language, and let him finish the account of the overthrow of the Papal throne [illegible]rds. He thus continues: [illegible] last years [illegible] Papacy [illegible]ng in [illegible] D. 607, and [illegible] died in A. D. 610.

A. D. 606-10 1,260 years, solar 1866-70.

The whole course of these four years was filled with events singularly fatal to the Papacy, including overthrows of Catholic Austria, Spain, France, and the Papal States of Italy. The decisive battle of Sadowa, in 1866, between Protestant Prussia, and Papal Austria, settled the question of ascendency in central Europe in favor of Prussia and Protestantism, and that for the first time in history. The conspicuous loss of power in all Papal countries was crowned at last, when the prophetic period had fully run out, by the final overthrow of the secular powers of the popes in Rome itself. The year 1866 was the 1260th solar year from the death of Phocas. Can anyone suppose that these things happen by accident? Consider what a combination is here! Far back, at the beginning of the dark ages, a wicked usurper and murderer, thinking perhaps to atone for his crimes, presumes to bestow a prerogative which pertains to Christ alone—the headship of all the Christian Churches East and West—on the bishop of the ancient seat of Empire, Rome; and the ambitious and worldly-minded bishop dares to accept the gift, and seat himself in the temple of God, as if he were God.

Divine prophecy had foretold, more than a thousand years before, the uprising of this power at this period, and had foretold also that it should endure in the Roman world for 1,260 years. We pass on through the centuries, and note how this same power grows greater and greater, till it wields an authority mightier than that of the Cesars, at the pinnacle of their glory, for it rules over two hundred millions of mankind, and, according to its own account, rules not in earth only, but in heaven and in hell. We note how the saints are given into its hand, and perish by millions at its instigation. We note how all the monarchs of the Roman world give it their voluntary submission for centuries, and how at last they rebel against it, and seek to overthrow it; how they succeed in doing this time after time, though not fully or finally, till, when eleven centuries have been left behind us, we see this power deadening and falling. Twelve pass away; it is weaker still! Will it last out to a thirteenth? No; its duration is fixed at 1,260 years. We scan its condition more closely. Fall succeeds fall; yet it rises again, or rather is helped up again. The last four years are come; it still stands trembling. The fateful year is ushered in. Its first six months pass, and there is no sign of a crash; midsummer comes, and, lo! the storm breaks, and before winter appears all is over—as a reigning dynasty in Europe it has fallen, to rise no more! Is not this the finger of God?

Another fact should also be noticed here. From this notable date of the fall of the most idolatrous, corrupt, and persecuting power which the world has ever seen, the power which, in the ancient prediction of Daniel vii, is represented as the cause of the destruction of the Roman world,—from the fall of the temporal power of the Papacy, we go back "seven times;" and where do we land in the remote captivity era of Israel and Judah? In the reign of Manasseh, whose sins are especially assigned as the provoking cause of the Babylonian overthrow. Of him it is said, in 2 Kings xxi,

1. That he went the greatest lengths in idolatry, introducing carved images into the very temple of God, restoring the altars and groves which his father Hezekiah had destroyed, making his son pass through the fire, and worshiping and serving all the host of heaven.

2. That he imitated and even exceeded the wickedness of the heathen round about him in their ways, and seduced his subjects to follow his example, until they were more corrupt and abominable than the Canaanites whom the Lord had cast out before Israel.

3. That he filled Jerusalem from one end to the other with innocent blood.

It is scarcely necessary to point out that in all these points, idolatry, corruption, and bloodshed, as well as his being the cause of the ruin of Judah, this Manasseh was a most striking type of the Papal antichrist, who fills the church with image and saint worship and mariolatry, with indulgences and corruptions, and with persecution and bloodshed.

B. C. 650. A. D. 610. A. D. 1870.

We are pers[illegible] will peruse[illegible] [illegible]t pro[illegible] been so accurat[illegible] the events of history as t[illegible] that any such thing as a Pope-King in the future is a heaven-decreed impossibility. The many, costly, and varied Jubilee gifts to Leo XIII. were not given by many of the donors so much out of any reverential respect, as was taken for granted, but rather as toy-bribes to the poor old dotard in order to obtain something in return. One wanted Roman Catholic votes; another desired papal help in pacifying the turbulent Irish at home; ecclesiastics and communists had become troublesome to another, and Leo might possibly help. But when Leo asks help to regain the throne, there is a royal prince opportunely at the door to be presented and the Emperor William waives the topic coldly, and retires in disgust. The Pope-Kingdom is at an end, and the whole Romish system is fearfully near the heaven-ordained doom. "Come out of her my people," is now addressed to all in her idolatrous communion, and it is—the last call of mercy.

Dear Restitution:

Since reading Bro. Eychaner's article I've concluded to send for THE RESTITUTION that I may send to others as well as read it myself. I have never taken a religious paper in my life for two reasons, but when one can read such good Scriptural pieces as Bro. Eychaner's, I feel to exclaim as one of the brethren did who were on their way to Emaus when Christ walked with them, no wonder their hearts did burn, for the Savior was there, and when we read such articles full of divine love and full of gospel truth, our hearts do burn with love and longing for the blessed kingdom when the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord.

Now for my reasons for not subscribing for a paper heretofore, the first and best one is that I delight to read the word of the Lord clean and pure from his hand and unmixed with men's opinions. With our Bible helps of today, concordances, etc., there is no excuse for those who search the Scriptures, as we are commanded to do, to be lost in doubt concerning the wonderful plan of salvation revealed therein. My second reason is, there generally are so many narrow sectarian men's views that do not agree with the word. I see a copy of THE RESTITUTION once in a while, and some of the articles are excellent, and I see that some believe the whole gospel. Blessed is he that readeth and keepeth the words of this prophecy. All the prophets, Christ and the apostles prophesied of that grand day of days when Christ with his bride should rule and reign in righteousness and when the everlasting gospel shall be preached in all the earth, then the dead millions of God's creatures whom his Son came to suffer and die for, will hear the word of the Lord.

It is not only the living nations who may hear, but the dead; there is much Scripture to prove this, but one "thus saith the Lord" must suffice; Eze. xxxvii says, When he has opened their graves and brought them out of their graves shall they know the Lord and he is to make a new covenant with them. When does he make this covenant? After he has brought them up out of their graves. Let me ask a question, Why a new covenant if there be no hope for the dead Israelite? Again I see in vs. 28 that the heathen is to be there and know that the Lord is to sanctify Israel. When does the sanctifying take place, and when does the heathen learn this? Let the Lord answer; he says, when my sanctuary is in their midst forever more. Now shall we in the face of such language advocate that all who are not made perfect at the Lord's advent are eternally lost? or is the destroying to take place after his reign of a thousand years? If at the beginning I confess there is much Scripture I cannot understand or harmonize, but otherwise all is beautiful harmony; and when we see such love that the Father has for us, does it not make us strive harder to please him. We all know that harsh treatment from parents does not make loving children but the reverse, and surely no one can understand the loving plan of salvation without a desire on our part to do all we can for our dear Father and for his children, for they are all dear to him. A mother may forget her child, but not a sparrow shall fall to the ground uncared for by him who is love. May we all follow in the footsteps of him whose every act while here was love, that we may be counted worthy to help rule and reign with him in his righteous kingdom.

[illegible]lections.

Death and Co.

[illegible] temperance exchange publishes [illegible]he following in the form of an advertisement: Death and Co, wholesale and retail dealers in spirits, wine and malt liquors, take this opportunity of informing their friends that they continue the trade of making drunkards, bankrupts, beggars, and thieves, on the most reasonable terms, and at the shortest notice.

The advertisers return their sincere thanks to their numerous customers and to all the tippling part of the community, for the extensive patronage they now receive, and they hope that the many proofs that are now to be found of their success in the above line of business will secure to them the increased support of drunkards and little-drop drinker, as well as for ever silence teetotal societies, those bitter enemies of their long-established, legalised, and popular trade.

Death and Co. beg leave to assure the public that the article in which they deal is the best and most pleasant poison in the world, and they will warrant a certain death in every case where the individual perseveres in the use of it—Death and Co. being themselves under obligations to send more persons to prison, the gallows, and the graveyard, than any other firm, and they will do it with the greatest possible dispatch. To accomplish these desirable ends it is only necessary for an individual to take a glass occasionally, till he feels that quantity insufficient to gratify the craving appetite which it will soon create; and when whisky, gin, brandy, rum, wine, ale or porter appetite is formed, the person is then prepared to brave temporal and eternal misery, for the sake of another glass.

In short, Death and Co. will spare no means or expense to bring the wives and the children of their customers to misery, temporal and eternal, and drive to delirium and death as many as the public good requires. They are constantly receiving new supplies of poisonous liquor which they sell by the glass, the bottle, the barrel, or the hogshead, for the accommodation of their numerous customers, and for the dispatch of their increasing business.

Death and Co. have appointed a sufficient number of active agents, who are stationed at convenient distances in gaudily decorated saloons and taverns and so-called respectable hotels. These places may be easily known by the miserable looking customers who congregate around them, as well as by the odor of the poisons continually polluting the air around.

Satisfactory references can be given to county jails, houses of correction, lunatic asylums, hospitals, insolvent debtors' courts, the courts of bankruptcy, or to the wives and families of those whom Death and Co. have had the happiness to make drunkards.

The Jewish Sabbath.

There is a growing sentiment among the Jews of this country in favor of transferring the religious observance of their Sabbath to the Christian Sunday. The present system works inconvenience and sometimes positive hardship, and occasions a laxity of observance which causes a good deal of concern. The New York Hebrew Standard says on this point:

"There are certain facts which we are bound to recognize. These are that the business interests, the inexorable necessity which compels hundreds to labor on the Jewish Sabbath in order to support their families, have made the observance of the Sabbath the exception instead of the rule. Those you cannot preach to; they do not come to listen to you. You cannot argue with them, because your words will not provide the bread which they and their families must have. There is no Jewish law forbidding worship on a Sunday or any other day of the week or year, and if Jewish ministers will make the sacrifice to prepare two lectures a week instead of one they deserve our appreciation. There has been no attempt made to transfer, officially, at least, the Jewish Sabbath to Sunday, though the first has been surrendered unofficially by hundreds of men who delight in owning a pew in the most orthodox of synagogues. It is the unofficial transfer which stabs Judaism, and no action of the synagogue will prevail against it. Our country does not stand alone in this. Every large city in Europe is in a similar plight, and before another century will have passed some action will have to be taken by leaders in Israel."

In Jerusalem and Bethlehem no less than five new churches are being erected at the present time. Among these the most important is the magnificent Russian church, erected by the Russian Palestine Association. This society, which numbers among its membership some of the highest aristocrats of Russia, has an income which enables it to spend 15,000 francs each month for its work in Palestine. The Russians are remarkably active there now, especially in building churches, convents, etc., etc.

Their great tower on Mount Olivet, from the top of which both the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea can be seen, is the highest modern structure in the entire East. The monophysitic Abyssinians, who belong to the old Coptic Church of Egypt, are erecting an immense dome-like church near the Russian Church. In Bethlehem two churches are in process of erection—one a Roman Catholic or Latin, which is half completed; the other a Protestant church, of which the foundation has just been laid. The Greeks recently stole a march on the Latins, who conjointly control the Church of the Holy Sepulcher. They, during the night, fastened a golden Greek cross to the top of the cupola. The Latins were not a little excited about the matter, as, according to Oriental ideas, a cross over a building decides the ownership of the building itself. What the Latins will do in retaliation has not yet appeared.

LAST CHANCE.

MAGRUDER'S REPLY to INGERSOLL.

Please notice that we have secured the last few copies of Bro. Magruder's reply to R. G. Ingersoll that can be had. The edition is exhausted when these (24 in number) are gone, and will not likely ever be printed again. These are bound in cloth, and the Publisher's price was $1.00. We offer them at 75cts. each, post paid. Remember this is the Last Chance you will have to get a copy of this work, and those wishing one should send at once in order to secure it. We have turned away several orders in the last year, and this supply will not last long.

Poetry

"THE LORD KNOWETH HOW."

2 Peter ii. 9.

"I will trust, and not be afraid." Isa. xii. 2.

The storm-clouds are rolling across the horizon,
And peal upon peal of the thunder is heard:
The flashes of lightning are vivid and awful:
Yet never a fear in this bosom is stirred,
For is it not written, and everywhere shown,
"The Lord knoweth how to deliver his own?"

The gleam of the sword can be seen in the distance,
The moans of the wounded and dying we hear;
And warfare and bloodshed are growing more rampant:
But none of these things can awaken a fear,
For is it not written, and everywhere shown,
"The Lord knoweth how to deliver his own?"

The foe we contend with is artful and cunning,
And many, indeed, are the snares he has laid:
We are not unmindful of Satan's devices,
Though of his temptations we are not afraid;
For is it not written and everywhere shown,
"The Lord knoweth how to deliver his own?"

"The Lord knoweth how," though we often are puzzled,
And to our conceptions no pathway is clear;
But since we are guided by Infinite Wisdom,
The word he hath spoken forbids every fear:
For is it not written and everywhere shown,
"The Lord knoweth how to deliver his own?"

"The Lord knoweth how," is our strength in our weakness,
The promise of sunshine, though storm-clouds appear;
A peaceful assurance amid every battle,
The way of escape from each trial and fear;
For is it not written, and everywhere shown,
"The Lord knoweth how to deliver his own?"

"Truth Should Not Be Sought for the Pleasure of It, but for Its Use in Accomplishing One's Appointed Mission in Life."

The above headlines are quoted from some Swedenborg papers sent me as an antidote to conditional immortality. How is this for brotherly love? Here is one of the truths revealed to Emanuel Swedenborg, "That the Spirit or soul of man is immortal, in the human form; and when the body dies, the soul enters consciously into the spiritual world, its eternal home, and will never resume its material investment." This is one of the new truths claimed by the "new dispensation." Why, I know this long before the potato rot in Ireland; learned it from the Presbyterian Catechism, viz., "The souls of believers are at their death made perfect in happiness, do immediately pass into glory," etc., etc. How very fond some people are of being recognized foremost in religious discovery, as well as in other discoveries. Some of our old preachers talk as though they ought to have a pension, a royalty on every sound sentiment uttered by the young people. ("We taught that thirty years ago.") They wonder what will become of us after they are removed.

An old brother in prayer meeting said a few nights ago, "O Lord especially bless us who have borne the burden and heat of the day." He wanted extra pay for extra work. (This man knows nothing of grace.) It never occurs to the church-yet that the longer the term at school the more he is expected to know. In other words the greater our opportunities, the greater are our obligations, not our claim for pension. No not that. If the discovery of truth fills us with self-consequence, the discoverer may prove a blessing to others, but his discoveries will be worthless so far as he is concerned. He is like the man who was a prisoner in old Libby in Richmond during the war. After planning a way of escape by tunneling, burrowing under the walls, through to an adjoining yard, some hundred of his unfortunate comrades gained their liberty, but he was captured in the attempt to follow them. This will be, the word says, the experience of all who hold, get truth, for personal pleasure or personal profit. Jesus said to all such, "Ye have your reward," evidently meaning now in this life.

What a beautiful specimen of self-abnegation was Paul. His glory is not in what he is, or has endured, but rather in the death and resurrection of Jesus our Lord. The "new Christianity" appear to boast chiefly in Emanuel Swedenborg. Jesus, resurrection, Paul, the reign of righteousness, the change of mortal to immortal, are topics scarce noticed by the Swedenborg papers sent me as an antidote for the hope of eternal life, or heirship to an inheritance reserved in heaven, etc. I surely think in this case the disease is not near so objectionable as the remedy. A somewhat unpolished mother said, speaking of her daughter, "I don't intend lettin' Emily go back to Madam Waring's school; they don't teach 'em right," and I would say to the dear friend who sent me Swedenborg I don't intend letting go the old Christianity for the new, they don't teach right. Swedenborg exalts poor, bankrupt man, calls him alive, immortal, whereas Jesus, who knew what was in man, said, "he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son hath not life." It is always safe to exalt Jesus, but not safe to be exalting ourselves, because of position, wealth or knowledge. If we have truth, let us be like John, viz., content to voice it without claiming to be the discoverers of it and wounded if not shown to a front seat everywhere.

The following taken from a private letter will be read with interest by the many friends of Bro. Harsh. Will the friends in Colorado please send to him at 1223 S. 11th St. Denver, Col., your addresses and oblige,

A. R. Underwood.

Denver, Col.

Dear Arthur:

I see there are some brethren in our State of Colorado.

Please enclose some addresses, with county named in address, next time you or Eva write. Then if we take a run into the mountains perhaps we can put up with some of like precious faith for a few days.

I trust that the sentiment among our people everywhere is favorable to beginning work agreeable to the action of our National Conference, and that you have notice that churches are organizing and working up to the plan. At Plymouth, I am glad to say and feel, this will not have to be done, only the systematic giving for our own expenses and then in accord with the plan of the Conference for evangelistic work. I think the Ho[illegible] Spirit must have directed that Ph[illegible] it looks so reaso[illegible] ductive of so m[illegible] tion first, and th[illegible] and plan for w[illegible] only be known in the [illegible] elation. I rejoice that [illegible] beginning has been made, and am hopeful that all the believers will appreciate this grand opportunity for doing effective work, and cheerfully respond. Why, if our brethren and sisters everywhere were to pay but 25 cents a month, (to say nothing of that God-given plan of one-tenth of their income,) what a fund would appear every quarter! We are probably 3000 or 4000 strong in the United States. At the smallest figure it would amount to $750 per month, or $2,250 per quarter, and $9,000 in a year. Look at it! What an opportunity for doing good and getting good! One-half this sum, agreeable to the plan contemplated, would stay with the home churches where it is first paid in, —$4,500; the other $4,500 goes to the State committees, and is again equally divided, one part going to the national committee—$2,250 each for evangelistic work. Would not that sum preach effectively? Far more so than the way it always has been among us. Let us be faithful stewards of the talents our Lord has bestowed.

If, on the other hand, the members of our beloved communion everywhere should become impressed as some of us are with the fairness and reasonableness of reserving to the Lord one-tenth of their income, the sum collected in a year would be astounding. I think I write advisedly. Another computation on the basis of 3000 baptized believers who are willing to do their duty: considering that many are poor in this world's goods, while some few have very comfortable incomes, $10 per month will be a conservative average —too small, perhaps. This will bring into the Lord's treasury from each one $1 per month, $12 a year,—a grand total of $36,000; $18,000 stays in the home societies to meet necessary expenses, $9,000 to State Executive Committe for state evangelization, and $9,000 for general evangelistic work under direction of the National Ex. Com. This looks almost too desirable to ever come true. Yet nothing but avarice or neglect will prevent it. And if the practice became universal, I think the above calculation would fall short rather than prove over estimated.

The testimony of all who have followed the custom of giving one-tenth their income to the Lord is a testimony of rejoicing and not of complaint. This is encouraging to the weak who may fear to trust God with their pocket books. Some of us are familiar with the history of Colgate the great manufacturer of fine soaps, who, when he embarked in business for himself, directed his book-keeper to open an account with the Lord and place to his credit one-tenth of the yearly income. He was greatly prospered and showed his gratitude to the Giver of all Good by subsequently increasing his one-tenth to one-half, and in his later years bestowed all the annual income in this way. "In him we live and move and have our being." Each one of us trusts him for all we have and for future life,—why not trust him with a few paltry cents each week? May he add his blessing.

Amos P. Harsh.

Dutton, Mich., Feb. 2, '88.

Dear Ones of the Blessed Hope:

I have not been able to do much evangelistic work since returning from the East, but thought you would like to know of the little I had done. Jan. 12th I went to Moline and held meetings five nights, baptizing one brother and adding four members to the church there. From there wife and I went to Watson to attend the Quarterly Conference. After its close we continued the meetings one week, baptizing three persons into the all-saving name. There was an increasing interest every night, the last evening the house being well filled. I could not stay longer as I had promised the Fisher brethren one evening this week to instruct them in the work of the Philadelphia Conference. Tomorrow I start for Hesperia, nearly 100 miles northeast, to hold a series of meetings of which I will report on my return. Bro. Chase and ourselves are doing our best to convince the brethren of the great necessity of adopting the work done at the Philadelphia meeting, and are satisfied when we all understand the need of systematic work so well begun by Bro. Work's efforts they will gladly accept and readily contribute their means to the advancement of a cause which is the brightest and best the world ever knew. May God help all to see the need of immediate action, and remember it is to the well done and faithful ones the promise was made of entering into rest.

B. W. Woodward.

Blessed Are the Merciful, for They Shall Obtain Mercy.

[illegible] his principle in G[illegible] [illegible] I [illegible] [illegible] princess who dre[illegible] [illegible] out of the water and saved its life and tenderly brought up that Hebrew child gave him a name, Moses, i. e., "I drew him out of the water." Other men's names were changed, but he was Moses on Mount Sinai and on the Mount of Transfiguration, and always will be. Probably her heart was well nigh broken when he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter. How far she was or is to be affected, by this principle in the divine government, I cannot tell. How far the heathen, in other lands, and by other deeds, I know not. But one thing I do know, this is the keynote in the decision in Matt. xxv., "Inasmuch as ye done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye done it unto me. Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

C. Boardman.

The following note from Bro. Rice will be of interest to many, so we give it place:

Delano, Cal.

Bro. Underwood:

I reached home Jan. 30th after a long and eventful absence. Found all well at home and was myself delighted to get safely back. It occurred to me to ask you to announce my arrival in Delano, and to say that if any of the brethren in California so desire and can arrange to meet the necessary expenses I could preach some this summer. Hope to write about my trip soon.

Your brother in Christ,
Hugh B. Rice.

Dear Restitution:

Having attended a meeting at LaPaz, conducted by Bro. L. E. Conner, I thought I would try and tell the brotherhood through your paper what good meetings we had. We commenced Dec. 29, 1888, and closed Jan. 18, 1889. There was good attendance throughout and he spoke the truth in love and with a zeal worthy of imitation, his whole aim being to establish the truth. If we only had more men that would go and preach the truth and let others alone, I think there could be much more good done. Bro. Conner's way of speaking is worthy of example by old brethren. There can more good be done through love than any other way. Men have their way of thinking and to abuse them for it is to drive them away. There were members from nine different congregations there and were all interested. Two came out in obedience to the gospel. Anyone wanting a preacher will find one worthy of commendation in Bro. Conner. May he live long and do much good.

LESSONS FOR EARNEST STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.—No. 48.

DESTINY OF THE WICKED.

Golden Text.—"The Lord preserveth all that love him: but all the wicked will he destroy." Psa. cxlv. 20.

Question. Who are the wicked?

Answer. Sinners, all who are opposed to God; all who do not live in harmony with the divine laws.

Q. In the natural world, what is the inevitable result that follows a diseased condition, or one out of harmony with the laws of nature, which are the laws of God?

A. Death.

Q. What result follows a life spent in harmony with the laws of God?

A. Eternal life.

Q. Is eternal life, or continued existence a condition natural to man?

A. It is not, but is a "reward" or "gift" of God.

Q. Can any human being exist eternally without coming into harmonious relationship with God?

A. It is impossible.

Q. If all men are by nature mortal, and immortality or endless existence are effects that follow certain causes, what must necessarily be the destiny of those whose lives are not affected by those causes?

A. They must inevitably die, or cease to exist?

Q. What moral condition is opposed to God, and fatal to life eternal?

A. Sin is a condition of moral disease that will certainly result in eternal death.

Q. What antidote is provided to counteract the effects of the moral poison of sin?

A. "The blood of Jesus Christ that cleanseth us from all sin." 1 John i. 7.

Q. How can this antidote be applied?

A. "The blood is the life." The life of Christ was untainted with sin; that pure life became a sacrifice for sin; all who are united to Christ become partakers of that divine life, and are "freed from sin," "dead to sin," and "sin no longer hath dominion over them;" being free f[illegible] the cause of [illegible] live [illegible] now [illegible] become servants of [illegible] your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." See Rom. vi.

Q. Without the application of this divine remedy to the sin-poisoned, what result must follow?

A. "When lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin, and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." Jas. i. 15.

The destiny of the wicked therefore is simply the working of a natural law and not a direct act of God. Man by nature through sin is amenable to the "law of sin and death," and unless he takes advantage of the means provided in the new "law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus" "the wrath of God abideth on him," and he "abideth in death."

Q. What terms are used in the Scriptures to describe the destiny of the wicked?

A. "Death, perish, be destroyed, cut off, devoured, rooted out, burned up, consume away, not be, be as though they had not been, everlasting destruction," etc., all very positive expressions to indicate disorganization of being and cessation of life. See Eze. xviii. 6; Jas. v. 20; 2 Peter iii. 9; ii. 12; Psa. xxxvii. 10, 20, 38; xcii. 9; xxi. 9; civ. 35; cxlv. 23; xcii. 7; xlix. 14; Prov. xix 9; Luke xiii. 3; Job xx. 7, 8; Isa. i. 28; xxvi. 14; Matt. iii. 12; vii. 13; xiii. 30, 40, 42; Mal. iv. 1, 3; Oba. 16; Job vii. 21; Rev. xi. 18; 2 Thess. i. 9.

Q. Is there anything in the Scriptures to sustain the idea that the destiny of the wicked is to suffer eternal misery?

A. There is not; but on the contrary, as indicated by the mass of Scriptures cited above, and many others, their destiny is to be absolutely blotted out of existence.

Q. How do you explain the text in Matt. xxv. 46, "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal?"

A. Two conditions are here contrasted, eternal life and everlasting punishment, but the punishment is not specified. It must, of course, be the same as other testimonies specify, i. e., death. The two destinies are therefore everlasting life or life without end for the righteous, and everlasting death, or death unending, unbroken by any revival, for the wicked; or, as the Emphatic Diaglott renders the text, "a cutting off age-lasting." These two contrasted destinies are the same as specified in our golden text: "The Lord preserveth all that love him, but all the wicked will he destroy."

Q. How do you explain the numerous allusions to hell in the Scriptures?

A. The Revised Version eliminates nearly all of these expressions, leaving the original Hebrew word sheol, and Greek hades untranslated. These terms are synonymous and relate to the grave, or underworld, the home of the dead, and under no possible circumstances can they be twisted into meaning a place of torment for living beings. The few instances where the word hell is retained are when translated from the Greek, gehenna, signifying the Valley of Hinnom, near Jerusalem, a place for the depositing of offal and dead bodies from the city, where the worm and the fire completed the work of destruction started by nature. This term is used as symbolic of the final destruction of the impenitent and rebellious enemies of God.

Q. Does the term hell, or any of the original words, ever convey the idea of conscious and unending misery?

A. Never; but on the contrary always refers either to the unconsciousness of the grave, or the final destruction of those who are subjects of the divine condemnation.

Q. It is taught that the terms, perish, destroy, death, etc., when applied to the wicked, have a different meaning from those in general usage. Is this warranted?

A. It is an unwarranted misuse of language and flagrant "wresting of the Scriptures" to give these terms other their usual lexicon definition when used in the Scriptures. The sacred writers used the same terms as contemporary classic writers, and ordinary sense teaches with intent of conveying the same meaning. To teach that death means life in misery, perish means to continue to exist, and destruction means to be preserved in hell, is a wilful blindness to the meaning of language to support a theory that is without foundation in the Scriptures, but has its origin in heathen tradition.

Q. How would you summarize this lesson?

A. Man by nature is tainted with sin; sin is enmity to God; that which is opposed to God is corrupt and cannot be preserved; those who do not take advantage of the provided remedy for sin must suffer its penalty, death; death is cessation of life; an unbroken line of testimony teaches that the wicked will cease to exist and there is no Scripture warrant for the doctrine of eternal torment; therefore, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap; for he that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption, but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Gal. vi. 7, 8.

The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. By L. C. Thomas.

Title page.—"The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. Also an Epitome of the Great Salvation; and an Appendix including various other subjects, in brief.

The perfect unchangeable moral law is considered and shown to be the basis and spirit of the old Sinaitic law, now dead in its entirety. The law of Moses and law of Christ are compared and contrasted, and the relation of both to the old and new covenants is treated at some length. The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the state of the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 450 pages, Cloth bound, Price $1.00.

PATIENCE WITH THE LIVING.

Sweet friend, when thou and I are gone
  Beyond earth's weary labor,
When small shall be our need of grace
  From comrade and from neighbor;
Passed all the strife, the toil, the care,
  And done with all the sighing,
What tender truth shall we have gained,
  Alas! by simply dying?

Then lips too chary of their praise
  Will tell our merits over,
And eyes too swift our faults to see
  Shall no defect discover.
Then hands that would not lift a stone
  Where stones were quick to cumber
Our steep hill path, will scatter flowers
  Above our pillowed slumber.

Sweet friend, perchance both thou and I,
  Ere love is past forgiving,
Should take the earnest lesson home—
  Be patient with the living.
To-day's repressed rebuke may save
  Our blinding tears to-morrow;
Then patience—e'en when keenest edge
  May whet a nameless sorrow.

'Tis easy to be gentle when
  Death's silence shames our clamor,
And easy to discern the best
  Through memory's mystic glamour;
But wise were it for thee and me,
  Ere love is past forgiving,
To take the tender lesson home—
  Be patient with the living.

Miracles and Scientific Thought, a Review of Rev. Myron Adams.

Mr. Adams has given two lectures upon the subject of "Miracles and Scientific thought" which have done more than either of the other lectures on Evolution to throw a discredit, not only upon certain portions of Scripture, but upon the divine authority of the Old and New Testaments by the attitude taken in relation to miracles.

One cannot well help feeling that it is an insiduous attempt to shake confidence in the Bible. One thing is very apparent in all his lectures, he has little or no confidence in it as of an essential value as a further guide to an eternal existence. Its teachings are not in accord with his knowledge of science and philosophy.

I am satisfied however that Mr. Adams' knowledge of the teachings of the Scriptures is very imperfect. This may have led him to turn to evolution, or to science and philosophy to satisfy an inward thirst for light.

But it is an old contention that the teachings of the Bible are contrary to the established facts of science. I contend on the contrary, the Bible nowhere opposes demonstrated science, but always has been, and is yet far in advance of man's highest attainments in scientific knowledge.

For ages man taught that the earth was created at the beginning of the Adamic creation, and centuries before science discovered that the earth existed many thousand years before that, the Bible had been saying that at the beginning of the Adamic creation "the earth was without form and void." For ages man taught the world was made out of nothing, yet, all the time the Bible was saying "Unto us there is one God the Father, out of whom are all things."

For ages man taught the earth was flat, yet all the time the Bible was saying, "God sitteth upon the sphere, or circle of the earth," thus teaching the earth was round. For ages man taught that the earth was floated on water, yet the Bible was ever telling man "God had hung the earth on nothing." For ages man thought the stars could be counted. Ptolemy counted 1026, yet the Bible was constantly saying to man, "they were as the sand of the sea innumerable." For thousands of years before the great scientist Faraday demonstrated that fine gold may become transparent like glass,—the Bible was saying, "pure gold like unto clear glass." For many years scientists have been saying that the land of Palestine must forever remain barren, because the olive groves and beautiful forests have been destroyed, yet the Bible is continually sounding in their ears that "God will plant again the fir-tree, the pine-tree and the box-tree together, to beautify the place of his sanctuary and make the place of his feet glorious, that the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose." For ages scientists have been looking for the missing link that would prove that man was evolved from protoplasm. According to Darwin the unknowable moved upon cosmos and evolved protoplasm, then creeping things, after that animals, and finally man, while the Bible says, "God formed man out of the dust of the ground, in his own image created he him."

For ages scientists have been saying God does not exist. Yet the Bible is ever sounding in their ears, "the fool hath said in his heart there is no God." For ages scientists have been teaching that death ends all, while the Bible is ever sounding forth the good news, "that Jesus Christ has abolished death, that he has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." That he is the "resurrection and the life," that "the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ." But now scientists and leading men of philosophy are saying that the "advanced thought, or the new philosophy" of today, will lead men up to recognize "in themselves and others the presence of an immortal conscious spirit," and a "redemption of the world complete;" while the Bible is ever proclaiming in our ears, "that God only hath immortality;" that he that would live forever, must "seek for glory, honor and immortality" in God's appointed way, that "the soul that sinneth shall die," that God will "yield vengeance on those that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," and they shall be "destroyed with an everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power." This must suffice to demonstrate the proposition that the Bible nowhere opposes demonstrated science, but always has been, and is yet far in advance of man's highest attainments in scientific knowledge. We turn from this part of the subject fully satisfied that "the wisdom of men is foolishnes with God," and that the man, be he who he may, that turns his back upon the Bible—an inexhaustable storehouse of the wisdom of Deity—acts unwisely. But the lectures we are now reviewing by throwing discredit on miracles strike a blow at the very foundation of divine revelation. Mr. Adams says, "speaking for myself, and perhaps for many, all the miracles recorded in the New Testament are as real to me almost as though I had seen them. I can see the thousands feeding upon the five little loaves, and the two small fishes, and the twelve baskets of fragments. I can see the Son of Man walking upon the water. Every such scene is depicted in my imagination as if it were an object of memory. Not only so, but every such tale is dear to me from association as well as from a feeling that every miracle is a crystal casket containing some precious truth. But when the cool reasoning process is started, I find myself unable to defend my acceptance of these things, even to myself. Is it not because the imagination has been educated, not in lines of scientific procedure, but in the lines of religious emotion." Here then Mr. Adams finds that miracles are not in accord with the "cool reasoning process," therefore the Bible account of miracles is not in accord with reason, for both positions stand or fall together. But before considering these propositions we would ask, what is a miracle? Mr. Adams has taken much time and labor to show that the old view, that a miracle was a "breaking in upon nature of a before 'absent God'" is not the correct idea of a miracle.

Now as a firm belief in the miracles of the Bible does not require a belief that an absent God in the days of Christ and the Apostles broke in upon nature in order that they might be performed, the time, and labor of his contention is thrown away. It has long been well understood that a miracle in plain English, is, a wonder—something performed contrary to any known law, therefore a divine wonder or miracle, such as related in Scripture is something performed by, or through the power of God contrary to any known law.

Had Mr. Adams applied the principle of understanding miracles as already stated, or as set forth in the incident which he relates from the "Life of Christ" by Dr. Cunningham Geike, or in Dr. Geike's own words, he would have had no occasion to throw discredit on the miracles of the Bible. Dr. Geike's own words are, "a miracle is only an exercise in a new way of the Almighty power we see daily producing the same results in nature. Infinitely varied forces are at work around us every moment; as they act and react on each other the amazing result is produced which we know as nature. But how many mysterious inter-relations of which we know nothing, may offer endlessly varied means for producing specific ends at the command of God!" This is a fair statement of what a miracle is. And it is fairly illustrated by the fable related; "A Bramin, one of whose disciples had been perplexed respecting miracles, ordered a flower-pot filled with earth to be brought to him and having put a seed into it before his doubting disciple caused it to spring up, blossom and bear fruit, while he stood by. A miracle! cried the young man. Son, replied the Bramin, what else do you see done here in an hour than nature does more slowly round the year?" If such a case had actually occurred, it would have been to the disciple a wonder, or miracle, because it was contrary to the ordinary powers of nature with which he was acquainted, and would have led the disciple to believe, and rightly too, that his Master possessed a power not common or natural to man to that extent, and therefore would be what we call supernatural. If the same thing had been done by, or through the power of God it would then have been divine, or after the order of the miracles of Scripture. Not an interference, violation, or breaking in upon the laws of nature, but an expression of power in accordance with a higher law—an exhibition of the "powers of the world to come" of which Paul says the believers in his day had a foretaste. With this philosophical and Scriptural understanding of what a miracle is, we have no occasion to say with Mr. Adams "when the cool reasoning process is started, we find ourselves unable to defend our acceptance of miracles."

But such is not the case as we have seen with Mr. Adams. He cannot by reasoning defend what he calls his own acceptance of miracles, and he further says in respect to miracles, "Science has this very positive testimony to give; that it cannot so much as consider a miracle." Then I will say in the language of Paul it is "Science falsely so-called;" for true science recognizes "infinitely varied forces at work around us every moment," and that God may command these forces in "endlessly varied ways" of which science knows nothing, for specific ends; for example, when God by Jesus Christ "rebuked the winds" and said to the waves "peace be still." Not only so, but true science recognizes in man who is in the image and likeness of God, a finite or feeble use of the forces which belong to himself and are to a certain extent under his control. For examples one may hold another powerless by a simple command, though at considerable distance apart, or bid him do the most absurd and ludicrous things and he has no power to resist, or as has lately been proven in France a man, or woman, may be made to commit a crime by the forces or powers at the command of another. Severest pain will sometimes abate instantly, and diseases yield to the power or force of thought. If science then recognizes these forces or powers at the command of finite man, who is but the image of God, it must of necessity recognize the forces or powers of the infinite God. And if finite man can do things that are wonderful, and contrary to the ordinary course and of which science does not know the "law," will the man of science question for a moment that the Infinite and allwise God can do and has done marvellous things of which science does not know the "law?"

And yet in the face of all this, Mr. Adams says, "It is on account of the great increase of intelligence and of the growing conception of the origin of law in the universe that our age has actually become intolerant of miracles."

This remark is susceptible of a twofold understanding, and whether Mr. Adams means to have us understand that the present age would not tolerate any thing performed as a miracle now, or whether the present age is intolerant of miracles in the days of the apostles, or both, we are not quite sure, but one thing we are sure the tenor of his lectures very clearly shows his unbelief in miracles in this, or any other age. We wish however to be understood that we have no contention with Mr. Adams regarding his belief that there are no miracles in the present age, for any one thoroughly conversant with Bible teaching knows quite well that the day of miracles is past until the Anointed of God—he whose right it is to rule shall return, when miracles will be performed again; not only such as were done in the days of Jesus and his apostles, but others more marvellous than any in the past, we have every reason to believe. But whoever now claims to do wonders or miracles by the power of God, is deceiving himself and others. But as we have already said, Mr. Adams in discrediting miracles strikes a blow at the very foundation of divine revelation. If we may so speak, the very foundation of God's purpose was laid in Jesus Christ. He it was of whom it was written "I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me,) to do thy will, O God." Therefore we may say the burden of the Old Testament was the promise of, and shadowing forth, of him who was "through death to destroy him that hath the power of death," and bring "life and immortality to light." Now of this person, it was revealed that he should be according to the flesh of the lineage of David; born of a virgin; but begotten of God, and therefore God's Son, and heir to the throne and kingdom of David. Now until this personage came, the purpose of God was simply the word of promise and type or shadow. But when Jesus came in accordance with the promise he was then the word of promise fulfilled—"the word made flesh"—the substance of the types and shadows. The word or promise was thus proven true. Therefore Jesus says, "I am the truth, the way, and the life." Furthermore, when he arose from the waters of Jordan at his baptism the spirit of God descending like a dove abode upon him, and the voice of God from heaven attested, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Now to discredit miracles is to discredit the evidence that God has given of the fulfilment of his promise to bring in one who should do all his will—"take away the sin of the world"—open up the "path of life" whereby men might be saved.

To discredit miracles, is to say Jesus was not begotten of God by the power of the spirit overshadowing Mary, that he was not born of a virgin; that the spirit of God did not descend upon him; that God did not say to John that the spirit of God should descend in the form of a dove upon him who was the Lamb of God to take away the sin of the world, though John says he did. To discredit miracles is to say there was no miraculous voice from heaven saying, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Then what follows? I answer. If Jesus was not begotten of God by the power of the spirit; if he was not born of a virgin; if the Spirit of God did not descend upon him in the form of a dove, if there was no voice of God from heaven saying this is my beloved Son, then Jesus was an impostor, John the Baptist was a liar, the testimony of the apostles is not to be credited, God has given us no record of his Son, and we have no assurance that the promises of God have been fulfilled, and the divine authority of the New Testament is set aside. I am surprised that a professedly Christian people will silently submit, yea positively countenance that which from the strength of my convictions I am compelled to express as an insidious attack upon the divine authenticity of the Scriptures. I wish I might be wrong in so thinking, but I cannot resist the pressure of my convictions.

But again. After John had seen the Spirit of God in the form of a dove resting upon him, John says, "And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God." After this he was cast into prison by Herod and for reasons w[illegible] sent his dis[illegible] receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, the poor have the gospel preached to them." Why does Jesus refer John to the miracles and wonderful works that he did if they do not attest to his divine authority? It had been written of him who was to come as God's Son, that he should do those things, therefore he said go tell John what ye do see and hear. If they were proof of his divine authority to John, then they are to us.

But what say the apostles concerning miracles? Paul writing to the Hebrews says, "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him, God also bearing them witness both with signs, and wonders, and diverse miracles according to his own will." Again he says to the Galatians, He that worketh miracles among you doeth he it by the works of the law or by the hearing of faith. Now I ask, Does Paul speak this of himself, or does he speak by inspiration of God? If the Bible be of Divine authority then there is but one answer—he spoke by inspiration. Then, God declares through Paul, that he confirmed his word and witnessed for his disciples by miracles. Again, Paul declares to the multitude what miracles God had wrought by himself and Barnabas. Again Peter being filled with the spirit of inspiration from God on the day of Pentecost says, "Ye men of Israel hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you, by miracles and wonders and signs which God did by him in the midst of you, as you yourselves also know."

And yet with this staring him in the face, Mr. Adams is unable by cool reasoning to accept miracles, and that "Science cannot so much as consider a miracle." Again he says, "need any reader of the New Testament be told that Christ was a reluctant worker of signs and wonders; that he did not value the faith that was founded on them."

Yet Peter declares that "Jesus was approved of God by signs and wonders and miracles which God did by him." Then, if God did them by Jesus then to say that Jesus was reluctant to do them is to say that God was reluctant to do them. But Mr. Adams also says, "Christ did not value the faith that was founded upon them," but what says the word, when the man was let down (see Luke v.) through the house-top in the midst of the assembled multitude; and when Jesus saw their faith he said unto him, Thy sins be forgiven thee. And when the Pharisees said Who can forgive sins but God alone? Jesus perceiving their thought said "Whether is easier to say thy sins be forgiven thee, or to say take up thy bed and walk." Jesus then adds; "But that ye may know that the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins he said unto the sick of the palsy," "Arise and take up thy bed and walk, and they were amazed and glorified God."

Here then is an instance in which the faith of those who came to him for the express purpose that he should miraculously heal the bedridden man, was quickly seen and responded to by forgiving his sins. But not only so, when the Pharisees replied, who can forgive sins but God alone? Jesus immediately answered "that ye may know that the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins, said unto the sick of the palsy arise take up thy bed and walk." Instead of not valueing the faith as Mr. Adams has said, he not only honored the faith, but readily consented to perform a miraculous cure that thereby he might establish his divine authority, and so develop faith, and it resulted in many glorifying God. But I must call attention to another instance recorded by Matthew. When Jesus entered into Capernaum a Centurion brought him to heal his servant who was at home sick. Jesus said, "I will come and heal him." But the Centurion answered, "I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof, speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed." When Jesus heard it he marveled and instead of not valueing the faith he said to them that followed "Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no not in Israel," and he said to the Centurion, "Go thy way, as thou hast believed so be it unto thee." But in this connection and as evidence, Mr. Adams says, "How reproachfully Christ says to one, except ye see signs and wonders ye will not believe." The saying of Paul is as true to-day as in the day when he said, "it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe, for the Jews require a sign and the Greeks seek after wisdom: but we pre[illegible] [illegible]ed, unto the Jews[illegible] [illegible] was because the lead[illegible] ish people were continually saying Christ "show us a sign from heaven, (though he had filled all the requirements of their Scriptures as the one promised as their Deliverer and did many miracles as evidence of his divine authority) what led him to reproach them by saying except ye see signs and wonders ye will not believe, and not as Mr. Adams has said, because he did not value the faith that was founded upon miracles.

But again. Mr. Adams cannot by "cool reasoning" defend his acceptance of miracles, then he cannot by cool reasoning accept the resurrection of Jesus Christ; for God performed no greater miracle in attestation that he was his only begotten Son than that of raising him from the dead in fulfilment of his promise that he would not "suffer his Holy one to see corruption" and thus giving assurance unto all men that he would keep his promise to judge the world in righteousness by him whom he had appointed.

To reject the miracle of the resurrection of Jesus Christ is to reject the divine authenticity of both the New and Old Scriptures. Not merely portions thereof, but the whole; for the reliving again of Jesus Christ to die no more, is the foundation stone of the purpose of God in relation to man as set forth in that revelation we call the Bible. I contend therefore that all so-called "religious advanced thought" under the garb of science and philosophy whether it finds expression in the pulpits of the churches, or in such works as those, of which "Renans" and Mrs. Hall's, "Robert Elsmere," are a type, is but a modern restatement of the old issues "did Christ rise?" "Is the Bible true?" And may be regarded as the "wisdom of the world" which Paul says, "is foolishness with God."

The Coming Age—Its Nature and Proximity. By J. P. Weethee.

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $1.50. Send to this office for this work.

The Eastern Question

In its various phases,—Egyptian, British, Russian, Ottoman, Hebrew, American and Messianic, by J. P. Weethee. Discourse by R. S. Dwiggins, on the Destiny of Russia and the Future of the Jews, at Philadelphia, Pa. Nov. 23, 1880.

It was a grand thing to live in the age in which our Savior was here upon the earth. That was one of the grandest ages of the world's history; but it is grander to live in the present age. This age is filled with more to encourage the Christian, the lover of Christ, and the person who has the hope of everlasting life, than any age in the history of the world. I propose tonight to compare history with prophecy and prophecy with history, and see if we can ascertain the milestone at which we have arrived, in the great plan of God with reference to the salvation of the human family. I call your attention to Ezek. xxxviii. This chapter read without some thought and some knowledge of the history of the ancient world, the geography of the countries that are therein spoken of, and of the names of the persons that are named, cannot be understood, but when we come to examine it and take it apart and look at it, I think it is easy of comprehension. I call attention to it tonight, because we are living in the age in which some of the things that are spoken in the prophecy, are to be fulfilled. While I speak to you with reference to what is and has been transpiring within the last few years, which indicate the fulfilment of the prophecy, I want you to keep in mind that I am talking about things occurring in this age, and not something that occurred many hundred years ago.

"And the word of the Lord came unto me saying Son of Man." Ezekiel here is called the Son of Man; and the Lord spake unto him calling him the Son of Man, and said: Son of Man, set thy face against Gog, [illegible] Magog the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal and prophesy against him." We here learn that this prophecy relates to a time hence the inspiration of first a containing wr[illegible] Gog was. It is the name of a monarch. A monarchal name the same as Pharaoh, Cæsar, etc., so is "Gog" [illegible] monarch of Russia. He [illegible] the [illegible] of this prophecy, when [illegible] the word "Gog" appears, if you [illegible] read in the word Czar of Russia, you will have correctly the meaning of the word. He was called "Gog" [illegible]. He is called the Czar of Russia today. In looking over this prophecy, we find that some of the countries named have the same name today. For instance, Egypt and Persia are each known now, but most of the countries spoken of, had a different name then. The Czar of Russia is the person about which the prophecy is spoken. He is spoken of in his official capacity as Emperor of Russia. Many of the countries named, are now embraced within the Russian Empire, Viz., Magog which is north of the Black Sea, Rosh, south of the Gulf of Finland, Meshech, north of the Caspian Sea and Tubal, between the Black and Caspian Seas. The Russian empire embraces eight million square miles; about one-seventh of the entire land of the globe, and from the days of Peter the Great to the present, the country of Russia has never parted with any of its territory except with its possessions in the northwestern part of North America. It has been accumulating territory in Europe. But it had no use for the territory it had on this continent.

"Thus, saith the Lord God, behold I am against thee O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal: And I will turn thee back and put hooks into thy jaws." The putting hooks into the jaws of Gog, or the Czar of Russia, is simply an expression to indicate that the Lord will lead him in the way that he would have him go. He said, "I will turn thee back." I will speak of that further on, "I will bring thee forth and all thine army, horses and horsemen, all of them clothed with all sorts of armor, even a great company with bucklers and shields." The Czar of Russia is spoken of here, not only as the Emperor of that country but as the commander of a great army, composed of troops from different nations. Before I get through, I will show you that it will be the greatest army that was ever mustered. "All of thine armies." They came from different countries, this proves that there is to be in that army, soldiers from different countries bearing different kinds of arms. "All kinds of armor. A great company with bucklers and shields, all of them handling swords." The prophet names the countries that are to follow the lead of the Czar of Russia or Gog, as follows, Persia, Ethiopia and Libya.

Every schoolboy knows where Persia is. Ethiopia is south of Egypt, called by the Hebrews Cush. Libya is in the northern part of Africa, all west of Egypt bordering on the Mediterranean Sea. And "Gomer and all his bands; the house of Togarmah of the north quarters and his bands, and many people with thee." These are the countries that are to be under the leadership of the Czar. Egypt will not fight on that side but under the opposing commander. Gomer is Germany. I have not time to tell you how I arrived at the conclusion that it is Germany. Togarmah of the North quarters. Togarmah is now embraced within the Russian possessions. We now have the Russian army, the German army and whatever armies can be furnished from Persia, and from these other two little countries I have named. "And many people with thee." After the prophet names the countries whose armies the Czar of Russia is to lead, he then says many people with him. Other countries are to furnish armies. There is the country of Austria, which lies alongside of Russia, it is my opinion (I give it merely as my individual opinion, because the prophecy says nothing about it) that Austria will fight on the side of Russia. That it will follow the lead of Russia. Lapland, Finland, Denmark and Siberia will I think join Russia. What Italy will do I do not pretend to say, neither do I know what Spain will do. I [illegible] prepared [illegible] people [illegible] prepare for thyself, thou and all thy company that are assembled unto thee, and be thou a guard unto them. After many days thou shalt be visited; in the latter years thou shalt come into the land that is being brought back from the sword and is gathered out of many people, against the mountains of Israel which have been always waste: but it (the Jewish nation) is brought forth out of the nations, and they shall dwell safely all of them." Every Bible student understands that this refers to a regathering of the Jews, in Palestine. Palestine has no army. If the Jews go back there, they will have no army to resist an invading foe. It would be idle for the Czar of Russia to marshal a great army to go over there and take the country of Palestine, unless he was resisted by some other nation, or rather the armies of other nations.

"Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm, thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou and all thy bands, and many people with thee." The immense army led by the Czar is spoken of as coming like a storm. Their numbers are so great that they cover the land like a cloud.

"Thus saith the Lord God; It shall also come to pass, that at the same time shall things come into thy mind, and thou shalt think an evil thought." This is the evil thought.

"And thou shalt say, I will go up to the land of unwalled villages, I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell safely, all of them dwelling without walls, and having neither bars nor gates." The cities are unwalled, and there is nothing to prevent the marching of an army into the city, except it be another army of like strength.

"To take the spoil and to take a prey; to turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited." Palestine has been deserted and practically uninhabited for many years, but when the Jews go back there as they are now doing in great numbers it will be inhabited.

"And upon the people that are gathered out of the nations, (referring to the Jews) which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the midst of the land."

We have here the policy of the Russian Government mapped out. She intends to obtain possession of Palestine. To accomplish that object, she has entered into an alliance with Germany, Persia, Ethiopia, Libya, and I think Austria, Lapland, Finland, Denmark and perhaps Italy and Spain. Russia has been doing all within her power for more than two hundred years to obtain possession of the Turkish Empire, the control of the commerce of the Mediterranean Sea and India. She will attempt to accomplish by combining with the nations I have named, what she has failed to do single handed. England has always been the leading power that has opposed Russia in her efforts to obtain possession of the empire of Turkey as aforesaid. To enable England to resist the combined efforts of Russia and the powers allied with her, England will also form a combination with other powers. This alliance is mentioned by the prophet. The countries that will be thus allied, which are named by the prophet are "Sheba and Dedan and the Merchants of Tarshish with all the young lions thereof, shall say unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil? hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? to carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?"

How does one country ask a question of that kind of another country which is marching its armies into it to take possession? There would be no sense in the question unless the merchants of Tarshish and the young lions thereof, and Sheba and Dedan were prepared to resist this army that is invading Palestine under the lead of the Czar of Russia. Sheba is a little country in the southwest part of Arabia, at the entrance to the Red Sea. Dedan is in the southwest part of Arabia, at the entrance to the Persian Gulf. They are not now shown on the map. I will make this prediction, before the great battle takes place, England will [illegible] commanding the entrance to the Persian Gulf, also a [illegible] the entrance to the Red Sea. Tarshish is England. I haven't time to go into details, and [illegible] I arrived at the conclusion that England is the old Tarshish country. The lions and the young lions thereof [illegible] possession of India, the Queen of England [illegible] India [illegible] people, [illegible] Germany will unite with Russia, France will [illegible] Napoleon [illegible] He used these words in speaking to General Bertrand.

[illegible] events, Turkey [illegible] to Russia. The greatest part of her people are Greeks, who, you may say, are Russians. The powers it will injure are France, England, Austria and Prussia, as to Austria, it will be very easy for Russia to engage her assistance by giving her Servia and other provinces bordering upon the Austrian dominions reaching near Constantinople. The only hypothesis that France and England may be allied with sincerity will be in order to prevent this. But even this will not avail. France, England, and Prussia united, cannot prevent it. Once mistress of Constantinople, Russia gets all the commerce of the Mediterranean; becomes a great naval power, and God knows then what may happen. She quarrels with you and marches off an army to India, of 70,000 good soldiers, and 100,000 cossacks, which to her is nothing, and England loses India. All this I foresee. I wanted to establish a barrier against these barbarians by reestablishing the kingdom of Poland, but you imbeciled ministers would not consent. A hundred years hence I will be praised. They will say I was right."

Read the will of Peter the Great, and the history of the Russian Government for the last two hundred years, and you will learn that the feeling of the Russian government from the days of Peter the Great to the present time has been to obtain possession of the Turkish Government, of Constantinople, of the Mediterranean Sea, and thereby obtain the commerce which England today has.

I will go no farther back in history than the Crimean War of 1856. It was an attack by Russia on Turkey, for the purpose of getting possession of the Turkish government and it was fought until they came down to Crimea, then England obtained the assistance of France and they sent their warships [illegible] up into the Black Sea, and the Crimean War was fought to the bitter end, and Russia was defeated. Statesmen and the newspapers for the last twenty-five years, have been talking about Turkey being carved up and being divided around among the nations. That Turkey was weak; that it would be carved up, and Russia would get a good slice, and Germany a good slice, and so on through the list. Let me say to you that Turkey will never be so carved. Mark my prediction, if you live until that time, you will see that Turkey will remain in existence, up to the time of this great battle, Turkey will then assist England in the great conflict. In the late war between Russia and Turkey, you remember that Russia marched her armies down and drove back the Turks until the armies of Russia were within fifteen miles of the city of Constantinople. The Czar of Russia could have marched his armies into the city of Constantinople in spite of the world, but he did not do it. When he got there he stopped, and what took place. All statesmen, newspapers and politicians said Turkey is lost. England has sinned away her day of grace. They never can drive back the Russians, they are going into Constantinople. Russia is to [illegible] possession of the Turkish Empire. What happened? Disraeli who was at the head of the English Government instead of [illegible] armies [illegible] could have done, against the armies of the Russians, went down to Berlin, and held a private interview with the iron man, Bismarck, and what happened? Bismarck called the Berlin conference. It met, and said to Russia, You must take your armies and march back to your own country, and put Turkey in statu quo, as the lawyers call it. After several months the Russians quietly marched back into their own country. So that Disraeli, with one turn of the hand, accomplished what it would have cost thousands and hundreds of thousands of lives to accomplish. But by diplomacy what he would not have been able to have obtained by force of arms. Russia today is no nearer Constantinople than she was two hundred years ago. After the Berlin Conference was called, Disraeli went to the Turkish Government and entered into a secret treaty with them, whereby England obtained possession of the Island of Cyprus,—a good place to store the munitions of war, and mark my prediction, it will be used by the English Government for that purpose, at some not far distant day. He also entered into arrangement, whereby the Queen of England has veto power in the appointment of those who shall rule in Asia Minor.

Russia, driven back, but not disheartened or discouraged, ever keeping in view her own great purpose of getting possession of the Turkish Empire, and the control of the trade of India, adopted an entirely different plan of operations. They built a railroad to the east of the Caspian Sea down to the city of Merv. She did this very quietly. I was watching it at the time, and nothing was being said about it. The first announcement was that the railroad was finished, and Russia had sent her troops down there. When she got there what was the position of England and Russia? There was only the little country of Afghanistan between them, they are threatening each other, both desiring to get possession of the city of Herat, that city being the strategical point which both countries desired to obtain. Their armies are there yet.

In reference to the statement, "I will put hooks into thy jaws, and bring thee forth." I make another prediction. I think this means, that when the next attempt is made by Russia to get possession of Constantinople and Palestine, the attack will be made from the East as well as from the North. The country of Persia across which the armies would have to pass is friendly with the Russian government. I think the armies will be marched from that direction as well as from the North. But when that attempt is to be made, I am not prepared to say.

Not many years ago, there was a rebellion in Egypt, a certain man there procured a following, and rebelled against the Government of Turkey. After some time spent by the Turkish Government in an effort to put down that rebellion, England took a part and sent her warships to Alexandria and fired on that city, and compelled the Egyptians to permit her to land her troops, they marched in and put down the rebellion, but the English Government did not restore the country back again to the Turkish Government as it was before, but England remained in possession ruling through the Turkish Government, but really, the government of Egypt. Egypt is one of the countries that is to fight under the lead of the English government in the great battle. A few days before this rebellion was put down, I spoke to my own congregation on this subject, and I said that when England had succeeded in suppressing that rebellion, she would remain in that country, virtually controlling it. Two weeks after that the soldiers had a reunion at my town, General Sheridan was there with his wife, I was appointed to take a carriage and drive them from the depot across to where they were having their jollification, on the way over (which was about a mile) I said to the General, "When the rebellion in Egypt is put down by the English, what will England do, will she withdraw her troops?" He says, "Of course she will Mr. Dwiggins; do you suppose that Russia, Germany, France, Austria and [illegible] into Egypt [illegible] that when the rebellion was put down, she was to withdraw?" "Do you suppose that they will consent that England take possession of Egypt without any opposition?" But everybody knows that England is virtually in possession of Egypt today, controlling its government.

"Therefore, Son of Man, prophesy and say unto Gog, Thus saith the Lord God; In that day when my people of Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it?" Russia does not want Palestine for the silver and gold. Palestine is situated in the centre of the land of the globe. It is the half-way house. The country that has possession of Palestine, controls the commerce of the world. Another thing with reference to the war in Egypt. When England went there, they took possession of the Suez Canal. De Lesseps the agent of the French government was holding possession of that Canal for the French. He refused to permit England to send her warships into the Canal, but England sailed her ships into the Canal over his protest, and the agent of the French government was called home. England took forcible possession of the canal, and still holds it. In order to make assurance doubly sure, England purchased a majority of the stock and still owns and controls this most important water way.

"And thou shalt come from thy place out of the north parts; thou and many people with thee, all of them riding upon horses, a great company and a mighty army. And thou shalt come up against my people Israel, as a cloud to cover the land; it shall be in the latter days, and I will bring thee against my land, that the heathen may know me, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes."

The armies are now assembled, many great battles have probably been fought between the contending armies before they reach the city of Jerusalem. The prophet however only gives the result of the battle for the possession of this city in the following words:

"For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle: and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city." Zech. xiv. 2, 3. After giving the result of the battle the prophet says, "Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations as when he fought in the day of battle," Zech. xiv 3. How does he destroy these armies? See the 12th verse. "And this shall be the plague wherewith the Lord will smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem: their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume in their holes, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth. And it shall come to pass in that day that a great tumult from the Lord shall be among them; and they shall lay hold every one on his neighbor, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbor." In Ezekiel xxxv. 21, we read, "And I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God; every man's sword shall be against his brother. And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him and upon his hands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire and brimstone." Thunder and lightning, that last ought to read. When these things come to pass the headlines of the newspapers will read. "A great battle has been fought near Jerusalem, the armies under the Czar of Russia have been victorious. The armies under the lead of England have been defeated and driven back; Jerusalem has been taken, half the people have been carried into captivity, and the city has been rifled." The newspaper comments will be something like this. The greatest battle ever fought. The greatest victory ever won. On the day following the newspapers will contain statements something like the following. "The victorious army under the Czar of Russia has been stricken with a terrible plague. The eyes of the men rot [illegible] struck with the same plague; a great thunder storm comes on, and both horses and men become panic stricken, so that every man's hand is turned against his brother, and against his neighbor, they fight among themselves until they are all slain on the mountains of Israel. The number killed will be so great that the house of Israel will be seven months in burying the dead; and the wood from the instruments of war will be sufficient to last the inhabitants of the country for fuel seven years.

THE RESTITUTION

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Persons passing through the land, when they shall see a bone, shall set up a stick by it, so that when the buryers shall come along they will see it and inter it. Now what does the statesmen and the newspapers say? Nothing never happened like it. The Lord has stricken that army and they are destroyed. The Lord has been sanctified in Gog. We are told by the prophets that there is a time coming in the history of the world when plowshares shall be beaten into swords and pruning-hooks shall be beaten into spears. The nations of Europe are beating their plowshares into swords and their pruning-hooks into spears. They are preparing for war. They are waking up their mighty men.

We are told by staticians, and historians, that the countries I have named can put into the field more than twelve million armed men. Think of it. More than twelve million armed men. It is said that Russia can put five million armed men into the field with the assistance of Italy. Such an army was never known in the history of the world. Take the standing armies of Europe today. Germany, Austria, Russia, Italy, England, etc., and what are they? Perfectly enormous. While this country has a little army of sixteen thousand men. This cannot last long. They cannot maintain those armies without a conflict. Whether the next conflict will be the great struggle I have described, I cannot say, I am inclined to think it will be. I have portrayed a picture of this prophecy, I know it is a dark picture. It is a dark picture for the world. It is not pleasant to think that millions of men are to lose their lives in this way; especially in war. But while the cloud is dark, there is a silver lining to it. The next thing we find in the chronology of the prophecy relating to the world, is, that Jesus' feet rest on the Mount of Olives, that he comes to restore peace to the world. The war spirit has been broken by this great conflict and the people of the world are now ready for peace, they commence to beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. How is God going to convince the world that it is not best to have large standing armies? by doing just what will be done. By giving them so much of war that they will not want war any more. We do not want any more war in this country. We had our revolution and our civil war, and we have had enough. We want peace. So will it be with all the nations of the earth, and when the Lord and Master comes, he will find the world in a condition to receive him. The world shall be in a condition to desire peace, pray for peace, and accept peace at his hands. May we be among those who shall be with the Lord at that blessed time, is my prayer. Amen.

"Dust Thou Art."

We meet people often who dispute the record, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." "It is preposterous to believe that man is made of dust," they say, but we have not only the record, which asserts the fact, but we have also the very thing itself enacted before our eyes.

Made of dust? Who does not know that the growth of the little child depends on the food that it eats? Who does not know that the waste of our bodies,—of all grown people,—is made up from the fruits and the cereals that we use as food? Where does our food come from, if not from the dust? Of what are we made, if not of the dust?

Oh foolish man! You would not, could not live if it were not for dust!

And as facts prove the record true in this case, so also do they prove it true in the closing part of the sentence, "and unto dust shalt thou return." Man [illegible] the [illegible] verified.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

OUR correspondents must not feel disappointed if two or more weeks should elapse before their communications find place. We have not found time as yet to even read all that have come to hand.

A COMMUNICATION from Bro. H. P. Rice, of Delano, Cal., has come to hand, and is on file for next week. There seems to be a door opening for him there, but he needs some help financially. Our Executive Committee, at its last meeting, supposed that he was still in the Eastern States. He is now to be addressed as above.

IN a short note Bro. G. R. Kramer says, "I shall not according to my present light take any pastoral charge, but live in Brooklyn with my family whence I can go with facility in any direction south, west or north." Bro. Kramer is eminently qualified for that work to which he has consecrated himself—the gospel ministry. We earnestly hope our brethren will assist him to labor in the evangelical field, as the harvest is great and the laborers are few.

BRO. O. R. L. Crozier, in a short note says, "I wish to thank some one for sending me, in a copy of THE RESTITUTION, the Report of the National Conference held in Philadelphia last November. I have read both with interest and believe that you have made a good start in the right direction. Carefulness, honesty, charity, courage may bring good results." From Sister M. P. A. Crozier we also received a beautiful little poem, which we purposely reserve for a future number, perhaps two or three weeks hence.

THE sermons, as reported or written out, which were preached during the late session of the "First Annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus," have all appeared with the exception of one, which is our own. We may give this in an amended form sometime hereafter. In place of it next week we can give our readers an incomparably better discourse delivered before the Bible Class of the Cincinnati Young Mens' Christian Association on the subject—"The Present Condition and Future Glory of Believers and the Planet." We shall give the lengthy extracts from this discourse as we find them printed in the Messenger. The full text was published in The Faithful Witness, of Toronto. Do not fail to read this discourse unless you are willing to lose a rare treat indeed.

SOME SIGNS OF THE TIMES. No. 4.

RETRIBUTION.

And the horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire. Rev. xvii. 16.

That the "Harlot of the Tiber," the ecclesiastical system of Papal Romanism, is prophetically delineated in Rev. xvii. xviii., and xix. 1-3, is so patent that comparatively few commentators are disposed to call this application of the prophecy in question. Nor need it be, for the harlot's features, as prophetically described, are perfectly photographed in history. In our last, we gave a single chapter of the harlot's bloody record, and in this we propose to show a contrasting counterpart in a fearful retribution that came upon her in the very localities where she enacted her murderous assassinations. In doing this we shall copy from H. Gratten Guinness's work:—"Light for the Last Days." Those that would see fuller accounts must consult some historical works like Alison's or Lamartine's. Before quoting we may remark that the expression—"Eat her flesh" has a plural noun in the Greek, and means "Masses of flesh," otherwise "carnal possessions." The prophet makes "carnality," in its most hideous forms, the term expressive of all Papal Rome is endowed with—she has nothing spiritual. When she loses her carnal possessions her all is gone. "To burn with fire" is the legal punishment of abominable adultery and fornication, Gen. xxxviii. 24; Levit. xxi. 9. This doom awaits the Harlot, Rev. xvii. 9; Rev. xix. 3. A retribution, in part, has already overtaken the bloody sorceress, which we will let our selection portray.

"The French Revolution is by common consent regarded as the commencement of a new era. It could never have assumed the character it did had not the people previously lost all fear of God and all respect for man, had not the national mind been blinded, and the national heart hardened against all claims, human and Divine. It is needless to dwell on the details here; our readers will mostly be familiar with the tragic facts; how the infidel democracy suddenly uprose in its might, destroyed the Bastile, issued its declaration of the rights of man; assaulted the King and Queen by night at Versailles, and murdering some of the bodyguard, forced them to proceed as prisoners to Paris, the bloody heads carried on pikes before the royal carriage; how the people confiscated all the vast revenues of the Church, all the domains of the crown, and all the estates of refugee nobles, for the use of the State; subjected to themselves all ecclesiastical, civil and judicial power throughout the country; murdered the royal guard, and some five thousand leading royalists; dethroned, imprisoned, tried, condemned, and murdered the King, and then the Queen; declared war against all kings, and sympathy with all revolutionists everywhere; how the "reign of terror" witnessed the slaughter of 1,022,000 persons of all ranks and ages, and of both sexes, till the streets of Paris ran with blood, and the guillotines could not overtake their work; how thousands were mown down by grape-shot fusillades; drowned in noyades, where in loaded vessels hundreds of victims were purposely sunk in the rivers; roasted alive in heated ovens; or tortured to death by other infernal cruelties; how Christianity was publicly renounced, and a prostitute enthroned as "goddess of reason," at Notre Dame, and worshiped by the National Convention and the mob of Paris with the wildest orgies of licentiousness—morality as well as mercy having perished with religion—how the most horrid mockery of the solemn rites of Christianity was publicly enacted, an ass being made to drink the sacramental wine; how the Sabbath itself was abolished, and the decade substituted for the week; and how hundreds and thousands of priests were massacred or driven into exile, and the churches and cathedrals turned into stables and barracks. Taken as a whole the French Revolution was a convulsion, in which the angry passions of men, set free from all restraint, manifested themselves, with a force and fury unprecedented in the history of the world, against monarchal, aristocratic, ecclesiastical, and religious institutions. Let these things be considered in the light of a mighty and successful revolt against, and overthrow of, monarchal power, and Papal tyranny and usurpation, and it will at once be granted that nothing similar had ever occurred previously in the history of the fourth great empire. Terribly inquisitous had been the career of the monarchal power thus rudely overthrown; and fearfully corrupt the priesthood and religion thus utterly and with abhorrence rejected. A solemn character of retribution attaches to even the worst excesses of the French Revolution. The Papacy in the hour of agony was exultingly reminded of its own similar cruelties against Protestants. Papists were treated according to the example set by Papists of other days, and the worst barbarities of revolutionary France, could not out-herod the previous barbarities of Papal France."

Here Mr. Guinness quotes from Thomas H. Gill's work entitled: The Papal Drama, Book X., to the following purport:—"The more deeply and earnestly the French Revolution is considered, the more manifest is its pre-eminence above all the strange and terrible things that have come to pass on this earth. Never has the world witnessed so exact and sublime a piece of retribution. If it inflicted enormous evil, it pre-supposed and overthrew enormous evil. In a country where every ancient institution and every time-honored custom disappeared in a moment, where the whole social and political system went down before the first stroke, where monarchy, nobility, and Church were swept away almost without resistance, the whole framework of the State must have been rotten—royalty, aristocracy, and priesthood must have grievously sinned. Where the good things of this world, birth, rank, wealth, fine clothes, and elegant manners, became worldly perils, and worldly disadvantages for a time, rank, birth, and riches must have been frightfully abused. The nation which abolished and proscribed Christianity, which dethroned religion in favor of reason, and enthroned the new goddess of Notre Dame in the person of a harlot, must needs been afflicted by a very unreasonable and very corrupt form of Christianity. The people that waged a war of such utter extermination with everything established as to abolish the common forms of address and salutation, and the common mode of reckoning time, that abhorred 'you' as a sin, and shrank from 'Monsieur' as an abomination, that turned the weeks into decades, and would know the old months no more, must surely have had good reason to hate those old ways from which it pushed its departure into such minute and absurd extravagance. The deserted halls of the aristocracy, the rifled sepulchres of royalty, the decapitated king and queen, the little dauphin so sadly done to death, the beggared princes, the slaughtered priests and nobles, the sovereign guillotine, the republican marriages, and the Meudon tannery; the couples tied together and thrown into the Loire, and the gloves made of men's and women's skins; these things are most horrible; but they are withal eloquent of retribution, they bespeak the solemn presence of Nemesis, the awful hand of an avenging power. They bring to mind the horrible sins of that old France; the wretched peasants ground for ages beneath the weight of imports from which the rich and noble were free; visited ever and anon with cruel famines by reason of crushing taxes, unjust wars, and monstrous misgovernment, and then hung up or shut down by twenties or fifties for just complaining of starvation; and all this for centuries! They call to remembrance the Protestants murdered by millions in the streets of Paris, tormented for years by military dragoons in Poitou and Bearn, and hunted like wild beasts in the Cevennes; slaughtered and done to death by thousands and tens of thousands in many painful ways and through many painful years.

"In no work of the French Revolution is this, its retributive character, more strikingly and solemnly apparent than in its dealings with the Roman Church and Papal power. It especially became France, which, after so fierce a struggle, had rejected the Reformation and perpetuated such enormous crimes in the process of rejection, to turn its fury against that very Roman Church on whose behalf it had been so wrathful, to abolish Roman Catholic worship, as she had abolished Protestant worship; to massacre multitudes of priests in the streets of her great towns; to hunt them down through her length and breadth, and to cast them by thousands upon a foreign shore, just as she had slaughtered, hunted down, and driven into exile hundreds of thousands of Protestants; to carry the war into the Papal territories, and heap all sorts of woes and shames upon the defenceless Popedom. The excesses of revolutionary France were not more the punishment than the direct result of the excesses of feudal, regal, and Papal France. In one of its aspects the Revolution may be described as a reaction against the excesses, spiritual and religious, of the Roman Catholic persecution of Protestantism. No sooner had the torrent burst forth than it dashed right against the Roman Church and Popedom. The property of the Church was made over to the State; the French sank from a proprietary to a salaried body; monks and nuns were restored to the world, the property of their orders being likewise gone; Protestants were raised to full religious freedom and political equality, The Roman Catholic religion was soon afterwards formally abolished.

"'Buonaparte unsheathed the sword of France against the hopeless Pius VI. The pontiff sunk into a dependent. Berthier marched upon Rome, set up a Roman Republic, and laid hands upon the Pope. The sovereign pontiff was borne away to the camp of the infidels, from prison to prison, and finally carried away captive into France. Here he breathed his last, at Valence, in the land where his priests had been slain, where his power was broken, and his name and office were a mockery and a byword, and in the keeping of the rude soldiers of the unbelieving commonwealth, which had for ten years held to his lips a cup of such manifold and exceeding bitterness. It was a sublime and perfect piece of retribution, which so amazed the world at the end of the eighteenth century; this proscription of the Roman Church by that very French nation that had slaughtered myriads of Protestants at her bidding; this mournful end of the sovereign pontiff, in that very Dauphine so consecrated by the struggles of the Protestants, and near those Alpine valleys where the Waldenses had been so ruthlessly hunted down by French soldiers; this transformation of the 'States of the Church' into the 'Roman Republic,' and this overthrow of the territorial Popedom by the very French nation, which, just one thousand years ago, had, under Pepin and Charlemagne, conferred these territories. Multitudes imagined that the Papacy was at the point of death, and asked, would Pius VI. be the last pontiff, and if the close of the eighteenth century would be signalized by the fall of the Papal dynasty. But the French Revolution was the beginning, not the end, of judgment; France had but begun to execute her doom, a doom sure and inevitable, but long and lingering, to be diversified by many strange incidents, and now and then by a semblance of escape, a doom to be protracted through much pain and much ignominy.'"

From its length we shall have to divide the full account Mr. Guinness furnishes concerning the overwhelming disasters that have been visited upon the foulest, cruelest and most atrociously wicked despotism that ever existed on earth—a corruptest corporation demonized.

We close our article this week by quoting a short additional extract from the Watchword of the present month, February, edited by Dr. A. J. Gordon. The dethroned Pontiff realizes his situation, but his prayers for the restoration of his temporal power are useless—they will never be answered. A Pope-king is a thing of the past—the temporal power is dead, buried, and for it there is no resurrection. But list to the whining petition of a discrowned pontiff—or rather of one ambitious for that crown he has never been able to grasp, as Leo XIII. has never been a king and never will be. The time limiting a Pope-king dominion ran out in 1870. The final perdition of Old Babylon is nigh, and the destined doom can not be averted by pontifical prayers or idolatrous masses. But to the extract:

"Giant Pope as Bunyan pictures him sitting in his cave and growling at passers by, is fast becoming Giant Despair. Here is his piteous prayer, drawn out because of the loss of his temporal power; but in spite of it he shall come to his end and none shall help him.

"'O good Jesus, our Master and Lawgiver, deliver us from the persecution of our enemies. Lord, Lord Almighty King, all things are put under thy power, and none are able to resist thy will. If thou hast decreed to save Israel, thou art the ruler of all things, and no man can withstand thy majesty; and now, O Lord, take pity on thy people, for our enemies mean to destroy us and overthrow thy heritage, which thou didst redeem. Change our sorrow into joy, that we may live, O Lord, and may praise thy name. In this sad overthrow of all things there is none we can call upon, except thee, O Lord. Thou alone art our King; remember thy church; she weeps, and none can help her but thee, O Lord. Innovators and blind leaders are trying to make false thy promises, to destroy thy inheritance, to shut the mouth of those that praise thee, to darken the glory of thy temple and of thy altar. Lord, give not up thy servants into the hands of those who hate thee; let them not laugh at our downfall! but turn thou back their wicked designs upon themselves. Remember us, O Lord, and be thus favorable to us in our tribulation, who livest and reignest world without end. Amen.'

"Multitudes of innocent martyrs have pleaded with this master of blasphemy for their just rights, but in vain; now he pleads in vain for his unjust assumptions."

Exit Papa-Rex, and a long farewell to the "little horn" dynasty—the detestation of all that is truly good.

MARRIED

ROSS—REED.—By Eld. S. A. Chaplin, at his residence, Feb. 16, 1889, John Ross and Mrs. Sopronia A. Reed.

LAST CHANCE.

MAGRUDER'S REPLY to INGERSOLL.

Please notice that we have secured the last few copies of Bro. Magruder's reply to R. G. Ingersoll that can be had. The edition is exhausted when these (15 in number) are gone, and will not likely ever be printed again. These are bound in cloth, and the Publisher's price was $1.00. We offer them at 75cts. each, post paid. Remember this is the Last Chance you will have to get a copy of this work, and those wishing one should send at once in order to secure it. We have turned away several orders in the last year, and this supply will not last long.

Six more workers in Foreign Mission fields are yet to be provided with our paper for 1889. Who will pay for a paper to be sent to China, Japan, India, New Zealand, Italy, Palestine or Macedonia?

Wayside Notes.

[The following items were sent to this office by J. Crossett, an American Missionary in China.]

Near the northern boundary of the English Settlement of Shanghai is the Indian Mosque. The Mullah (or Ah Hung) from India who had been here twenty-five years died last winter. A Chinese Ah Hung named Ma, from Tientsin, is now in charge. In 1882, the father and two sons called on me while I was in Shanghai, in return for my visits at the Mosques. The older boy has since been to Bombay and has died. Abdul Aziz is the second of the sons who with his mother and young sister and brother are still allowed to live at the Mosque. Upon a red strip of paper at the gate is the note that Western languages will be taught inside. But the competition among teachers of languages in Shanghai is too great for Abdul Aziz, and his English, French, Arabic, Hindustani are not in demand, so he has found a place as shipping clerk. May that fine appearing, educated Moslem find a place of usefulness as a true philanthropist and reformer! He believes in Jesus Christ, to what extent I am no judge. He is young yet, and I bespeak for him the prayers of those who believe in prayer.

While at Wuhu, above Nanking, on the river, refugees were coming down from drought-stricken regions by the hundreds, fleeing for their lives. At Chinkiang there was the drought and cholera also to make people anxious. I was pleased to find that the few Christians of two little churches were uniting in prayer for rain daily at five o'clock p. m. It is a delicate matter, as publicity in prayer is so apt to be attended with great errors of life. A heavy rain has since fallen.

A note was made in The Chinese Times early in the year that Rev. H. Lansdell of London was coming through Asia to Pekin. Letters have been received at Shanghai regarding him, written as late as July 17th at Kulja, i. e., Ili. An American Missionary physician, Dr. Norden, arrived there first from Persia to meet him, and not long after Mr. Geo. Parker, of the China Inland Mission in Kansu, reached the same place, by appointment, with Chinese Scriptures. After a few days the Rev. Mr. Lansdell himself arrived. He was desirous to penetrate Tibet. Time will show their movements.

Since writing the above, a letter has reached here from Mr. Geo. Parker dated July 30th, 1888. He says that Dr. Lansdell has left Kulja and he was to start the next day for his home in Lanchow the capital of Kansu, which he hoped to reach at the end of October. He was three months and four days time in going out, and reached Kulji June 16th. We do not learn Dr. Lansdell's movements or the doctor's from Persia. Mr. Parker has been sending letters to London every week by Russia post.

On Saturday, I attended a service in the Synagogue, No. 27, Foochow Road, Shanghai. The presence of a booth in the yard was very picturesque. The Day of Atonement had just passed, when the Jews with great scrupulousness abstain for twenty-four hours from taking any thing in their mouths. People who imagine that it would injure them to fast should think a little of the fact that for thousands of years one of the healthiest class of men, women, and children in the world, in every latitude and longitude under heaven, can fast, totally fast, one whole twenty-four hours every autumn.

The Day of Atonement, with its rigid abstinence from all that can enter the mouth or be done for the body, such as bathing, nice dressing, etc., teaches us a good lesson as to what men, women and children can do. To say nothing of the necessity or value of it in a matter of religious discussion, it certainly overthrows the theories of those who think that their stomachs would be seriously injured if not supplied with work to do every few hours in the day.

The service is in an upper room of a building, and not in a synagogue built for the purpose. The company was small, all men, some speaking Arabic, German, English, and other languages, but all using the Hebrew in service. An American missionary here who observes Saturday, is quite a friend of these Jews, and his regard is reciprocated. The Feast of Tabernacles follows the Day of Atonement, and so the presence of the booth is accounted for as well as the fact that after worship about 10 a. m., several retired to it for their breakfast.

ON A MISSION TO THE LAND OF MY FATHERS.

Having rambled about in Cæsarea Philippi, I was charmed with the delightful scenery. We spent a pleasant night by the cool stream flowing from the source of the Jordan. I refreshed myself several times by having a pleasant bath. Everything around here gave pleasure, and the eye rested on splendid olive trees.

I walked through the village, which is composed of mud hovels, the inhabitants apparently preferring to have their houses filthy.

Chief of interest here is meditation about the historical associations of the place. Here stood the Temple of Pan. This lonely place had splendor and majesty. Here also Herod the Great built a temple over Jordan's spring in honor of Augustus Cæsar. We observed some fine old ruins. It was of some interest to us, as we gazed on the supposed Place of Transfiguration, but as learned doctors do not agree as to the precise spot, we did not attach the interest we would have done had it been a spot undisputed. It was also interesting and somewhat amusing to notice in the village nearly every house having a booth constructed of green branches raised on wooden pedestals. I inquired the reason for these strange constructions, and was informed that these places were for the villagers to sleep in during the summer to keep them above the swarms of vermin, scorpions, and numerous other nuisances. We were delighted with views of the different streams all flowing from the source of the Jordan, where we spent many hours. We then made an ascent of over 2,500 feet above the level of the sea, and found ourselves at the strange and very marvellous ruins of the ancient castle Subeibeh. The masonry and inscriptions reveal great antiquity, doubtless from the period of the Phœnicians to the seventeenth century.

This excursion having ended, we resumed our journey across Mount Hermon. With delight I gazed upon the prince of mountains, and rejoiced at having the privilege of seeing and crossing the place around the name of which cluster so many historical associations. Gazing upon the imposing appearance of this majestic mount, we were reminded of Judges iii. 3, and of the worshipers of Baal, who sacrificed in "that high place."

On this mountain many of the tribes of Manasseh dwelt, and went after the gods of the people, and thus sinned against the God of Israel, and brought misery and ruin upon themselves. It was in the temple on this mountain that the heathen inhabitants from Lebanon, and the region of Pineas were accustomed to meet for worship. As we passed on, it became dark and night was upon us. We therefore continued the journey, determined to be on our saddles the whole night. The wind blew hard, and the air was keen. I was dressed in all my European clothes, had an overcoat, and above that my waterproof coat, and yet I felt very cold. Our whole company seemed in considerable trouble, and were shriveled with the bitter wind. I was weary, and a little careless in keeping up with my company. My horse deceived me not a little in turning from the company and presently I found myself at a considerable distance from my guide. I was full of fear—the light of the moon revealed to me my danger. The road appeared untrodden. There was near me an awful chasm. What to do I did not know. Of course I could not blame myself, and therefore blamed my hitherto good horse. I would no longer trust him, so I dismounted, and stood still and held the reins to prevent my animal leaving me. I shouted as loud as possible, "Dragoman! dragoman! come to my rescue at once! Come, come, come, at once!" I made myself hoarse, hot, and tired. My party before me at a distance heard my cries of distress, and some answered. My German fellow-traveller was good enough to send me the echo of his voice, asking why I did no go right on, why I kept back, why I went the wrong way, and reminded me that it was a dangerous thing to travel in the East without taking care to keep near the guide. I quickly silenced him by asking him as politely as the circumstances allowed me to keep his little German lectures for an occasion when they would be more acceptable. My dragoman's voice, however, soon consoled me, as I heard him say, "Wait till I come to you. Don't move till I come!" I was sure to take this last advice. Thus I waited, feeling my dangerous condition, and delighted to realize my guide was coming to me, and all would be well. Happy was I when again I felt that him was at my side. He helped me on my saddle, and soon we were on the right road, and our whole company was now complete. Thus we spent the night. Being very weary we presently rested for a couple of hours before sunrise, refreshed ourselves with coffee, etc., and as soon as the sun greeted us we again started. On, on, we went, until we reached the plains of Damascus. A lovely and majestic view presented itself to the eye—the dew of Hermon. Marvellous sight! It was as if all the slopes of the heavens were one mass of ... like a great white sheet, ... on the ground. Presently the sun, with all his strength, cast his powerful rays upon the entire landscape, and the great solid sheet, or "dew," began to rise very gradually. The heat of the sun was now unbearable, yet there was nothing for us to do but proceed. Weary, parched, and with burning thirst we continued our journey until we came near the acres of land from which the dew had risen several feet by the influence of the sun.

We dismounted and walked under the green ..., and what a change! Now ... we could defy the sun, from which we were beautifully protected. The drops of the dew fell on us—refreshing us as we had never been refreshed before. Our very garments were saturated with moisture, which was to us most precious. We were reminded of Psalm cxxxiii.

Having been well refreshed with the dew of Hermon, we were strengthened, and enabled with delight to continue our journey, like giants refreshed with wine, and meditated upon him whose is the "earth and the fulness thereof." We thought of the condescending promise of the Lord, "I will be as the dew upon Israel." Beautiful and precious emblem of spiritual blessing and joy coming to us direct from Deity. What condescension! God himself stooping to the wild soil of the human heart, and melting it with his infinite goodness.

How delightful to the weary pilgrim, amidst the various vicissitudes in life, the heat and burden of which often is found to be depressing. Yet the sweet influences of Divine goodness attract and refresh—give strength and courage for the continuance of life's journey.

As we walked along the plains of Damascus, we beheld beautiful and fertile wild flowers in great variety, growing in abundance. The eye is dazzled with the scenery of loveliness. The plains, the fragrance of the myriads of flowers—all tell of the silent influence of Hermon's dew, saturating the soil, and producing life and loveliness. And is not the influence of Divine grace marvellous? Many wild hearts that were as a dreary wilderness have become as gardens full of perfume and sweet fragrance. I knew many members of the house of Israel, who, when first they came into contact with the missionaries of the "British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews," and other Christian agencies were full of bitterness towards the missionaries, and often blasphemed at the name so precious to the believer. The hearts of these men were truly hard and barren. Yet, through the influence of Divine grace, their hearts have been, as it were, saturated with the dews of heaven, and are now the Temples of the Lord of Glory, and their lives are now spent in delightful service for Christ and the world.

Oh, that the spirit of grace and supplication may be poured out upon the seed of Abraham, and that the gentle influence of the people of God may be extended to Israel, and through the mercy of the Gentile world Israel shall obtain mercy. Then will Jew and Gentile know him, whom to know is life eternal, and all men shall be complete in One, Christ Jesus, through whom alone we can enjoy a universal and blessed brotherhood. So delightful shall be that happy communion of the saints that men shall be constrained to admire and exclaim—"Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard, and went down to the skirts of his garment. As the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion. For there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life for evermore."
—Isaac Levinsohn, in Jewish Herald.

Thank-Offering Corner.

In compliance with a request we start this "Thank Offering Corner." A number of poor people are yet to be supplied with our paper for 1889. There have been paid for in the past only partially, and as we are not willing to stop any of them, we hope our friends will come forward with "Thank-Offerings" so that all may be supplied.

THE WAITING ONES.

There are some among the blessed
Waiting, watching every day,
Peering through the misty shadows
To the clear and lighted way:
Listening in the dusky twilight,
Waiting even in the night,
'Mid the toil and heat of noonday
Bending forward to the light.

And they speak in eager whispers—
"Can we see His chariot yet?"
"Will the Master come this evening?"
"Will the heavenly Friend forget?"
So they stand, these earnest servants,
Waiting, watching evermore
For the clouds to part asunder,
And reveal the open door.

There are darkened ones among them,
Looking through their eyes of night:
There are fair-haired little children
Peeping up with faces bright:
There are old pilgrims, longing
For the Master's spoken word,
[illegible]
Waiting, watching for the Lord.

But they take their daily duties,
And perform them for him;
And they read his loving message
When their eyes are tired and dim.
They are living lives of blessing
Lives of love for his dear sake,
While they wait with eager longing
For the morn of joy to break.

He will come, and will not tarry;
He will fold them to his breast;
He will make his watchers happy
In a calm and holy rest.
He will give them satisfaction
For their days of waiting here,
He will fill them with joy unceasing
When the Master shall appear.

LOVE OF THE TRUTH.

"I do love God's truth." How often I have heard these words, put in this emphatic form, coming from the lips of God's professed children. How natural and easy it is, or ought to be, to love God's word. Truth whether in the vast realm of nature, or in the great book of inspiration, wherever discovered, is beautiful and harmonious. To the highly educated and well poised mind, a single truth flashing into the light of human understanding, brings with it a fascinating charm which awakens in the discoverer the desire to know the whole system of truth with which this one stands connected. He has caught the keynote and he expects to hear the melody of divine harmonies. He has found a nugget of gold and that has put him upon the search for more.

All God's movements have been along the line of truth, in creation, in providence, and redemption. All truth is of God. "It is impossible for him to lie." The Great Teacher said; "Thy word is truth." He also said of the devil: "He abode not in the truth because there is no truth in him,.... and that he is a liar." He who believes, loves and lives the truth, is on the side of God, and Christ and all holy beings; and helps to make up the grand harmony of the universe. On the contrary whoever follows the wicked one who has allied himself with the father of lies; and is therefore out of harmony with God, and all good and beautiful things; a grating jarring discord on the music of creation; a foul blur and blot on all things fair. The sinner is a living contradiction of God and a menace to all truth and goodness.

It was Satan's lie believed and acted upon that introduced the deplorable and wretched condition of our human race over which angels weep, as may be inferred from the statement of Jesus that the angels in heaven rejoice more over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine just persons that needeth no repentance.

Every sinner on repenting leaves the side of error, of falsehood and discord, and steps over on the side of God and goodness, and into that moral condition and relationship which the great sceme of redemption contemplates as a final issue.

Do I love the truth? I could not love God if I do not love his truth. If God's word only revealed the truth of our sinful and undone condition and in addition to this his wrath against us for our disobedience we might be excused for a lack of loving interest in the book making known to us truths so unpalatable. No culprit likes to hear the sentence of his own doom. But above and beyond God's fiery law from the pages of this same book comes the sweet accents of mercy and love and pardon. How we pause and ponder when we come to this most tender and touching passage in the divine volume For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life, Jno. iii 16. I am one of the world so God loved me. Thus I make the application to poor sinful self. What a priceless gift is everlasting life—a gift of love. It is more a gift of mercy, because I deserved death. I love this sweet passage in the Book of books, then extend my love and reverence to the whole system of divine truth of which this passage is an absolutely essential part. I meet with many persons of intelligence who confess their ignorance of what the Bible teaches. This is not owing to any lack of ability to understand it but comes from their sinful neglect to read and study the word God has put in their hands. They [illegible] time [illegible] read and keep posted [illegible] many things [illegible] parts of the world. [illegible] the truth. There are others who profess to love God's word but who would not for any consideration yield their own preferences and opinions, held without a particle of proof, and even [illegible] positive Bible [illegible] of church [illegible] truth [illegible] light. [illegible] most. With [illegible] to this degree of heathen philosophy. No amount of [illegible] and proof avails anything against this notion instilled into the mind from early childhood. We pity them and pray that the light of God's blessed truth may break into their darkened understanding.

Coming close to home, to those sharing with me a common faith. I put the question, Do you love the truth? and how much do you love it? Enough to cause you to obey its least requirements as well as its most important obligations? Will you make sacrifices for it; foregoing your own pleasure and gratification, denying yourselves ease, comfort and convenience, if by so doing the truth may be advanced. Remember that the truth is here for a wise and beneficent end, to bring men and women into reconciliation with the great God and to secure to them as a final issue eternal salvation. You say that it has already blessed you by actual experience, and by sweet anticipation of things to come as you walk by faith, and you expect without the shadow of a doubt that God's precious promises will be fulfilled to you in the kingdom. But how has the truth come to you to bless and inspire you with so glorious a hope? Are you indebted to no one for what you now enjoy and hope to enjoy hereafter? Back of you is a history of prayers and tears and human suffering, of struggling and persevering effort, of wearisome labor and cost of blood and treasure. Between you and that most wonderful display of the Father's love to the world, the death of Christ, stretches the long line of heaven's ordained evangels of truth and righteousness, self sacrificing men and women who gave up all for the truth's sake that they might hand it down to unborn generations; and to you my dear readers it has come at such a cost.

The defenders of God's word have always been the smallest minority, hence they have been obliged to make large sacrifices of time, strength and means to gain for the truth a foothold where error had so long held undisputed sway. It is still exceedingly unpopular; so it is just as necessary today as at any time in the past for the few who hold the truth to work with a resolute determination that God's rejected and neglected word shall be proclaimed to the world against all opposition, and hurled in the face of the well organized and disciplined forces of error so that they shall be without excuse when the great Judge comes.

The debt of gratitude which we owe to the long line of heroic and self-sacrificing men and women of the past can never be paid to them, as we are left to work as they worked for the truth we profess to love. This is being coworkers with God who intended and planned that his word, after having been given by supernatural interposition should be held forth to the nations by the church. The apostles and other heaven-endowed men qualified with special gifts for an extraordinary work accomplished their mission just as God designed and then the responsibility of the whole work was rolled upon others possessing none of these wonderful powers of the world to come, but only the ordinary gifts of nature, to be exercised under the quickening power of the Spirit of truth. These less gifted agents are equal to the task assigned them as were the apostles and others with miraculous power for the special work of their times. I [illegible] upon [illegible] possession. [illegible] thing less than the full use of what we have for God's glory results in proportionate unfaithfulness. To have the truth and glory in it as a most wonderful acquisition to one's stock of knowledge, and to be interested in it to the extent only of its usefulness in floating an opponent, and yet make no effort and spend no means to have it proclaimed [illegible] men and women will finally result in the loss of all [illegible] to possess. The [illegible] taken [illegible] from him and given to another. [illegible]

Dear Restitution:

[illegible] Bro. Work [illegible] circumstanced alike in this matter. Our brethren out here are all trying to act honestly in staying on their farms and meet their indebtedness. Some [illegible] however, have ran away from their farms leaving loans [illegible] to foreclose on them. But the brethren out here are struggling through. We do not believe in getting into debt, but circumstances over which we have no control forced us to this issue. I know that our poor brethren, on farms out here, are going about in rags, some of them, and their horny, hard hands bespeak labor and honesty, and their bowed shoulders show a dependence on labor for subsistence. And it seems almost too much to ask from them a penny to help anything or anybody. It seems as though they need help instead of helping.

But this much I have said in defense of my brethren and myself, as a reason why we should not be expected to give, and from a human standpoint I would think this excuse sufficient. But from a higher point of observation I see a poor woman casting two mites into the temple treasury box, and one who had not where to lay his head, said to her, "But she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had" Luke xxi. 4. From this point of observation I see that the Son of God didn't despise small things, but rather commended this woman in these words, "Of a truth I say unto you that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all. For all these have cast in of their abundance, but she of her penury." Luke xxi. 2–4. From this point of observation I begin to understand that the gift of the very poor, though small, is just as acceptable as the gifts from those who have plenty. Now I regard Bro. Work as the greatest philanthropist in the present "Church of God." The great point with Bro. Work is not that he has an abundance of money, but that he has an abundance of will to use that money for the work and people of God, and while God will accept his giving from his abundance, he will still greatly commend those who give of their penury or extreme poverty, the will and the purpose in either case being the thing acceptable with God. If he regards the gift of the rich he much more regards the gift of the poor. Now therefore dear brethren, remember what the dear Lord said of that widow. Remember also the saying of the wise man, "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. "The liberal soul shall be made fat, and he that watereth shall be watered also himself." Prov. xi. 24, 25. If you, or we, of our poverty help to water the seed that is sown we shall be watered, and God will give the increase.

Let us also remember the words of the apostle to us Gentiles, "But this I say, He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give, not grudgingly or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver." 2 Cor. ix. 6, 7. I learn by this if I purpose to give something I should give it, and if I purpose [illegible] to give something or anything. We must not feel that we should give because some one else did; that would be giving of necessity. We should not feel that we cannot spare the gift; that would be grudgingly. But give cheerfully, in every sense let this be the purpose in our heart. The Bible rule given, followed out, will make each church society independent. Just try it for one year. I will give you a form to use:

Dear Restitution:

[illegible] Allen, [illegible] H. D. Prince, Elder [illegible] Liddie Price, [illegible] Sister [illegible] Brick Head Co.; preached eleven discourses, made [illegible] visits, and organized the [illegible] there by appointing Bro. Thus we have completed at each of the above named places an organization, and each [illegible] short time, place in [illegible] the State Treasurer the [illegible] $10.00 each to get [illegible] to Bro. Work. From [illegible] to Benton Co., preached five discourses, made seven visits, and am now working upon organization; hope we shall succeed; pray for us that the work may prosper under our labor. And may the God of peace be with and bless all the scattered ones is the prayer of your unworthy servant. Pray for us. T. J. WHITESITT.

Dear Restitution:

By permission of the Editor of our welcome visitor, THE RESTITUTION, I would like to say to the brethren and sisters of like precious faith, that since [illegible] which was called by our [illegible] Work at our church, I have [illegible] tend to be more zealous in the cause of my Master. As I told some of you the accident my dear companion had proved fatal, and on Dec 5th death relieved her of her sufferings. But I sorrow not as those who have no hope, for she had that hope, and in the morning I expect to meet her. I have just finished reading the Report of the Conference which I received last night. I heartily endorse the whole you have done. Well, God is in the work, and if we work together there will be great good done. Our little church is moving along nicely. Our [illegible] has been very feeble for some time, but has for two Sundays been with us. We are praying the dear Lord to restore him to us again. Our Sunday School [illegible]. Our Tuesday evening's Bible Class is well attended with much interest, also our Friday evening's prayer and praise service, led by the brethren and sisters, each taking part. Yours in patient waiting for the Lord and love of the truth. CHAS. F. WARNICK.

TORONTO, Ont

Dear Restitution:

I take my pen to inform you of the sad loss of our beloved brother, Thomas Hastings, who died Jan. 31, 1889, aged 81 years, lacking a few months. He has left his aged partner and six children, one son and five daughters, to mourn his loss. But they mourn not as those that have no hope, for his daily walk and conversation plainly showed that he walked with God. For fifty four years he and his beloved wife walked in all the ordinances of God blameless, and their home was ever open to the lovers of the truth. When the light began to shine in the days of Miller until the present day they always endeavored to benefit by that light; and from the time that B. Wilson first published the Gospel Banner they have been its constant readers. The truth that he presented in his writings they adopted for their platform and they never have been moved from it. Whatever strife or contention might arise they would never join in it, but stood firm in the one faith that was once delivered to the saints; whatever was brought forward they always tried it by the unerring word of God, and when they saw it to be God's will and God's plan, they received it, but not otherwise. And on that truth they have lived and grown until he grew to that full stature of a man in Christ Jesus his living head. In that faith he lived, in that faith he died, and on the 31 we laid him in our mother earth with that sure and certain hope of his resurrection unto eternal life where pain, sickness, sorrow nor death can never come, when we shall meet our beloved brother in eternal youth and in eternal bloom.

The large number that came to take their last look at him plainly showed the high esteem in which he was held by the world and loved by the brethren. Bro. Samuel Balls, from Hamilton, gave them a short address on the subject, "If a man die, shall he live again." After the funeral, in the evening, he gave us a lecture on the one faith and showed that though our brother had been laid in the earth, that at the resurrection morn that he, and all the children of God, would be born again into life eternal, and could die no more. Sister Hastings wishes me to say that if any brethren, if the Lord come to Toronto to come to see her; in her home they will ever find a welcome, as there are so many friends that knew Mr. Hastings. Your humble sister, MRS. [illegible]

To the Churches of God in Christ Jesus.

At the General Conference held in Philadelphia in November last, I was requested to address such representatives of churches located east of Ohio as I could learn of. This I have done, sending to churches at Newark, N. J., Elizabeth, N. J., Wilmington, Del., Winchester, Va., Brooklyn, N. Y., (Church of the Blessed Hope), church at Philadelphia, Pa., Perryville, Pa., Scranton, Pa., Edinboro, Pa., Lancaster, Pa., Dover, Del.

From some of these I have had replies, and to whom I have mailed the Report of Conference with an added letter, urging immediate action.

It is quite evident that there is a good and great work to be done; and the churches of the States east of Ohio are by this appeal, solicited to form themselves into what shall be known as an "Eastern Division Conference," to act in harmonious relations with the General Conference, for the purpose of spreading abroad the "gospel of the kingdom."

At present the number of churches east are too few to be organized into a State Conference. The proposition is, that all churches located as above get into relations whereby they may act in concert for the good of their fellow man, and for the glory of the blessed Redeemer.

All who are located as above, and to whom I have not written, will please communicate with me, so we may know who we are, where we stand, and what we desire done, should we call for delegates to meet here or elsewhere early in April. Such delegates having proper credentials from a regularly organized church can only act for such church or churches they may represent. All communications to be addressed to GEO. W. YOUNG,
218 Hooper St.,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Prepared by the committee appointed by the Indiana State Conference.

LESSONS FOR EARNEST STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.—No. 59.

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

The Holy Spirit, the Spirit of God, or, as it most frequently occurs in King James translation, Holy Ghost, is found a great many times in the Scriptures. The question as to what it is, and how it operates on the mind of man need not be raised, but, what it does, or has done is the all important question. Its agency in the schemes of both revelation and redemption was absolutely necessary; and accordingly under diversified forms of speech, its manifestations are set forth. Its operations are supernatural; doing for man what he could not do for himself, disclosing to him truths unknown to all systems of human philosophy, ancient and modern; and that would forever lie beyond the limits of man's unaided reason and his most searching inquiry. In the language of Isaiah "declaring the end from the beginning and from ancient times the things not yet done."

The reader will please read the 8th chapter of Romans from the beginning to the 17th verse inclusive.

Golden Text: —For as many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God.

Q. Could man know anything about his salvation without the revelation of the Spirit?

A. Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit, 1 Cor 2: 9, 10.

For three and a half years, Jesus taught his disciples by words from his own lips then left them.

Q. Was this teaching sufficient?

A. No. The Comforter (Spirit) [illegible] teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you, Jno. 14: 26.

The Spirit would bring to their minds what the Master had taught them. Some things would slip from the memory. Some things seemed mysterious to them; these the Spirit would make plain to their understanding. Observe how the death of Jesus confounded his disciples, disappointing their most sanguine hopes for the time, and after his resurrection he has to upbraid them for their want of faith in all that the prophets had written concerning him.

Q. Did the apostles and other followers of Christ possess the Holy Spirit while he was with them?

A. This spake he of the Spirit which they that believe on him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified. Jno. 7: 39. He was not glorified until his ascension to the right hand of the Father.

Additional proof on this point is [illegible] Nevertheless I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you, Jno. 16: 7. [illegible] the [illegible] Pentecost mentioned in the 2d chap. of the Acts the Holy Spirit was a subject of promise, Luke 11: 13; 24: 49; Acts 1: 4

Q. Is every manifestation of the Spirit called a baptism?

A. Certainly not. The promise, Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence, Acts 1; 5 was fulfilled at the next Pentecost after it was spoken. See first part of Acts 2 chap. This manifestation is called a baptism with (in) the Holy Ghost.

Q. Is there any other case similar to this?

A. Yes. That of the household, or company of Cornelius, the first Gentile converts to the Christian religion. While Peter yet spoke these words the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. Acts 10: 44, 45 says, That on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. Peter in rehearsing the history in chap. 11 says: The Holy Ghost fell on them as on us at the beginning, v. 15. This referring to Pentecost. At this point Peter says: Then remembered I the word of the Lord how that he said John indeed baptized with (in) water, but ye shall be baptized with [illegible] Holy Ghost, 16 v. They spake with tongues as the apostles did at the beginning of their ministry. Read 2 chap. of Acts again. You see now that there are only two cases on record of baptism in the Holy Ghost; in both of which the baptized spake with tongues. Men and women of today profess to be baptized with the Holy Spirit but their claims are without inspired proof and must be rejected.

Q. How did the ancient prophets speak?

A. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, 2 Pet. 1; 21. "Will of man," in this text, means his intellectual or reasoning powers of mind.

Q. Through what [illegible] medium did the Spirit make its revelations?

A. It spake using words or language. Which things also we speak, says Paul [illegible] speak out in words which man's wisdom teacheth, 1 Cor. 2: 13. The Spirit selected words from human language and constructed sentences according to the rules of grammar and rhetoric in such a way as to convey God's thoughts and not man's. "The Spirit speaketh expressly," 1 Tim. 4: 1. Spake as the Spirit gave them utterance, Acts 2: 4. David says, The Spirit of the Lord spake by me, 2 Sam. 23: 2. In the next verse and onward the words of the Spirit are given. What was spoken had to be written to make it permanent and useful and in order that it might be handed down to unborn generations.

Q. Was the writing of the words inspired?

A. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, 2 Tim. 3: 16 Scripture means what is written. Inspiration is that mysterious force or power which the Divine Spirit put forth on the authors of the Scriptures of the Old Testament.

Q. Did the Spirit testify, or bear witness?

A. But when the Comforter is come ....even the Spirit of truth....he shall testify of me, Jno. 15: 26. It qualified the apostles for witnesses, Acts 1: 8; 1 Jno. 5: 16. The bare word of the apostles was not sufficient, therefore the necessity of miracles wrought by the Holy Spirit in confirmation of their message.

Q. How were the Gentiles made obedient [illegible] Paul's preaching?

A. [illegible] through mighty signs and wonders by the power of the Spirit of God, Rom. 15: 17, 19

Q Can the Spirit be resisted and how?

A. Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost as your fathers did, so do you, Jno. 7: 51.

How? The Jews to whom Christ spake resisted the Spirit in the same way their ancient fathers had done by rejecting the message borne by the Spirit through the prophets, v. 52. Rejection of the message precedes persecuting the messenger: then to reject the gospel today, is resisting the Holy Spirit.

Q Does the Spirit lead the children of God?

A. As many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God, Rom. 8: 14

Q Does the Spirit sanctify?

A. God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth, 2 [illegible] 2. 13.

Q Is the resurrection of the righteous dead and change of the living, accomplished by the Spirit?

A. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you, Rom. 8: 11. Christ was put to death in the flesh but was quickened by the Spirit, 1 Pet. 3: 18. If the Great Head of the church was quickened into life by the Spirit, the dead members of his body, the church, will be brought into life by the same Spirit. See Jno. 3: 1-8.

Better Than Ever.

It did seem as though the seedsmen outdid themselves last year in the line of elaborate catalogues, but here comes Vick's Floral Guide for 1889, from Rochester, N. Y., better than all previous issues. "Better" hardly expresses it—rather, we should say, far superior. It has been changed in every respect; new cuts, new type, enlarged in size (opening like an old-fashioned singing-book) contains three elegant lithographs [illegible] inches) of Roses, Geraniums, [illegible] Melon and Tomato; besides [illegible] fine plate of the late James Vick and his three sons who now own and manage this large business. These features must make the Floral Guide valuable to their many thousands of customers in this country. We also notice that Vick returns to the plan started by the founder of the business years ago, of offering cash prizes at the State Fair. One would think they were a little out of their heads to offer to the public such a work as the Guide free, for that is what it amounts to, when they say it will be sent on receipt of fifteen cents, and that a certificate good for fifteen cents worth of seed will be returned with the Guide.

ALL THINGS NEW.

"The world is old with centuries,
But not for these she bows her head:
Close to her heart the sorrow lies,
She holds so many dead!
Sad discords mingle in her song,
Tears fall upon her with the dew,
The whole creation groans—How long
Ere all things shall be made new?

"Yet brightly on her smiles the sun,
A benison from [illegible] to bless!
Oh, [illegible]
Who [illegible]?
Oh happy [illegible] holy time!
When wrong shall die, and strife will cease,
And all the bells of heaven chime
With melodies of peace.

"No place shall be in that new earth
For all that [illegible] this universe!
No evil taint the second birth,
'There shall be no more curse!'
Ye [illegible], [illegible] your mourn,
The day of promise dawns for you;
For [illegible] upon the throne
Says 'I make all things new.'

"We mourn the dead, but they shall wake!
The lost, but they shall be restored!
Oh, well our human hearts might break
Without this blessed word!
[illegible] rejoice,
Seeing the [illegible] of promise through,
At [illegible]:
'I will make all things new.'"

Report of the Meeting of the Executive Board of the General Conference.

The Executive Board of the General Conference met at the home office of Jas. W. Wilson at Austin, Ill., on Monday, Feb. 11, 1889.

There were present Samuel Wilson, A. J. Eychaner, Elder S. A. Chaplin and Jas. W. Wilson.

The Treasurer's Report sent to the meeting by Geo. F. Work was then read and approved as follows:

Received from church at Raisin, Mich., per A. J. Eychaner, for Evangelist Fund	$29.00
Duplicated by G. F. Work	29.00
	$58.00
[illegible] Albert O. Young toward [illegible]ying printing and other [illegible]es of committee	$20.00
[illegible] by G. F. Work	20.00
	$40.00
[illegible]ected at Conference for work [illegible] Grand Rapids	$29.66
Contributed by G. F. Work at same time for same cause	100.00
	$129.66

I earnestly recommend that some plan for educating our preachers and requiring them to study, in addition to any Chatauqua plan, be formulated.

G. F. WORK.

It was found from the report of the Corresponding Secretary that he had done all the work assigned him by the Conference, having purchased an emblem and seal, printed the ministers' certificate blanks and issued in a creditable manner the Secretary's report of the General Conference, and attended to the correspondence, registered the churches and membership in the different States, and other matters left in his care, with the exception of printing the envelopes, none having yet been called for. It was also found that the first edition of the Secretary's report was nearly exhausted and the Board instructed him to issue another edition as large as in his judgment was necessary to meet the demand for them. The entire bill for printing, etc., amounted to $63.15, which the Board allowed. Jas. W. Wilson then donated $30.00 toward the payment of the bill.

The formation of Conference Districts was talked over and the Corresponding Secretary was ordered to write to the different States with a view to ascertain the best method of such division or formation of District.

The Recording Secretary's Report touching finances showed the following:

Received of the church at Raisin, Mich.	$29.00
Sent same to Bro. Work, Treas.	29.00
Received of Jas. W. Wilson as a donation on printing and other expenses	$30.00
Turned same on his bill of printing	30.00

In relation to the Sunday School Quarterly it was decided to issue one of 24 pages, and cover, embodying such subjects as in the judgment of the editor are deserving most prominence because of their importance. Jas. W. Wilson assumes one-half the cost of publishing them. The entire cost will be about $30.00. It is thought they can [illegible] the Sunday Schools at [illegible] copy. The [illegible] lessons each Sunday regularly. The first Quarterly is to be ready for sale by the last of May, and to begin with July 7th, or the third quarter.

HELPING WEAK CHURCHES.

From numerous letters received there seemed to be urgent demands for aid in the proclamation of the gospel. The Board considered the most important of these and made the following appropriations from the General Fund:

West Virginia, $10.00, in care of J. W. Niles.

Missouri and Nebraska, $10.00, in care of Alonzo Manes.

Iowa, railroad expenses to baptize a man who lives in Woodbury Co., in care of C. J. Whitesitt, the Iowa State Evangelist.

Samuel Wilson then submitted his report on the Chautauqua System of Education and Corresponding School which will appear in THE RESTITUTION followed by a list of books and aids as, in his judgment, will meet the wants of the brotherhood.

The utility of a Theological school was discussed and thought impracticable with the means at command, at least at present. The Board concluded to place before the brethren the best available course of reading studies in Hebrew and Greek, with a reference to the books and authors, where they may be had, and such other information as is thought beneficial. For those who want to take a course in Hebrew or Greek it is thought that the "Boston Corresponding School" will afford the best facilities and of which Bro. Wilson was directed in his report to give a full account.

CIRCULATING LIBRARY.

It was recommended by the Board that a subscription fund be opened by the Secretary and donations solicited for the purpose of purchasing books for the Circulating Library. The subscription was started by Jas. W. Wilson and was followed by the other members present.

The amount donated by the General Conference for the work of preaching the gospel to the "Children of Zion" at Grand Rapids, Mich., amounting to $129.66 was contributed principally by Bro. Work, and the Board recommended that he be consulted with a view to turn the amount over to the General Conference treasury in case it is not used at Grand Rapids.

On motion the Board adjourned to [illegible] call of the President and Secretary.

DESTINY OF THE WICKED.

"And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" 1 Peter iv. 18.

The first penalty of God's law for disobedience was death. When Adam disobeyed the divine command, God said, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Gen. iii. 19. "He that hateth reproof shall die." Prov. xv. 10. Jeremiah says, "I have set before you the way of life and the way of death." Jer. xxi. 8. Ezekiel says, "The soul that sinneth shall die." Eze. xviii. 4, 20. "The wages of sin is death." Rom. vi. 23. James says, "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." Jas. i. 15.

Death is represented in the Scriptures by various terms, such as perish, destroy, devour, consume, burn up, etc. These terms are used to represent the destiny of the wicked. Balaam, the man whose eyes are open, hath said "And when he looked on Amalek, he took up his parable, and said, Amalek was the first of the nations, but his latter end shall be that he perish for ever." Num. xxiv. 20. Moses in his exhortation to obedience, said, "And it shall be, if thou do at all forget the Lord thy God, and walk after other gods and serve them and worship them, I testify against you this day that ye shall surely perish." Deut. viii. 19. "So let all thine enemies perish, O Lord; but let them that love him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might." Judges v. 31. Job says, "Even as I have seen, they that plow iniquity and sow wickedness reap the same. By the blast of God they perish, and by the breath of his nostrils are they consumed." Job iv. 8, 9. And in the 20th verse he says, "They are destroyed from morning to evening; they perish forever without any regarding it." "They die, even without wisdom." And David exclaims, "But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." Psa. xxxvii. 20.

Returning to the [illegible] Isaiah [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] with them [illegible]. Then shalt seek them, [illegible] even them that contended with thee; they that war against thee shall be as nothing [illegible] thing of nought." Isa. xli. 11, 12. When Christ [illegible] of the [illegible] whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices, or those of [illegible] upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and slew them," he said, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Luke xiii. 5. Peter, speaking of a [illegible], presumptuous [illegible], says, "But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of things they understand not, and shall utterly perish in their own corruption." 2 Peter ii. 12.

The swine that rushed into the sea perished. This reminds us of how the natural brute beasts perish. So shall it be with the wicked and the sinner. According to David the end of the wicked is destruction. He says, "Until I went into the sanctuary of God, then understood I their end. Surely thou didst set them in slippery places: thou castedst them down into destruction." Psa. lxxiii. 17, 18. "He that walketh with wise men shall be wise; but a companion of fools shall be destroyed." Prov. xiii. 20. Christ says, "For wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat." Matt. vii. 13. "Whose end is destruction." Phil. iii. 19. Referring to the ungodly Paul says, "And when they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, and they shall not escape." 1 Thess. v. 3. "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." 2 Thess. i. 9. The Revelation gives an example in the destruction of Gog and Magog, at the end of the thousand years, "And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them." Rev. xxii. 9. Malachi says, "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Mal. iv. 1.

Now I have given a very few quotations of Scripture, using the terms, die, perish, destroy, devour, consume, burned up, to show where the ungodly and the sinner will appear.

CYRUS MUSSELMAN.

Dear Restitution.

Will all of our brethren in Illinois send me their names and post office address, that I may be able to correspond with you. We want to hear from you all so we can make arrangements to have a conference in June. We want to unite our efforts, and see if we cannot get into better working order. I was appointed last June in northern Illinois as State Evangelist to preach for one year. I commenced Sept. 15th and have been at work most of the time since. Now brethren, let me hear from you and I will visit as many points as I can between now and the middle of June. Write to Lanark, Illinois.

J. S. HATCH.

To the Readers of "The Restitution."

On and after the first Sunday in May I shall be at liberty (D. V.) to preach for any churches who may need my services. I have been pastor of this church nearly seven years, and the work has not been unfruitful. I thank this people for their kindness. Any who may desire my help for a Sunday or two, or more, on or after the above date, will please address me at 853 Lafayette Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

GEORGE R. KRAMER.

"THE CHRISTIAN HYMNAL."

A copy of the above named book will be sent postpaid to each one sending us the name of a new subscriber with $2.00 for a year [illegible]

GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICE.

THE CHRISTIAN HYMNAL

The above is the title of a New Hymn Book just issued from THE RESTITUTION office, containing 156 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, printed on fine paper, from good clear type. Music on every page, followed by two to four sets of words that go to the music, making over 400 hymns. To this is added 23 pages of Hymns for Children to use in Sunday Schools or at home. We want some good brother or sister in every locality to take this work in hand and introduce it to the friends in your neighborhood. Will every minister of our faith please send us the name and address of some good, energetic worker in each congregation where he labors.

Price 25 cents each, 3 copies for $1.00; 6 copies for $2.00; 12 copies, $4.00. Special rates to congregations wishing larger quantities to place in churches, or to those who will act as agents and introduce the work in their neighborhoods.

The Fourth of March at Washington.

The inauguration of Gen. Harrison will be one of the memorable events of the Nation's history. Realizing probably that a greater number of people will desire to be present at the ceremonies than at any previous event of like nature, the managing officers of the Pennsylvania System of Railways have planned and perfected arrangements for handling thousands of persons to and from Washington. Excursion tickets will be sold at cheap rates; trains will be run through without change from principal points; the yards and side tracks at Washington will be kept clear and every precaution and every measure will be taken that will contribute to the prompt and satisfactory movement of every car. For full information apply to the nearest passenger or ticket agent of the Pennsylvania Lines.

JESUS CHRIST—His Paternity, Genealogy, Nature and Character, in the light of the Covenants; including a brief hermeneutic sketch of the Jews—being two Lectures delivered by Dr. L. C. Thomas. 163 pages, price 30 cts. or four for $1, post paid. Send to this office, or to the author at Dover, Del.

My address will be Rensselaer, Ind., until some time in March. Should any desire my labors in the Gospel work, they can address me accordingly, at an early date, that I may arrange accordingly.

D. T. HALSTEAD.

The Coming Age—Its Nature and Proximity. By J. P. Weethee.

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and in any similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

It contains over 300 large pages, bound in cloth. Price $2.00. Send to this office for this work.

The Eastern Question

In its various phases—Egyptian, British, Russian, Ottoman, Hebrew, American and Messianic, by J. P. Weethee. The title of this book gives a good idea of its contents, and the reputation of the author is a guarantee of its worth. The subject as a whole, and in its different divisions is handled in a masterly manner, and [illegible] no labor in the study of his topics. The work is thoroughly done and any one who carefully reads the 500 pages of this book will be well repaid. It is [illegible] the time in which we live. Cloth binding, clear, pleasant type to read, and good paper. Price $2.50. Send to this office; orders will now be promptly filled, as we have received an invoice of this book, and will send direct from here. The two books, "Coming Age" and "Eastern Question" if ordered together, $4.00.

Dr. Smith's Bible Dictionary.

A Dictionary of the Bible comprising its Antiquities, Biography, Geography and Natural History, with sixteen full-page Engravings, numerous smaller illustrations, besides Maps of the Holy Land in the time of Jesus, the time of Christ, and General Maps of the Countries mentioned in the Bible. It contains every name in the Bible concerning which anything can be said. It gives an account of each of the books of the Bible; explains the civil and religious institutions, the manners and customs of the Jews, as well as other nations alluded to in the Scriptures. This work by Dr. Wm. Smith, is just the "aid" to Bible study that you need, and every thorough student should place a copy on his table—you cannot read a chapter in your Bible without coming to some question on which you wish more information, and the best help you can get is Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary. Bound in cloth, 776 pages, price $1.50.

HOUSE OF MANY MANSIONS. A lecture delivered by Dr. L. C. Thomas. 40 pages, price 25 cts, or eight for $1. Send to this office.

THE GREAT PYRAMID—its teaching to us as a people. A lecture delivered at Chautauqua, by Chas. Latimer, C. E. Illustrated, 31 pages, price 25 cts. at this office.

Fifty Years in the Church of Rome. by Chas. Chiniquy.

A handsome volume of 832 pages, printed in clear type, on fine tinted paper. It is bound in strong cloth, marble edges, and gilt stamp on side and back. Contains two portraits (one representing him in priestly robes) of the author.

The book contains, among other startling revelations, thrilling chapters on, The Bible and the Priests of Rome; the Confession of Children; Festivities in a Parsonage; Protestant Children in Convents; the Tax on Masses; Rome and Education; the Miracles of Rome; Murder and Theft in Quebec; Papineau and the Patriots; Persecution of Dr. Newman; Grand Dinner of the Priests; the Abomination of Auricular Confession; Some of the Thousand Acts of Folly and Idolatry which form the Life of a Monk; the Vow of Celibacy; the Impurities of the Theology of Rome.

We have secured a supply of this book, and can fill orders direct. If you wish to inform yourselves as to the inside working of Romanism, send us $2.25 and you will receive the book postpaid at once.

The Priest, Woman, and Confessional, by C. Chiniquy.

Painful and horrible are words too weak to express the things which he relates — things enough to rouse the stones to cry out against a system which brings forth such apples of Sodom and deadly poison to the Church, the family and society.

Cloth, 16mo, 296 pages, with Portrait and Biographical Notice of the Author; Price $1.00.

Words of Truth.

This neat, chaste and forcible little Quarterly will be sent to any address for five cents a year. No more effective means of evangelizing can be found. Orders may be sent to this office, or to John Donaldson, Secretary A. P. C. K., 626 Halsey Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Instructive Reading for the Young.

The above is the title of a book of over 350 pages, made up of short stories and other instructive reading, both poetry and prose, for the young. It is illustrated with many fine engravings, is handsomely bound in cloth, and makes one of the most useful as well as pretty gifts for a young person that can be selected. Price $1.00.

The Emphatic Diaglott. B. Wilson.

Containing the original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlineary word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrations and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christianity have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words therein literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on large paper. Cloth $2.50; Library binding $3.50.

The Unspeakable Gift. J. H. Pettingell.

With an Introduction by Mr. Edward White, of London, England.

[illegible] bound in cloth. This work conclusively proves the doctrine of Life [illegible], and we most heartily commend it. Price [illegible]

The [illegible] is for those who want this work for their own use. If you want to use one of them in mission work, or for a gift to a friend we will send them for only 50 cents each.

Cruden's Concordance—Unabridged.

This work is too well known to need commendation—every Bible student knows the value of Alexander Cruden's Concordance; bound in cloth, price $1.50.

The Gospel of the Kingdom.

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses, by Wiley Jones. A book of 276 pages, clear type, cloth binding; price, 75 cents single copy, or 10 copies for $6.00. While devoted mainly to a systematic statement and defence of that gospel which the Lord Jesus and his apostles preached, this book contains also a prophetico-historical chart of the empires, and a key or outline of the Apocalypse. Pages 223 and 224. It shows the nature of future rewards and punishments, and points out the prophetic "signs" among the nations — Russians, British, Jews, Turks, and Roman Kingdoms—which portend the speedy and personal coming of Christ to raise the dead, judge the world, destroy the wicked, and establish the glorious and eternal Kingdom of God on earth. For sale at this office.

Translated from the Greek text of Constantine De Tischendorf, and other standard text authorities by Chas. Gardner, M. A. A book of 78 pages, handsomely bound in cloth. Price 40 cts.

The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. By L. C. Thomas.

This page,—"The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. Also an Epitome of the Great Salvation; and an Appendix including various other subjects, in brief.

The perfect unchangeable moral law is considered and shown to be the basis and spirit of the old Sinaitic law, now dead in its entirety. The law of Moses and law of Christ are compared and contrasted, and the relation of both to the old and new covenants is treated at some length. The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the state of the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 250 pages. Cloth bound. Price $1.00.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXVIII. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 20, 1889. NO. 11.

THE RESTITUTION

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

The Future Habitable and Future Age, or the World to Come.

It is the creed of many that this is the only world and life they are sure of, and therefore it is best to get as much enjoyment as possible in this life. A logical enough conclusion were the premises true. They consequently seek nothing but pleasure and absorb life through the senses. Pleasure is the enthusiasm of the age, and religion is invaded by sensuality. Subjects of such a creed they are soon overtaken by the logic of results meanness, selfishness, physical corruption and stinted selfhood.

There are two questions, one of which is the most important, the other the most interesting that can be proposed in language. Are we to live after death? And if we are, in what state? These are questions confined to no climate, creed, or community. At all times and in all places men have contemplated the questions of death and immortality. The one is a stern reality from which they know there is no escape. Every day they see friends drooping and dying, and to them, not possessing the Christian's hope, the future is dark and uncertain; and they would willingly give all could they but see a beacon light, or feel the strong assurance of faith that they would live again. The object of this humble effort shall be to "bring you glad tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people;" to present that gospel through which is brought light, life and immortality.

"And to angels he did not subject the future habitable"—(Diaglott). "The world to come" (Com. Ver.) "The inhabited earth," (Rev. Ver. mar.) "Habitable earth, or land." (Youngs Analytical Con.) Heb. ii. 5.

"And having seated him at his own right hand in the heavens, far above every authority, and government, and power, and Lordship, and every name being named, not only in this, but also in the future Age," Dia. Eph. i. 20–21.

Then there is to be a "future inhabited earth," and it will not be subject to the angels, as in the present inhabited earth.

What shall constitute the "Kingdom of heaven, or ruling power of that world and age? I have put my words in thy mouth, and I have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundation of the earth," Isa. li. 16. Who can judge of the golden harvest at seed time, or of the grandeur of the structure by viewing the huge rough stones as they are taken from the quarry and prepared for the foundation?

Hear ye then the parable of the Sower. "The Kingdom of heaven is like unto a man which sowed good seed in his field....Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, the kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard, which a man took and sowed in his field; which indeed is the least of all seeds but when it is grown it is the greatest among herbs....Another parable spake he unto them, the Kingdom is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened. All these things spake Jesus unto them in parables, and without a parable spake he not unto them, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying, I will open my mouth in parables, I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world," Matt. xviii. 28–35. In these parables are shown the different stages of the kingdom. In the first is the sowing, or planting as represented by the good seed. In the second is represented the growth. In the third when it is completed, or grown it is of the nature of leaven "to leaven the whole lump." The world (Kosmos). Satan showed Christ all the kingdoms of the "world" (Kosmos) the world in this sense is the field. It is during this age that it grows to perfection for the harvest is the end of the world (aion). Aye, indefinite time, dispensation. This being the case the world—Kosmos—will not be leavened by the kingdom of heaven, in this world. Aion, age.

Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind, which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away, so shall it be at the end of the world. Why are any cast away if the kingdom is now in the world, its nature being that of leaven to leaven the whole lump. The church then in its present form cannot be the kingdom. In contradiction to the theory that the church is to convert the world is the other popular notion, that the great mass of the human race, instead of being saved by the kingdom relied upon to convert the world, are cast away and burned. And not satisfied with this they are said to be immortal and cannot die, and, hence, must live forever where—

"Tempests of angry fire shall roll
To blast the rebel worm,
And beat upon the naked soul
In one eternal storm."

That their will be a burning at the end of this age the parables plainly teach, and there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth, but as to whose ranks will be thinned by it the great Sunday school world is far wide of the mark.

"It is not the death to fling,
Aside this sinful dust
And soar on strong exulting wing
To live among the just."

We though it was the conscious part of man that sins, and if the soul is that conscious part, how is it that it escapes at death, and leaves the innocent body to suffer the penalty? And if the righteous go to glory at death did not the serpent speak the truth, Gen. iii. 4. Again, if death is eternal life in misery, why not say that life is eternal death in happiness, and if we speak of eternal death as a "death that never dies," why not, when speaking of eternal life, call it a "life that never lives."

But we cannot stop to argue with Satan; God says, the soul, not body, that sinneth it shall die. This is our promise, and let the advocates for the other party by their spiritualism, and theosophy refute it if they can, and we will take our chances for immortality by seeking for it as God directs. Shall mortal man be more just than God? that he should set about "rescuing the perishing," from "eternal torment," when "none of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him (for the redemption of their soul is costly and must be let alone for ever) that he shall still live forever and see corruption, for he seeth that wise men die, likewise the fool and the brutish person perish," Psa. xlix. 7–10; Rev. Ver. It is God's purpose to do this. To "Ransom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death," not life in misery, Hosea xiii. 14. Since man cannot, and God says he will, and Jesus gave himself a ransom for all, this ought to be sufficient, for certainly man is worth no more since the fall than when he was sold under sin, Rom. vii. 14, by Adam. Therefore, as by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life," Rom. v. 18.

Two things were brought to light through the gospel. Life and Immortality. Life is unconditional, immortality is conditional.

In this age the called are on trial for immortality. We will now show who comes under the penalty in this life of the second death. God had his people of old, a chosen nation, who has been cut off and another "chosen nation" or Royal Priesthood takes the place. In the parable of the sower we were shown, that they who heard the word and understood it, were the only ones that bore fruit—hence the only ones that were called, properly, all the rest fell away. "Many are called but few chosen." Did those incur the penalty? we think not, for they did not understand. Their names must first be in the Book of life, Phil. iv. 3, before they can be blotted out. An explanation of the book of life will make all plain. In revelation it is called "the book of the Life." Dia. 20th chap. 12–15. "Blessed be that God of our Lord Jesus Christ, who has blessed us with every spiritual blessing in the heavenlies, by Christ, even as he chose us in him before the foundation of the world....having in love previously marked us out for sonship, through Christ Jesus for himself, according to the good pleasure of his will....by whom, through his blood we possess the redemption—the forgiveness of offences, according to the opulence of his favor," Eph. i. 3–7. There is a class, chosen from the foundation of the world—not arbitarily but on conditions of overcoming, to be adopted sons—"heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." Saved by grace, favor, partiality, preference. All know what a favorite is. This "favor" he caused to overflow towards us, having made known to us the secret of his will, according to his own benevolent design, which he previously purposed in himself, in regard to an administration of the fulness of the appointed times, to reunite all things under one head—even under the Anointed One—the things in the heavens and the things in the earth—under him, by whom also we obtained an inheritance ....by whom also you, (having heard the word of the truth, the glad tidings of your salvation) by whom (I say) you also having believed were sealed with the spirit of promise—the Holy Spirit—which is a pledge of our inheritance in a redemption of the purchase, to the praise of his glory," vs. 7–14. Amen. What favor, what preference, "what manner of love God hath bestowed upon us, that we should be the children of God—begotten—but it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." He the "Elder brother," "the first-born among many brethren," the first-born of every creature," (of this class) "the firstborn from the dead." Joint heirs, to "inherit all things." "I will give thee the heathen for a possession." Christ's life is not the price, or ransom of the church only, [illegible] "for all." The purchase was [illegible] and a few favored ones [illegible] by their faithfulness unto the e[illegible] inherit this purchase, to rule [illegible] to teach, kings and priests. By grace these are saved, through faith, the gift, or special favor of God to a few in this age.

Having been called to this high calling, by hearing and understanding the word—for this is the way they are begotten, "of his own will begat he us with the word of truth," Jas. i. 18; 1 Jno. v. 1. With this comes the responsibility or danger of losing life, or of coming under the penalty of the second death in this age. Paul, who preached a resurrection of "the just and the unjust," apprehended this danger, when he said, "Yea, doubtless, I count all things but loss....if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead," Phil. iii. 8–11. Again, I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection, lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a cast away," 1 Cor. ix. 27. James was aware of this danger when he said, "Brethren, if any among you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, Jas. v. 19–20. Peter, speaking of those, "Who once were not God's people," said, "Beloved I entreat you as strangers and sojourners, to abstain from fleshly lusts, which wage war, against the life," 1 Pet. ii. 10. Paul again to the Phillipians iii. 18–19, "For often I told you, and now even weeping, I say, many walk as the enemies of the cross of the Anointed One, whose end will be destruction, whose God is the stomach and then glory in their shame, they who are engrossed with earthly things." "For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more a sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries, Heb. x. 26–27. "If any one seeing his brother sinning a sin, not to death, let him ask, and he will give him life for those who sin not to death. There is a sin to death, I do not say that he should ask concerning that," 1 Jno. v. 16. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God," Heb. xiv. 29. "The Lord is not slack concerning his promises but is long suffering to us-ward, the children of promise, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance, 2 Pet. iii. 9. "I am the vine, ye are the branches, he who abides in me and I in him, he bears much fruit." First in the vine, then abide there for, "If any one abide not in me, he is cast out like the branch, and is withered and such are gathered, and cast into a fire, and are burned, Jno. xv. 1–6. This is in harmony with the parable of the "net." "If any one was not found written in the book of the life he was cast into the lake of fire, Rev. xx. 15. Dia. Cut off at the first resurrection, wither until the second or general resurrection, and burned. Having had their name written in the book of the life and not having proved faithful unto the end, Rev. iii. 5, it was blotted out and hence not found written at the time that the dead, the greater and the small, stand before the throne and the books were opened, and another book, which is the book of the life and the dead were judged from the things which had been written in the books, according to their works," some "beaten with many stripes and some with few stripes," but none put to death, or cast into the lake but this specific class whose name was not found "in the book of the life." These are in distinction from those whose names were never written in the book, Rev. xiii. 8. "And all who dwell on the earth shall worship him, whose name has not been written from the foundation of the world in the scroll, or book, of the life of that Lamb who was killed also," Rev. xvii. 8. So it is plain that the book of the life is the record of those chosen from the foundation of the world. To be made perfect through suffering and fitted to reign with Christ on the earth. Then instead of the benighted heathen being exposed to the penalty of the second death in this age it is the other class who [illegible] enlightened and have tasted of the good word of God and the world to come. If they fall away it is impossible to renew them, seeing that they crucify Christ afresh, and put him to an open shame. It may be well to cite a few examples of this class. David said, "Deliver me from blood guiltiness O, God," Psa. li. 14. Judas said, "I have sinned in betraying innocent blood," Matt. xxvii. 4. He was enlightened and knew what he had done, therefore he was different from those who crucified him. "Who knew not what they did," and "if they had known it they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." Again. "Whoever may eat the bread or drink the cup, of the Lord unworthily, will be an offender against the body and blood of the Lord....for he eats and drinks judgment to himself, who eats and drinks not discriminating the Lord's body," 1 Cor. xi. 27–29. "Therefore, I say to you, though every other sin and blasphemy will be forgiven to you men; yet the blasphemy of the Spirit, it will not be forgiven, for whosoever may speak a word against the Son of man, it will be forgiven him, but he who may speak against the Holy Spirit, it will in no wise be forgiven him, neither in this nor in the coming age," Matt. xii. 31–33. This is spoken of "you men," signifying that any one may be guilty of this sin, as also Acts viii. 20. "And Simeon seeing that through the imposition of the hands of the Apostles, the spirit was given, he offered them money, saying, give me also this authority. But Peter said to him, may thy silver go to destruction with thee....thou hast no part nor lot in this thing, for thy heart is not right before God. Reform therefore....and entreat the Lord, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven." "If perhaps," Peter was doubtful, so we shall not pass judgment in this case. The case of Ananias perhaps should be noted, Acts v. 3–10. "Why has the Adversary filled thine heart to deceive the Holy Spirit," etc. These we think are sufficient to show the Responsibility of the present life and age. The attenuating circumstances are, "Believe and be baptized for the remission of sins," and repentance that your sins may be blotted out when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, who will judge the living and the dead, those under penalty of the second death for sins specified, that may be committed in this life. And this judgment is at the end of this world—Age—at "his appearing and his kingdom;" When he comes with those selected in this age to be co-rulers with him in "future habitable and the future Age." This brings us to the regeneration era "and times of restitution of all things." We will just say here that the regeneration is simply a revival or restoring to life. Generate, to produce, to procreate. Regenerate would be to reproduce or recreate. The race, with the exceptions of those immortalized at the first resurrection and those who have in this life perpetuated their right to life, will be raised in the same condition in which they died. And under the teaching and the ruling of the Great High Priest and his priesthood, the saints, will be restored to primitive perfection during the "Restitution Age." This at another time.

"Faith builds a bridge from this world to the next O'er death's dark gulf, and all its horrors hide."

Not on the plan of inherent immortality, however, but through the resurrection. Workers of this blessed hope let us build this bridge, 1 Tim. ii. 6 Rev. i. 18.

FAIR CHANCE THEORY.—No. 2.

Dear Restitution:

I wish to examine all the Scripture, on which our brethren who hold said doctrine, rely, and lest I should overlook some of them I would be obliged if some good brother would send me a list of such passages as he thinks most strongly support that view. I will not be personal, I am only opposing the doctrine because I think it is not true, and for that reason I want to examine its foundation. Should I find I am mistaken I will change forthwith.

Ezek. xxxvii., concerning the "dry bones," is generally relied on as a strong proof on that side of the question. I will therefore examine that and see if there is any proof there. Please read the whole chapter, Eze. xxxvii. This is supposed to teach that when Christ and the saints shall reign as kings and priests the Israelites who have died through all the then previous ages will be raised from the dead to whom "the everlasting gospel" will be preached, and that they will then hear the word of the Lord, and the Lord will make a covenant with them, etc. Now if this is true we ought to receive it, but I do not see it so. I see nothing about a resurrection of dead men at all. The whole chapter (as also the previous one) is teaching the restoration of Israel, I mean the whole twelve tribes, including Israel (ten tribes) and Judah (two tribes). To do this Jehovah takes the prophet, in spirit, and sets him down in the midst of a valley full of dry bones. Read from verses 1 to 10 inclusive.

Now what does it all mean? Fortunately we are not left to guess what it means; we have Jehovah himself explaining it. Vs. 11, "Then he said unto me, Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel; behold, they say, our bones are dried up, and our hope is lost; we are clean cut off. Therefore prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God, Behold I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, O my people, and I will bring you into the land of Israel." Vs. 12.

Now it must be very clear that dead men do not say, "our bones are dried, our hope is lost, we are cut off," etc., but the left or living of Israel who, so far as ever becoming a nation or kingdom again, reckon themselves as cut off, without national hope, bones are dry, dead! Therefore, or for that reason, the valley of dry bones. It shows that they shall again become a nation. This is still further shown by the two sticks (read balance of chapter) which become one, meaning that the two kingdoms, Israel and Judah overturned, should become one kingdom with one king and should never more be divided.

That no reference is made to dead Israel, I mean men, women and children who have died, but to the Israelites then (now) scattered amongst the nations, is still further proved by the fact that they marry and are given in marriage, at least they have children as shown by verse 25, "And they shall dwell therein (their own land), they, and their children, and their children's children forever;" also verse 26, "I will place them, and multiply them;" I emphasize again, "and multiply them." If this refers to Israelites, literally dead men and women, there would indeed be much force to the questions asked Jesus by the Sadducees as to whose wife a woman should be who had had seven husbands. Luke xx.

I think I need say no more on this. It must be clear enough that no reference is made to any personal resurrection at all, but on account of what they say Jehovah uses the figure to show a national restoration, viz., the restoration of Israel. If, however, it should be claimed that the whole house of Israel must mean all, including the dead and living, I reply I am not aware of any such use of words. We frequently hear such expressions as, the whole house of Israel, all Israel, whole congregation, etc. At Ex. xvi. "The whole congregation of Israel murmured;" 2 Chron. vi. 3, "The king blessed the whole congregation of Israel;" and "All Israel stoned Achan." Jos. vii. 25. "All Israel and Judah loved David," "all Israel lamented Samuel," and so on ad infinitum. Does any one suppose for a moment that such expressions mean more than the then nation? and sometimes but a small portion of that even? Does any one suppose that every living man, woman and child threw a stone at Achan? I only need ask the question. Then don't let us try to make a passage mean more than it clearly does.

"For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. xv. 22. This is considered a strong point, and yet, strange to say, the very idea is not there! To say nothing about a future fair chance or opportunity for any, here is not even a word about a resurrection of any out of Christ. "As in Adam all die even so in Christ shall all be made alive." If it is claimed that "in" should read "by," I reply there is no reason why it should; the word is en (in), but even then it would not help the matter any. Let us try. For as "by," "in," or "through" Adam all die, even so by, in, or through Christ shall all be made alive. Now how or why do we all die in Adam? Adam, through sin, fell and was debarred from the tree of life, and so was mortal, and transmitted his nature to all his descendants; thus we all die, in, by, or through, him; even so in Christ, how or why so. Christ is a life-giving spirit. He will give eternal life to all his, so that all who are in him will live, by, in, or through him. Thus through Adam we die and are sown in corruption, dishonor, weakness, natural body; in Christ life, incorruption, glory, power, spiritual body, etc. My paper is full. More soon.

LESSONS FOR EARNEST STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.—No. 62.

WARNING.

Golden Texts.—"The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring forever, the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. Moreover by them is thy servant warned, and in keeping of them there is great reward." Psa. xix. 9, 11.

Q. In what way does God give us warning?

A. In the precepts and commandments of his holy word.

"It speaks to all transgressors and levels its terrors against all offencers, great or small, without any exception." And, that one individual may not account himself better than another, it says that "all are under sin," that "there is none righteous," but that "the whole world is guilty before God." Rom. iii. 9, 10, 19. Not a man, not a woman in the whole world dare assert "a complete innocence, a perfect righteousness" before God, apart from the justifying blood of the Savior.

Then, you who read this lesson, if you have not come to the atoning fountain and had your sins washed away, are "sinners" are under condemnation and are "worthy of death." You own that there is a God, and that the Bible has come to us from that God. Will you listen to his voice as he speaks to you, in solemn words of warning? What are you going to do with your sins? How are you going to answer your judge?

Q. What is the wrath of God revealed against?

A. All ungodliness and unrighteousness of men who hold the truth in unrighteousness. Rom. i. 18; ii. 6, 8, 9; You who believe there is a God, and that the Bible comes from him, and who yet refuse to put on the righteousness of God, are "holding the truth in unrighteousness."

Q. What is the judgment of God as pronounced against backbiters, haters of God, the proud, the boastful, the disobedient to parents, the covenant-breakers, the implacable, the unmerciful, the envious, the covetous, the murderous, the deceivers?

A. They are worthy of death.

Q. Is there any person living who dare say he has not been guilty of one or more of these sins?

A. There certainly is no one.

Q. Is God unrighteous then, when he condemns you with the world?

A. No; if he was, he could not judge the world. You condemn others, because they are thieves and drunkards and murderers, and why? Because they have violated law. Yet, in condemning sin in them, you condemn yourself; because you also break the law.

Q. Can any man think to escape the judgment of God, who is guilty of any of the sins enumerated in the first chapter of Romans?

A. No; Paul says, those who despise the riches of God's goodness and forbearance and long-suffering whereby he would lead them to repentance, treasure up wrath for themselves against the day of wrath. Rom. ii. 4, 5. It is a fearful treasure to lay up!

Q. Whom has God appointed judge the secrets of men?

A. Jesus Christ.

Q. Who will execute the judgment?

A. The authority to do this has been given to Jesus. John v. 22, 27; Acts x. 42.

Q. Where must all appear?

A. Before the judgment seat of Christ. 2 Cor. v. 10.

Q. How will Jesus judge men?

A. By the words that he has spoken, John xii. 48, because they who receive not the words, have rejected Jesus.

Q. What is it that condemns men?

A. The fact that they will not come to the light, "because their deeds are evil." Jesus is the light of the world; they will not hear and do his words that they may have life.

Q. What is the sentence?

A. Death. The wages of sin is death, Rom. vi. 23; everlasting destruction, 2 Thess. i. 9.

Q. How can we prove that the death spoken of here, as the wages of sin, is beyond the death that is common to good and bad alike?

A. Because it is something that is spoken of, as treasured up against a certain coming day, called the day of wrath, something which Jesus has been given authority to execute; a fixed penalty to be inflicted upon evil doers, and from the fact that it is appointed unto men once to die, but after that the judgment, Heb. ix. 24. The judgment does not come until after Christ comes, and this death is not inflicted until some time after his coming.

Q. How can men escape this death? How get out from under the sentence of condemnation?

A. By taking upon themselves the righteousness revealed in the gospel. The just shall live by faith. Rom. i. 16, 17. Christ died for us; being justified by his blood we shall be saved from wrath through him. Rom. v. 8, 9. We must flee from the wrath to come, Matt iii. 7; Acts xxvi. 20. Turn from evil ways. Ezek. xxxiii. 11; xviii. 30. Repent and believe the gospel, and be baptized into the all-saving name of Jesus.

Repent and turn yourselves from all your transgressions; so iniquity shall not be your ruin.

Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him. Jude 14, 15.

THE RESTITUTION.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their Name, Post Office, County and State plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind.

Remittances should be sent by Bank Draft, Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk; money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

LAST Sunday, March 17, it was our privilege to baptize a believer into the divine name, a brother, George Alexander. He was going to the west, and came a number of miles out of his direct way to put on Christ according to the requirements of the gospel. It was a pleasure for our little church to gather on the banks of Yellow River to witness one more administration of holy baptism. May God be with our brother wherever his lot may be cast. The pathways of ministers of the gospel and converts meet and cross each other very singularly sometimes in this world. Paul met Lydia at Philippi, both on a transient visit to the place. She was baptized and they parted to meet no more in this world. Philip, at an earlier date, met the Ethiopian Eunuch, by divine guidance, gave him a comprehensive lesson of instruction, baptized him, and they parted to meet no more till the great day. Once since we have been living in Plymouth, a believer came all the way from Kentucky to be baptized. His time was very limited, and we took him "the same hour of the night" down into Yellow River, and baptized him when scarcely light enough to make our way down into the stream. It was a solemn hour. On the banks we parted with our brother to meet no more till Jesus comes. So with Bro. Alexander, our paths crossed once at a baptismal scene, and we expect to meet no more till Jesus comes.

REDEMPTION.

[illegible] we have redemption through his [illegible], the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace, Eph. i. 7.

"The crucifixion of the Redeemer, although unquestionably a vicarious sacrifice, we should hold up, not as placating God, which it never did, but as at once the greatest of human crimes and culminating point of divine forbearance; in itself, and as the work of man, most ungrateful and atrocious wickedness, hateful in the sight of all holy beings; in its results, as involving obedience unto death, and love deeper than the grave, the centre of the world's salvation, and the crowning glory of th Savior's work and worth.

"To Christ, and to Christ alone, we should ever point as the great manifestation of Divine love: the centre and circumference of all blessing; the Redeemer of the Church, and the Regenerator of the race." Henry Dunn, Destiny of the Human Race.

The death of our Lord Jesus Christ was a most wonderful demonstration of the love of God, on the one hand, and a most striking exemplification of human wickedness, on the other. It was not however, an unforeseen accident, but a pre-determined event. The Divine plan and human wickedness are presented in a single point of view by Peter, in his ever memorable discourse, Acts ii. 23. Speaking of Christ he says:—"Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain."

In our brief paper it is with the facts of redemption and not with human philosophy, or creed theology, that we have to do. While God pardons sin, the forgiveness of iniquity comes to us only through the death and blood of Christ, the Lamb of God. God is love, but he is also holy, just, and righteous; and sin is not only moral deformity, but subversive of holiness, justice, and righteousness. In God's moral government, sin is rank treason and rebellion. How can God be just and a justifier of the sinner debased in character, and rebellious in disposition and conduct?

It is true that "God is Love," and it is true that God can forgive sin, but is it true that he bestows his pardon as an act of arbitrary recklessness, regardless of his own Divine attributes, on one hand, and of the hateful turpitude of sin on the other? Notwithstanding that it was by wicked hands that Christ was "Crucified and slain," it is still emphatically true that "he died for our sins according to the Scriptures." Christ's death was not a fortuitous event, nor was it a mere martyrdom; it was in God's "foreknowledge and purpose," it was "according to the Scriptures." Redemption was seemingly only to be accomplished through a maze of intricacies, but the love of God toward sin-ruined man has evolved a plan of salvation whereby he can be "just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus." In the economy of redemption the death—the blood—the sacrifice of Christ are most intimately connected with everything pertaining to human salvation. If God's love be spoken of, it is the crowning exhibition of that love. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Remission of sins comes through the Redeemer's precious blood. It was not left to words alone to keep this truth ever before the mind, but the memorial cup was ordained to most solemnly impress this truth upon the believing heart. "He took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, drink ye all of it; For this is my blood of the New Testament (covenant) which is shed for many for the remission of sins." True we are saved by grace, but how? "Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus; whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past through the forbearance of God." Not to quote numerous passages at length we may briefly say that "the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purges the conscience from dead works;" that it is "by his own blood he entered into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us," that praise is ascribed unto him, "the first begotten of the dead and the prince of the Kings of the earth," saying, "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood." Even the princely priesthood, the very elite of redeemed humanity, will close the new song with the adoring words—"Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth."

The endearing and precious title—Lamb—is not lost, nor laid aside, when our Redeemer shall take the ennobling titles of Bridegroom and King of kings.

When we stand near the cross of Christ we feel we are standing on holy ground. We feel from our very heart to say—It was for me he suffered, it was for me he died.

"In the cross of Christ I glory,
Towering o'r the wrecks of time:
All the light of sacred story
Gathers round its head sublime."

To us in health it has been always sweet—to us in sickness it has been sweeter still, to say—

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners, plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains.

The dying thief rejoiced to see
That fountain in his day;
And there have I, as vile as he,
Washed all my sins away.

E'er since by faith, I saw the stream
Thy flowing wounds supply,
Redeeming love has been my theme,
And shall be till I die.

Before closing our paper we wish to emphasize one fact—that Christ must be a perfect law-keeper in order to become the Redeemer of a sin-ruined race, and in order to become the head of a new creation. As a law-keeper Adam failed, but God will do no such thing as to make a law that shall turn out a nullity. If Adam failed God's purpose of "heading up" humanity in a personage of the most perfect, legal righteousness will not miscarry. So it was in the "Man Christ Jesus" that the law was "magnified and made honorable." The children were sharers in flesh and blood, and the Son of God partook part of the same, that through the grace of God he might taste death for every man. Christ not only died, but he vindicated the majesty of Divine law by keeping it perfectly. It was in doing this, as well as by his death, that he has become the Head of a new creation and Savior of a lost world. Our Redeemer is righteous in nature and character on the strictest principles and according to the exactest requirements of Divine law. We become righteous through faith in God's gracious provision for the remission of sin in, and through the Son of his love. The outcome of redemption will be glorious for our race and for our earth itself. Christ will come again.

"Earth, thou grain of sand on the shore of the Universe of God: thou Bethlehem amongst the princely cities of the heavens; thou art, and remainest, the Loved One amongst ten thousand suns and worlds, the Chosen of God! Thee will he again visit, and then thou wilt prepare a throne for him, as thou gavest him a manger cradle; in his radiant glory wilt thou rejoice, as thou didst once drink his blood, and his tears, and mourn his death! On thee has the Lord a great work to accomplish."

DENOUNCED PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., March 3.—At the dedication of a Catholic parochial school building in this city today Bishop Kane, of Wheeling, delivered an address in which he severely denounced the public school system of America. In the course of his remarks he said the public school system was a divorce from moral and religious training. He could not understand how it was just for the poor man who has no children to be compelled to pay tax to help educate the son and daughter of the millionaire. The State has no more right to tax the poor man for the education of the rich man's children than for the support of the rich man's family. He denied that the Catholic church was opposed to education and said: "The great problem that confronts us today is the same as that which confronted the people in apostolic times. There were schools then, but they were pagan schools, and the only way to counteract their effect was to establish our Christian schools. That is what the Catholic church is trying to do in America now."

The above is taken from the Daily Inter Ocean of March 4th. We are not disposed, for ourself, to offer any comments. In place of doing this we will copy a short extract from a work in our possession entitled—Thoughts on the Coming and Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ—by John Cox, Minister of the Gospel, Woolwich, England. After having given some much needed and pertinent admonition to his English readers on the folly of Protestants in helping Romanism to build its idolatrous mass-houses, he continues his expositions of prophecy by showing its application to the Papacy in the unvarnished language following: "In 2 Thess. ii, 3–12, is a description of this same evil system, here called 'the mystery of iniquity,' which the apostle said was working in his time, but that something withheld it from manifesting itself, v. 6. This withholding power was the pagan Roman Empire; and when this was removed the man of sin was revealed, and for several hundred years the popes and papacy have been living commentators on this solemn and remarkable passage; so that almost all students of God's word, as they looked toward Rome, have said, 'There is the man of sin, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.' v. 4. The following passage also traces some well-known features of popery;—'Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving need to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy, (note), having their conscience seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believed and know the truth,'" 1 Tim. iv. 1–4.

Note. "'Speaking lies in hypocrisy.' How dreadful must their case be to whom these words apply! What dangerous characters must such be in society—systematic liars, and common-note hypocrites! Woe be to the nation that trusts their professions, or even their oaths. I have thought whether the lies here mentioned may not be considered as doctrinal lies, and that at the present time they are spoken in hypocrisy, seeing it has been proved that the Papists deny many things before others which are held among themselves, particularly the impossibility of salvation out of their church, and the duty of the church to punish and put to death heretics. The late protestant meeting has proved clear enough these are their doctrines, and yet some of them talk of charity and tolerance. I should as soon expect to find ease in hell as toleration in popery, if once ascendant. It may be said that thus speaking I am guilty of that with which I charge them. Nay, let them worship as they please, hinder them not by any force, but give them no power to hinder me.... For my own part I heartily wish papists nothing but good, even real conversion to God, but for their system I feel nothing but utter abhorrence, and an earnest longing for its downfall."

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Feb. 10, '89.

Jas. W. Wilson:

Sickness has interferred with my going to Macon and has kept me at home today, so that I have an opportunity of answering your letter and of sending to Elder Jaquith, of Oregon, the check for $100 that you write about, which I will do. My offer of $100.00 to conferences or combinations of churches in any section is, I think, technically correct, in the manner I meant it to be, although you do not appear to think so. I wanted to have ten or more churches in any section combine in their work, knowing that in combination of effort is the only way to have evangelists kept in the field, as each weak church, acting separately, feels it cannot think of engaging in any outside work whatever, and so nothing has been attempted and nothing in that line has been done. It is the poorer churches, such as those in Nebraska, Missouri, Northern Texas, etc., that I wanted to induce to combine and do some outside work in their own section, in their own way, and with their own men. On the other hand, to have two or three churches, such as those in Northern Indiana and Michigan combine and raise $100.00 each, which they can easily do and should do, and call on me for $100.00 each would bankrupt me or take the $1000.00 in ten portions (which is the utmost limit as to what I can do, and I think I so stated at the time; if I did not I want it so understood), for the richer sections would be cutting out the poorer sections which may come in later. As the Oregon conference seems to fit in with the purpose I had in view, I waive the point of ten churches combining, trusting they may soon grow up to that. The requirement that there should be ten churches banded to work together is proper, and is an incentive for the local evangelists to form and constitute churches.

Counting these $100.00 contributions as numbering ten, and my three offers of $500.00 each (it is a mistake to group two of these together as one offer for one object, of $1000.00, as I see has been done), and my pledges to the local church here, I see more than $8,500 for which I will probably be called upon this year for church work alone. This will absorb [illegible] half of my expected income (if I live), unless means should come to me that I do not now see clearly are likely to come. I mention this not that I think that I am doing more than I should, but that it would be such a gratification to see others in the church, (some of them richer than I), appreciate as I do the importance of this effort and second those offers with other comparatively large donations, sufficient to enable our committee to get to work; but I see no answering move on the part of individuals, and I can see no work that the committe can undertake, either evangelistic, ministerial, college, and in helping on weak churches, until means are furnished it to work with.

The contributions I make must also, of course, be credited to the account of the Philadelphia Church, as they could not send up one-half of their income, in addition to what I propose to do. There is much work to do in the East, and I have tried to get our churches to organize to jointly undertake some of this work, but thus far it has not brought forth fruit, but possibly will later on.

Our Philadelphia church expenses run over $3000.00 per year, as in addition to our regular meetings, five times per week, the church is doing, as every church should, quite a considerable amount of good in the way of neighborhood charities. The system of tithes is firmly established here in almost the entire church, and, as a result it has means to prosecute its good work; but it could not, of course, double that $3,000 in order to send half of it up to a State or General Conference; nor could it reduce its expenses to $1,500 and send the other half up for the general work. But my contributions will result in the same thing as if the church contributed its quota. Are other churches falling into this order? I enclose a letter (before referred to) from Centralia, W. T. I think I shall write them that when they have united with the Oregon Conference, I will contribute personally $50.00 toward their building. It seems to me that, if everything is right, we ought to do something (as a Board) to help weak churches like this. Won't you write to that church at Bear Creek (I think it is) in Arkansas, and ask them how they are prospering, and if they need any help? I have not the letter or address.

Yours, C. F. WORK.

Dear Restitution:

One of the principal reasons why the church has no more influence for good, in the world is a lack of unity in thought and action among its members. When the power of God came upon the early church they were all of one accord. Is it at all likely that three thousand would have been converted at Pentecost had the members of the church been [illegible] among themselves and been divided into factions?

"Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing." We must all speak the same thing. This does not mean that we must all believe precisely alike upon all questions, but it does mean, that questions on which we differ should be talked over privately among ourselves; but when we come to speak for the public ear, either from the sacred desk or through the medium of the press, we should speak the same thing, otherwise we cannot expect the Lord to bless our efforts. We are each so weak personally that we can accomplish but very little in the Master's cause. It is not as individuals that the Lord expects us to carry forward his work, but in the capacity of a united church, each and every member of the living church of the Lord Jesus Christ, which ought to move the world, has a personal duty to perform, but that work ought to be done as a member of the church and in conjunction with the other members of the church. We are a part of the great whole but not that whole. The master wheel of a Corlis engine is a very necessary part of that piece of machinery and while the engine would be worthless without it, still the master wheel is not the engine, on the contrary it is utterly worthless as a piece of machinery when separated from the other parts of the engine. We may fill a very important niche in the Master's great engine, but if we would accomplish a good work we must do our part in the Lord's machine, the church. Dr. Guthrie thus illustrates this fact; he says, 'Separate the atoms which make the hammer, and each would fall on the stone as a snowflake; but welded into one, and wielded by the firm arm of the quarry man it will break the massive rocks asunder. Divide the waters of Niagara into distinct and individual drops, and they would be no more than the falling rain, but in their united body they would quench the fires of [illegible] and have some to spare [illegible] of other mountains.

[illegible] be one of the little drops, out of which the Lord shall make a great Niagara that shall finally quench the fires of Satan and then form a smooth, unruffled stream on the bosom of which many thousand tired and weary souls may calmly and peacefully float into that eternal haven of rest, peace and joy which the Lord hath prepared for his lost and loved ones.

R. S. DWIGGINS.

Dear Restitution:

Believing you have an intense interest in the spread and conquering power of truth, and that you stand ready to greet with pleasure and good cheer all those who are enabled to shake off the shackles of error, entering into the freedom and life of Christ the Life Giver, the one Lord and Head to the Church, we make free to address you. We came to a knowledge of you and the paper you edit through Bro. Gardner of Champaign City, whom, though but slightly acquainted with, we have learned to love and hold in tender regard. The Church of God as a religious people, holding the marked views I understand they do, came to my knowledge as a most pleasing surprise. I had supposed the Winebrennarians embraced all classified under that appellation.

My surprise was all the more full and endearing to me when I learned their views upon restitution and its kindred prophetic truths—truths so much needed at this hour when the world's sabbatical morning dawneth. Your and their position taken relative to man's natural inherent immortality cannot well be overrated. The doctrine of man's immortality as out of Christ as a moral opiate has well nigh subdued the spirit and power of the gospel as seen and appreciated by men both religious and irreligious. And when in a most wonderful manner social, civil and moral forces are shaping for the great day of God Almighty, to do his bidding, to prepare the way for the advent and coming reign of Christ and his bride for a thousand years, with its men of Edenic glory and lovliness; the so-called church (I will not limit it to the nominal) take no more interest in the same than the world, and if forsooth they do it is more on the line of opposition to than otherwise, raising the cry, fanatics, prophetic creaks, soul sleepers, etc.

My greatest struggle in the conflict of truth and error was relative to the relation of life and death to the first Adam and scarce less in relation to the second. When life and death as related to the two are divinely seen from a divine standpoint, the doctrine of man's natural immortality stands out as a moral monstrosity that only needs to be seen to be abhorred. It is subversive of Christ as the Life Giver. It reduces the second coming of Christ to a something beyond or outside the pale of Christian desire and looking for. It gives to the resurrection the stamp of a divine farce—as called for so far as saint and sinner are concerned in point of being during the ages to come. This is true in point of happiness or misery as well as existence.

It has required years on my part to break the many shackles of error by which I was manacled; under the dignified name orthodoxy I have labeled them all God's heterodoxy. When I first took my stand against sect and sectism, which was my first step, it closed many pulpits against me. When I entered the field of prophecy I became still more a rock of offence. But when I became the advocate of man's mortality outside of the gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord I have no more access to the pulpits of the land. The same is true of periodicals to which I have contributed more or less. Yet amid all this I hear the tender voice of the Master saying, But know the Lord hath set apart him that is godly for himself, giving hope for the future. Fearing I may appear too free as a stranger I close by saying, Yours in the word and divine life,

"Devouring Widows' Houses."

Does the passage relating to the devouring of widows' houses occur in Matthew as well as in Mark and Luke? In the recently revised English version it is relegated to the margin. The 23d chap. 14 verse has this marginal note, "Some authorities insert here or after verse 14, Woe unto you Scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, even while for a pretence ye make long prayers; therefore ye shall receive greater condemnation. See Mark xii. 40; Luke xx. 47."

I begin with a doubt whether it should be in or not. It is important for me to know for various reasons. These "woes" in Matthew xxiii. are contrasted with the beatitudes of chap. v. It therefore makes quite a difference whether there is one more here or one less. In the beatitudes there is, in number and order, the re-statement of the ten commandments by our Lord in a positive and not in a negative form. The first beatitude relates to afflicted, destitute people—les miserables—those who are humble and long for the spirit to a degree which makes them mendicants with the spirit, to the spirit, for the spirit. Their happiness is the possession of that power and principle which gives them eternal life, called the reign of the heavens.

In the first woe, the reign of the heavens is locked before men, and it is done by the proud, authoritative and those the opposite of realizing themselves poor and destitute of all things.

Now then shall we as certain MSS. do, insert the disputed passage here or not?

The second beatitude is, happy the meek for they will inherit the earth. This, in certain ways looks, like its opposite for the gaining of a home on earth through this display of the very converse of meekness is in point. There is, however, a woe to those who compass sea and land to make one proselyte which serves well as the opposite of the blessings of the meek. Which shall have the precedence? Evidently to judge from MS. authority the latter has the best right to come in here. The next "alas" seems certainly to be the third so that we cannot introduce both here.

Yet if we could keep it in some place in the list of "woes," Matthew would then have just fourteen occurrences of the word "alas" as the Apocalypse also has. If we leave this "alas" in, the number will be eight in this section.

The word for literary man or Scribe occurs in Matthew twenty-four times (i. e., twice twelve) if we leave this verse in. Elder occurs twelve times in Matthew, so also does teacher. This looks as if this verse should not be put out. Pharisee occurs thirty in Matthew, twelve in Mark, twenty-eight in Luke, twenty in John as the text now stands. Shall we take one out of Matthew's number and leave but twenty-nine? It does not seem natural.

Hypocrite is now fifteen times in Matthew. The removal of one would leave fourteen. There seems no choice here except that multiples of five generally outnumber those of seven. Prayer occurs three times in Matthew; to pray sixteen times. If this to pray is rejected, it leaves fifteen. Both seem to have reasons for them; the 3 times 5 equals 15, or the 4 times 4 equals 16.

The word house is twenty six times now in Matthew and a removal of one would make it twenty five, i. e. 5 times 5 equals 25, probably better than the other (twenty-six) as house is five times in John.

The Greek oikos, house, is ten times in Matthew and five in John.

The other words have too limited occurrences to make anything from them. We are at present unable to draw a definite conclusion.

Dear Ones of the Household:

The committee on Bible Lessons are anxious to know how the work already done has been received. Are the lessons being used? and in what localities? Has any one been blessed individually by their perusal? Has any one been brought to a clearer conception of the truth by means of these Lessons? We should be very happy to hear from the household in regard to the matter, and also from any learners who have been benefitted by them. Send replies to THE RESTITUTION.

A Sabbath in Nazareth.

We have been riding in sight of Mt. Carmel all day, but on turning from Endor, faced Tabor's smooth dome. We passed by Tabor, across the lower end of the valley of Esdraelon, and up the slope of the hill to Nazareth. We entered the town just as evening was falling, the most peaceful hour of the day. The plain which we had just left stretched out like a green carpet behind us. The rocky way bloomed on every side with wild flowers of every hue, in front the town nestled in a basin surrounded by hills, the white houses peeping out from cypress and palm, and Tabor, simple and majestic, guarding over all. Riding into camp, we passed the well, the only well in the town, and there saw crowds of women and girls carrying jars of water on their heads.

Next morning I thought to have a quiet morning by myself, and seated myself at my door looking out to the hills of Tabor. But charming as the scene was, I soon abandoned the post. The continued bray of the mules, the clatter of the muleteers and the pressing curiosity of the natives made it too noisy to be borne. I joined some of our party in a walk through the town, in the course of which we were shown numerous so-called "sacred spots," in which some implicitly believed, and others denounced as all rubbish. The site of the synagogue, of Joseph's workshop, and other places may not be correctly fixed, but the site of the town is correct, and it was enough to know and feel, that there, in that peaceful spot, shut in by the hills from the world, Christ lived for nearly thirty years, that there he prepared for his work which was to come.

Like all other Oriental towns, it appears more picturesque from the outside than on a closer acquaintance. The streets are narrow but not covered; the sun beat into them fiercely, and made the white-washed walls almost blinding.

Unlike most towns in that country, the streets are paved, the middle part being sunk about a foot lower than the rest, and used as a drain for all refuse from the houses and shops.

The inhabitants of Nazareth are handsome people, especially the women, but are very bold. They took hold of our clothes as we walked past, followed us about and examined our apparel minutely. Our guide advised us to take no notice of it, as they were very quarrelsome when opposed. They seemed to have no idea what manner of place they lived in; the only person we saw in Nazareth who seemed to realize its sacred character was an old Carmelite monk, who showed us what he believed had been Mary's kitchen.

And such is Nazareth at the present day. The people are as careless and ignorant as they were when the Savior walked among them, and the appearance of the country is the same too, that, at least, expresses peace and beauty.—Marguerite Scoble, in Our Work.

As we understand it, a Sewing Machine for family use should be simple in its mechanism; should run easily, do a wide range of work, be as noiseless as possible, handsome, durable, and as cheap as is consistent with excellence throughout.—THE NEW HOME Sewing Machine fills all these conditions to perfection.

The time card of the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago R. R. has been changed since the outside pages of our paper were printed. The only important change is in the fast train going west which is changed from 2:46 p. m. to 1:38 p. m. Corrected card next week.

Poetry

FATHER, DRAW NEAR.

Father, draw near;
And clasp us close with thy protecting arm,
While round us roar swift water floods,
And thunder-bursts of vague alarm.

Father, draw near;
And us defend, for night draws on apace,
And with the night, the wily foe
Would us o'ercome but for thy saving grace.

Father, draw near;
For thine own Son will soon to earth descend,
And we would then with song go forth,
All clean and white to meet our Savior friend.

Father, draw near;
Oh cleanse, and sift and wash us from our sin,
Bend low thine ear and hear our voice,
That cleansed we thy courts may enter in.

"THE WORLD'S CRISIS." No. 1.

In its issue of Feb. 6th, current year, the editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass., speaks very complimentary of Rev. H. Grattan Guinness' "learning, earnestness and eloquence." But he was very much surprised when Mr. Guinness said: "All prophecy of the Scriptures in the next age will be taught in the common schools, and will be as well understood by the children as geography and astronomy." Of this statement the editor remarks: "So are the greatest minds led astray when they take as a key to prophetical exegesis that modern hallucination, the age to come."

I have titled this article, "The World's Crisis," not as referring to the Boston paper, but as relating to the critical period or epoch of the world.

Your correspondent heartily concurs in, and responds amen to, what Mr. Guinness said, for he sincerely believes that in the age to come all will be taught of the Lord, and that then the billions who perish in sin, will have offered for their acceptance a destiny compared with which Adam's presin existence was but as tinsel to purest gold.

The Boston Crisis teaches that the world's great crisis is now upon it. I avouch that though this dogma is taught by many adventists as well as "orthodoxists" generally, it is nowhere taught in the Scriptures.

It is true that as far back as the time of Christ's ministry on the earth, there was existing a crisis of the world. The word crisis is of such vital importance in this connection that it deserves special consideration. At John xii. 31 the C. V. reads: "Now is the judgment of this world; now shall the prince of this world be cast out."

This passage has been confessedly obscure. While I am not at all ambitious of solving intricate problems for the sake of offering a solution, I will suggest that it seems the only natural construction is to say that the "judgment referred to had reference only to those who now come to Christ, and these are such as are drawn by the Father. Out of this class Satan is cast out, for they are "made free from the law of sin and death."

Another suggestion is offered with reference to John xii. 31. The word rendered "judgment" is krisis in the original. Our English "crisis" is derived directly from the Greek krisis, differing only in the first letter. It would have been well had the translators anglicized krisis as they did baptize; then the reader could have construed "crisis" as he thought Scriptural harmony indicated.

As to the definition of krisis, I have no classical lexicon at hand, but I quote from that eminent authority, Dr. Edward Robinson. Defining krisis he says: Literally, separation; tropically division; decision; i. e., the decisive moment, crisis, turn of affairs. In N. T., judgment, under various aspects.

I am not now arguing against the utter impropriety of the C. V.'s rendering of krisis at John xii. 31, for I readily admit that the crisis or separation is based on judgment or critical consideration.

I do propose to place a literal construction on the word in the text, because it certainly seems that Jesus spake literally, with no semblance of figurative allusion. It is a safe rule that directs to use the literal definition in literal passages, and the figurative only in figurative passages.

Relying on the authority of the orthodox Robinson, I suggest that the word krisis in the text be either anglicized or rendered "separation."

But still further as to this text that the C. V. renders, "Now is the judgment of this world; the translators have done violence to the original, for the Greek has no article with krisis, and there is no previous occurrence of the word in the context to render it definite. Literally and idiomatically translated the passage would read, "Now is a crisis (or separation) of this world."

Observe the effect of the krisis spoken of at John xii. 31; at chap. xv. 19, Jesus said to his followers: "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. The consequence of the krisis referred to at chap. xii. 31 is indicated at xv. 19, "ye are not of the world," having been previously chosen and separated or crisised.

The references in the word to the separate and distinct conditions existing between believers and unbelievers are so numerous and plain, I need not quote them.

"Now is a crisis (or separation) of this world." This crisis was on the world when Jesus was on the earth; it is on it still. The separation is going on day by day and is exemplified whenever the Father draws an individual to his Son. But it is simply a crisis, a separation, and exercises its blessed effects on a comparative few; the world at large has no positive, direct, individual interest in it; its relation to the world is simply negative; the crisis is not separating the world from God's elect, but is separating God's elect from the world. "I have chosen you out of the world."

The Crisis of Boston condemns Mr. Guinness' statement refers to the age to come. The reason of this condemnation is that Bro. Stockman thinks the world's great crisis, its the crisis, is even now upon it.

Let us consider another separation that is to be indeed the crisis of the world. At John v. 28, 29, Jesus said, speaking of the resurrection, "Marvel not at this, for the (an) hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." C. V.

Here we have another crisis or separation, for the word rendered "damnation" is krisis in the original. In this text the revision has "judgment" instead of "damnation."

If the reader believes in a literal resurrection, he must use a literal definition. Thus rendered the passage would read: "And they that have done evil unto a resurrection of separation," (or a crisis).

I readily admit that in this passage, the article does not occur with krisis to make it definite or of the highest importance. The definite, important character results from the numbers to be affected.

Thus far I have adduced from the Scriptures two crises; one is anteresurrectional, mentioned by the Lord himself in the first century of the Christian era as being on the world at that time. The other is post-resurrectional and was foretold by the same Lord Jesus. Between these two crises, there is a line of demarcation as black as death, as deep as the grave. One involves only the "little flock;" the other, the remainder of the race.

It is proposed in the next paper to consider the crisis of the word, John v. 29, as faithfully, fairly, and critically as the writer can compass it.

A NEW CHURCH ORGANIZED IN LOUISIANA.

Dear Restitution:

It is now a little over one year since we removed to Happy Woods, La., some two miles west of Hammond, (which is our Post Office), and is located fifty-two miles north of New Orleans, on the Illinois Central R. R., with a lovely climate, and everlasting verdure, which is appreciated by those accustomed to the frozen regions of the north.

Since arriving here, I have not been idle in the Lord's vineyard, but have endeavored to the best of my ability to publish the glad tidings of the kingdom. Others of like precious faith have also removed to our neighborhood. And two weeks ago we affected an organization under the rules of our General Conference, myself being chosen Elder, and Bro. Chas. Thayer, Deacon. I am now preaching to the people every Sunday with good attention and interest, the seed sown is already finding lodgment in some hearts.

This I believe is the first organization of the "Church of God," in Louisiana, and may the Lord bless our efforts to extend the work.

This is practically a field of labor for o General Conference, there being few if any churches of the precious faith in the entire south. I do believe a great work can be effected in the south in getting out many precious souls for the name of the Lord; and if it is ever done the General Conference must take the lead in it, that organization may be formed, and then the work may in a great measure be transferred to them.

Our work just started in the southern part of Louisiana, must of necessity be under the care and direction of the General Conference, there being no other church or conference that we can attach to. Our church will work, and do all we can, but we must appeal to the officers of our General Conference to take the work under their consideration, and we sincerely hope the appeal will be not in vain.

Oh, brethren, may we truly realize the responsibility that is upon us. I don't believe the gospel of the kingdom has ever been sounded abroad in the grand old State of Louisiana, a field white for the harvest, and no laborers, think of it, will you suffer it to be so? Your brother in the One Faith.

Wm. H. Wilson.

AN ARAB CARPENTER FROM NAZARETH.

I heard in the Congress Hall, the hive of the Salvation Army at Clapton, an Arab relate an "experience," that may stand for that of many whose voices never reach a Christian ear.

By the way, that same Congress Hall is a fair specimen of the utilizing of chances for good practiced by General Booth, the most impracticably practical man in the kingdom. An orphanage, built for the centuries—as everything seems to be here: stone everywhere—had been in the market for some time; so, of course, he bought it for a low figure. It is built round a court, which was the children's playground. What does the general do but buy the place, put his Training Home and offices into the rooms, roof over the court with glass, and seat the place like an amphitheatre; as many as five thousand people being thus brought within reach of a good voice.

It was on that platform that I heard Geris Hanna Heshloy, the converted Arab. His dress was simple and picturesque; pants and shoes, made necessary by this climate, a scant, blue skirt, a scarlet jersey, and a skull-cap of dull red with a large, black cord wound about it, and a variegated [illegible]tain hanging out over the [illegible] shoulders, and slightly shading [illegible] deep, magnetic eyes that shown in the darkness of his face like lights in a gloo. His words were as vital and incisive as the gesture that flashed about his lithe, wiry frame while he spoke, making him appear like a bundle of nerves born of the fervid sun of a tropical land.

He told us of his boyish aspirations "to leave the wrong and do the right;" and when he grew to manhood a sense of "belonging to some one to whom he was strange." As he threw a brilliant light upon these longings of the human soul, that are as universal as the intuitions, I could fancy the boy of Nazareth, an uncouth little Arab, going off alone, amid the scenes that had once met the young eyes of him who is our Redeemer and Lord, studying problems over which philosophers have grown grey, groping after light, like a plant in a dark place, his soul touched by the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

He described his wanderings in search of the way to "cease the wrong and do the right;" his going to Jerusalem, where he was bewildered to find that they had three Sabbaths. He threw off with a few Rembrandt strokes a sketch of the pride of the Mohammedans' muezzin calling to prayer from the minaret as haughtily as if he expected all the world to fall at the feet of Mohammed; the Jew, with his zeal for Jehovah, looking for the redemption of Israel, and its national supremacy through the long-waited-for Messiah; the Roman Christian in his worship of the Virgin. He brought out with a touch, a burial scene, in which, when he saw the dead man laid in the sepulchre, all his longings came back seeking to know what would be after death, and how to prepare for the inevitable doom.

"Ah," he said, "I was like the man who ploughs in Palestine; with one hand he holds the plough, and the other he grasps the goad, with a nail in its point. With the nail he pierces the ox and makes him go this way or that. So I was held, all those sorrowful days, to think of nothing else but the badness of my heart, my conscience pricking me like a goad. Woe unto myself, it is as when I am lost in the desert and find no water. I put bullets in my mouth, they make the saliva come, but they do not give me drink. I forget for a minute the pain, but that is all the worse afterwards. I said, 'If Mohammed is right, I will fall at his feet; if the Jew is right I will look for his Messiah; if the Roman kisses the Virgin once, I will kiss her twice, but I will find the way to him to whom I belong, but to whom I am strange.'"

Failing to find peace in Jerusalem, he went to Egypt, and wandered in the wilderness, along the banks of the Nile, till in his anguish of spirit he lost his way and came near perishing. His pitiable struggles of soul remind one of Longfellow's hero:—

> "I see, but cannot reach the height
> That lies forever in the light,
> And yet, forever, and forever,
> When seeming just within my grasp,
> I feel my feverish hands unclasp,
> And sink discouraged into night."

At Port Said, on his way back to Palestine, he heard the drum-beat of the Salvation army, and his soul bounded toward them to see if they could not lead him to the One whom he sought. When the captain of the band opened his lips to speak the first words he uttered were "Jesus Christ." "Ah!" cried the Arab, with a wild gesture of joy, "when that name touched my ear I knew it was he whom I had wandered so far to seek. I found him! I found him!"

A thousand "Amens" attested the joy of other hearts, upon whom the light of the same blessed Lord had broken, after a weary night of agonized groping, in Europe, or Asia, England or America.

The Arab went on to tell of the instruction he received in the way of life, and his efforts to get "all of himself" over on Christ's side. He said he was like the Jews, who had their faces set toward Palestine, and yet who were in the wilderness. The Red Sea and the desert were between them. They could look over into the Promised Land, but they had not yet crossed the Jordan.

Then he described in a few vivid sentences, how Christ came to him, when he was, like Isaac, all at the altar, and helped him into the Canaan of perfect love.

While I listened to the Nazareth carpenter depicting the struggles of a human soul to find rest in God, which are the same in all lands and ages, I wondered if there were not now many like him wandering among the tombs of the old Oriental faiths, gnashing and cutting themselves with the ugly effects of sin and retribution, groping after that divine, holy light that is [illegible] to shine on all races. [illegible] heart cried to God that he would send somebody, regular church brigades, Salvation Army, China Inland self-supporters—God bless them all!—somebody to rescue those perishing millions from their dungeons of death.—The Christian Witness.

OVER THE SEA.

It is about forty miles from Jaffa to Jerusalem. It takes all day, and is a hard ride. You can go in carriages or on horseback. Whichever way you go, you will wish you had gone the other way, though my preference would be for the saddle. But the reason for preferring the saddle may be that I went the other way. There were nine of us, as follows: Mansfield, Bates, Knox, two Odells, Dearborn, Stratton, Fowler, Gill. We had two carriages, each having three double seats. Our nine, with two drivers and one servant, making twelve in all, just filled the six seats. For motive power we had three rather poor horses (abreast), and a whip to each carriage. One horse gave out before we reached Jerusalem, and then two had to do the work of three, and it necessarily took more whip. Mr. Floyd rode his own splendid chestnut pony, and had no trouble in keeping up, riding from one carriage to the other, pointing out the objects of interest. The road is good from Jaffa to Jerusalem, some of the way exceptionally fine. There are other roads in process of building, but this is the only carriage road in Palestine of any length that is complete, and this is being constantly changed and improved. When you see the way they work on the road, you do not wonder there are as yet only a few. The poor natives are compelled by the Turkish government to give their services in constructing these roads. Their tools are a short-handled, wide-bladed hoe, and a small basket, holding less than a half-bushel. With these they fill valleys and cut down the hills. It is an exceedingly slow process. Men, boys and girls are employed in this work. The ways are covered with broken stones, and when thoroughly imbedded in the soil, they make first rate roads. They are wide, smooth and well kept.

There are two routes: one direct, through Ramleh leaving Lydda to the left; the other passes through Lydda. We took the direct route, which has been the great thoroughfare to Jerusalem in all ages. For a while after leaving Jaffa, we pass through orange, lemon, pomegranate and other fruit gardens. We pass, not far from the city, what is called the tomb of Dorcas, but it is worthy of only small attention. We soon come out on to the plain of Sharon, which we cross from east to west. This is one of the few plains of the Holy Land. It extends northward to Cæsarea, and westward to the Judean Hills. It is beautiful and fertile, and is capable of producing vastly more than the natives, with their limited resources in muscle, brain and money, are able to get out of it. We crossed it in October, the dry season. In the spring it is covered with waving grain and brilliant flowers. For Scripture references to Sharon, see 1 Chron. xxvii. 29; Isa. xxxiii. 9; xxxv. 1, 2; xl. 10; Sol. Song ii. 1. The first place of any size passed in our journey is Ramleh, though there are a few native villages, which might possibly correspond to Scriptural places. Ramleh is not certainly identified as a Bible site. It has been a town of considerable importance for ten or twelve centuries. It is on the caravan route from Egypt to Damascus, as well as on the line from Jaffa to Jerusalem. It was of considerable importance during the time of the Crusaders, and was once the headquarters of Napoleon. It had a dry, sandy appearance; but they say it is beautiful in the spring. The most interesting thing here is the tower. Nobody knows who built it, nor when. It was once beautiful, but now seems to be crumbling to pieces. We ascend the tower by 120 steps, and obtain a view from the top which is extensive and beautiful. The whole plain of Sharon is visible, from Gaza on the south, to Cæsarea on the north.

Leaving Ramleh we pass between fertile fields, and leave behind native villages, till about midday we arrive at Latrun, where we take our lunch. The only point of special interest passed, is the Valley of Ajalon, where Joshua fought with the Amorites and said, "Sun, stand thou still upon Gideon, and thou, moon, in the Valley of Ajalon. And the sun stood still, and the moon stayed until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies." The two Beth Horons are pointed out over to the left.

Latrun, where we lunched, is said to be the native place of the penitent thief, but one need not believe it unless he wants to. There was a large collection of people at Latrun at the time of our visit, for the reason that a Russian prince was passing, with a considerable retinue, from Jaffa to Jerusalem. The Turkish government did its best to afford a suitable escort. They reached Latrun about the same time we arrived. Their muleteers had a big row, which ended in a knockdown. During the melee, the prince and his party rode on alone. Our lunch was eaten in the second story of a large stone building, which was built for a Khan, with some modern appliances. We carried our own food.

It is about one hour's ride from Latrun to the foot of the mountains. As we rise, step by step over the surrounding plain, our view of the surrounding country becomes broader and grander. In plain sight are the sea, Jaffa, Ramleh, the Plain of Sharon, and the sandhills of the coast. We pass Kirjah Jearim, where the ark rested in the house of Abinadab; we obtain a good view of Mizpah; we cross the brook where David found the stone that killed Goliah; a place supposed to be Emmaus is seen. It was dark when we climbed the last hill. In the daytime, the Holy City, Olivet, and the many points around may be seen. To us there is only the glimmering of many lights; but the imagination pictures the scene, and the heart trembles with peculiar emotion as we realize that we are near the capital of the Holy Nation, the place where Christ was crucified and buried, the place from which he ascended to heaven, and where the Holy Ghost came down.

We arrived at 8 p. m., and put up at the Hotel Fell, just outside the Jaffa Gate.

RESURRECTION.

It is one of the numerous indications of coming apostasy that so many in evangelical churches deny the resurrection. If any one doubts this, let him set on foot an inquiry in any congregation he may select, and he will soon be convinced of the truth of the statement. He will find that unbelief as to the rising of the body from the grave is widespread, and that the doctrine and the facts are discarded and rejected, sneered at and scouted, as impossible on scientific grounds. It will be in vain to bring to bear upon these unbelievers the authority of Scripture, for such persons, some of them in high official position in the church, will set aside the testimony of the Bible with the cool contempt of arrogant infidelity.

This form of infidelity is as old as the days of the apostles, and more than eighteen hundred years ago the Holy Ghost met it by showing the tremendous consequences of denying the truth.

First, it the dead rise not, then is Christ not risen, for in the nature of the case the two resurrections stand or fall together. Second, preaching is vain, for there can be no preaching of the gospel that does not involve the resurrection of the dead. Third, faith is vain, for if there is no resurrection, there is nothing upon which faith can rest. Fourth, the apostles are found false witnesses, for the resurrection was the centre and circumference, the sum and substance, of their testimony. Fifth, we are yet in our sins, for the resurrection is the only proof we have that the great sacrifice for sin has been accepted. Sixth, our beloved ones who have fallen asleep in Christ are perished, and "Everlasting despair" may be inscribed on the tomb. Seventh, we are of all men most miserable, for we have lost the world, and all hope of the future is torn from our grasp, as we drift upon a dark and stormy sea without one star in the sky.

"But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept," triumphantly writes the Spirit of God, 1 Cor. xv. 12–20. The man who denies the resurrection is therefore a madman. It has already taken place. If we were to see the head come forth from the grave, we should know that the body must follow; and as Christ, the head, has surely risen, the church, his body, shall surely rise with him. Away, then, with your scientific objections and nonsense! Bring God upon the scene, and your difficulties vanish into offensive smoke. "Some men will say, how are the dead raised up?" The only answer the Holy Ghost deigns is, "Thou fool."

Mark it well: the same body that dies, that decomposes, that is burned, that crumbles into dust, that is taken up into vegetable matter, as the scientists tell us, that is sunk to the depth of the ocean, that mingles with the dust of ten thousand other moulded bodies, that is scattered upon the winds, arises. "Many bodies of the saints which slept, arose, and came out the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many," Matt. xxvii. 52, 53. "The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth," John v. 28. "Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again," not some other body but, "Thy brother." "Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live," John xi. 23, 25. "If the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his spirit that dwelleth in you," Rom. viii. 11. "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself," Phil. iii. 21.

A martial resurrection. "Every man in his own order [band, cohort, company, brigade, division], Christ the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout . . . . the dead in Christ shall rise first;" then the living, changed in a moment, shall be caught up in clouds together with them; but it will be in military array. Some regiments will be in advance of others. Some will be placed over ten cities, and others over five. Some will receive a reward, and others will be saved, yet so as by fire. The place assigned us in the magnificent procession that will sweep before the gaze of myriads of admiring angels, will be according to our fidelity; and may God help us to remember it every day. It is a glorious resurrection. "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory. So is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power." It is needless to say that there can be no resurrection until Jesus comes, and it is this that makes some of us long for his coming with exceeding desire, for not until then shall we see in the body the precious ones who have been torn from our arms by the ruffian hand of death. But he is coming; "and when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father," Matt. xiii. 43. It is a triumphant resurrection. "Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ," 1 Cor. xv. 54. Christ came that "He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage," Heb. ii. 14. The whole creation, smitten with the curse, is groaning and travailing in pain, and "even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, the redemption of our body," Rom. viii. 23. If there is no resurrection, Christ is defeated for ever and ever; and it is amazing that any Christian can so become the dupe of the devil as to doubt that he will rise from the dead.—James H. Brookes, D. D.

Wide Awake for March has several features appropriate to the Inauguration month. a charming adventure story, "How Nat Saw the Inauguration," relating to what befell a little fellow who walked into town from Alexandria to see President Cleveland take the oath of office four years ago; a reminiscence of the Harrison campaign of 1840, and a pretty little tale about Mrs. Harrison when she was a school-girl—these last two are in the department of "Men and Things." Daudet's pathetic Alsace-Lorraine story, "The Last Day at School," has been translated for this number by Mary Ferguson. There is an amusing Western story, "How Bess was Kidnaped," by Theadora Jenness, and a good outdoor story, "The Coon Hunt in Wheeler's Woods," by Rowland E. Robinson. Margaret Sidney's little Peppers are having a jolly time back at the "little brown house," while Mrs. Sallie Joy White, in another part of the magazine, tells "How the Blind Kindergarteners Read Five Little Peppers," the Pepper serial published several years ago. Mr. Trowbridge's "two Davids" are getting tastes of country and city life, each in a way hardly counted upon. Mrs White, in her cooking paper, tells how the Boston Public School children are taught to boil cabbage "without smell" in the school-kitchens. Professor Starr writes about "Some Odd Fish" in his geological talks, and Prof. Mason describes the flying proa Queen Kapiolani sent to President Cleveland. There is a delightful article on "The Skylark," by Mrs. F. A. Humphrey; also a richly illustrated paper about "Pets in Literary Life," by Eleanor Lewis. The poems of the number are charming: "March Bugles," by Mrs. Whiton-Stone; "In a Glass House," by Agnes M. Lewis; "Capt. Carnes' Profitable Pepper," by John Albee, and others by M. E. B. and Clinton Scollard.

The department "Men and Things" is very full and rich in anecdotes and pithy talks. Wide Awake is $2.40 per year. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston.

Quick Time to the West.

Under a new schedule in effect Sunday, March 17th, Fast Line, train No. 1, of the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne and Chicago Railway, arrives in Chicago at 5:00 p. m., Central time, connecting with the fast express trains recently placed in service by the Western roads and which arrive at Kansas City, Council Bluffs, Omaha, Minneapolis and St. Paul early the next morning. Persons going West should apply for full information to J. E. Hanes, Agent, Plymouth, Ind. 2tmch20

To the Readers of "The Restitution."

On and after the first Sunday in May I shall be at liberty (D. V.) to preach for any churches who may need my services. I have been pastor of this church nearly seven years, and the work has not been unfruitful. I thank this people for their kindness. Any who may desire my help for a Sunday or two, or more, on or after the above date, will please address me at 833 Lafayette Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

George R. Kramer.

LAST CHANCE.

MAGRUDER'S REPLY to INGERSOLL.

Please notice that we have secured the last few copies of Bro. Magruder's reply to R. G. Ingersoll that can be had. The edition is exhausted when these (8 in number) are gone, and will not likely ever be printed again. These are bound in cloth, and the Publisher's price was $1.00. We offer them at 75cts. each, post paid. Remember this is the Last Chance you will have to get a copy of this work, and those wishing one should send at once in order to secure it. We have turned away several orders in the last year, and this supply will not last long.

Poetry.

THE SEER.

I hear the stately tramp of many feet,
The nations moving down the track of time;
Gay banners flaunting, bugles blowing sweet,
And drum-beats measuring the march sublime.

I see where nations, fallen from the ranks,
Lie frozen corses—life forever fled:
And know iniquity, intrenched in law,
Lies in their pulseless bosoms cold and dead.

I see the Judean Christ crowned King of kings;
See earthly sceptres yielded to his own;
See jeweled crowns laid humbly at his feet,
And kings with bared brows kneel before his throne.

I see far out upon the vast plateaus
Of future aeons, hosts of every tongue;
I hear them chanting in that high, clear air,
The "Gloria in Excelsis" sweet and strong.

AN INTERESTING EXCURSION.

Dear Restitution:

I have just returned from a very interesting trip to the West and South, and I thought a short account of the same might be of interest to your readers.

In pursuance to a call to attend a meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Conference I started for Chicago on the night of February 8th, accompanied by my wife, arriving on Sunday morning, and at once proceeded to the suburban town of Austin, the home of my mother and elder brother. It had been arranged that I should speak at the meeting of the brethren that morning, so we proceeded at once to the meeting place, a new and very comfortable hall that had just been engaged by the Austin church for their regular meeting place. Bro. Chaplin has given an account of these meetings so I will not repeat. It was with feelings of great pleasure that I met after two years absence many relatives and old friends, and among them other visiting brethren, notably Bro. Chaplin and Bro. Eychaner who had also came to attend the Committee meeting. I trust that the new impetus that has been given the Austin church may be fruitful in adding to the members and developing that spiritual life which is the sure index of our divine relationship.

On Monday, the Executive Committee held its meeting, which has been fully reported by the Secretary. Business of importance was transacted, and all felt encouraged at the prospects of unity and growth that were everywhere indicated, resulting from the General Conference at Philadelphia. Some people are likely to become impatient if responses do not come in ratio equal to their own enthusiastic natures, forgetting that all people are not constituted alike, and that all have not had their minds educated up to the same points of observation. This work of organizing disintegrated elements, and infusing life and enthusiasm into them will have to be very much after the fashion of Ezekiel's valley of dry bones. It must be a building up process at first, and then the enlivening work will begin—but the building up must be by that which every joint supplieth. We cannot have a healthy growth if we depend for our strength financially or intellectually upon any one, or few individuals.

Wife and I had a very interesting visit at the home of Bro. and Sister H. V. Reed, and were favored with the perusal of one of the chapters in Sister Reed's proposed new work relating to Hindu Deities and Literature. The portion of the work that we read was written in the author's well known lucid and vigorous style, and presented the facts regarding the reputed life of Crishna with citations of authorities that could not but carry conviction with them. I predict for the work when completed an extensive sale.

Before going west it had been arranged to take a trip to the "sunny south," and accordingly, accompanied by my brother Thomas and cousin James W. Wilson we started on Tuesday night for Louisiana. The night of departure was bitterly cold, but the next morning on stepping out of our Pullman car at Cairo for breakfast we found the temperature fully eighty degrees higher, and going through Kentucky and Tennessee the air was balmy, and the farther south we went the nearer we came to spring.

We arrived at our first objective point, Arcola, La. before daylight in the morning; and were welcomed at our room in the hotel by a great cheerful fire of fat pine logs in the large fireplace. The rising sun revealed a very pleasant environment—a large southern mansion embowered in a grove of live oaks and water oaks, surrounded by the primeval forest of great long leaf pines, the air redolent with the balsam, nature just bursting into the resurrection life of Springtime, and the sweet notes of the mocking bird and meadow lark striking melodeously upon the ear. It was hard to realize that in a short time we had passed from zero temperature against whose attacks the protecting care of great-coats and furs were essential.

Adjoining Arcola is Roseland, a colony of northern people, now in its pioneer stage, and founded through the instrumentality of the Farm, Field and Stockman of which Bro. J. W. Wilson is one of the proprietors. A ride over the colony grounds was very interesting. The greater part of the tract is covered with massive pines, and on every side the woodman's axe was heard, as the representatives of upwards of forty families who have settled here were preparing the way for their future gardens and homes. The colonists were generally camped out in temporary quarters waiting for the lumber to be sawed from which their permanent homes were to be constructed. We talked with many of them, and found them to be a very intelligent energetic body of men and women who will undoubtedly very soon transform the face of nature from a forest picture to one of prosperous home-life. Generally their purpose is to engage in the production of strawberries and vegetables for the northern market. The soil, judging from illustrations that we saw, is peculiarly adapted to such purposes, and the early date for harvesting the crop, and ready railway facilities all argue that the business will be profitable. The colonists all appeared to be pleased with the change from the frigid regions of the north; and with the genial clime, fertile soil, allowing a succession of crops, pure water and pure atmosphere the outward conditions to make life enjoyable are abundant.

From Roseland we went to Hammond about 18 miles farther south, near which place my brother W. H. Wilson resides, together with several other brethren formerly residents of Chicago, viz.: Bro's. St. Clair, Eivy and Thayer with their families. Here we found a very similar country except that the land was flat. My brother and his family have lived there for two winters and one summer, and were enthusiastic in their praises of the country, and it gave me great pleasure to find them comfortably and happily situated, and in the enjoyment of perfect health which was the main object of removal to the South. I was quite surprised at the statements of all that they did not suffer as much from the heat in summer as they had in the north, and in fact that the highest temperature registered was below that of Chicago. They stated that it is always cool in the shade, and that a case of sun-stroke is unknown in the country; while the nights are invariably cool.

We were at "Happy Woods" as the locality is termed, over Sunday, and in the morning the brethren gathered at the residence of Bro. W. H. Wilson, where Bro. Thomas Wilson conducted the meeting and administered the Lord's Supper. This was their first meeting, and the first of our people in Louisiana. Steps were taken at this meeting for organization, and regular weekly meetings. In the afternoon a public meeting was held in Bro. St. Clair's parlors, which was attended generally by the neighbors, and at which the writer preached the word. May the blessing of God attend his word, and may the gathering of his people in "Happy Woods" be a nucleus from which will radiate the light of truth in darkness of the South-land.

From Hammond we proceeded to New Orleans and immediately took the train on the Southern Pacific R. R. for St. Martinsville. On this trip, which was of a business character we were accompanied by a number of farmers and stockmen from the various sections of the North. Our coming had been expected, and we were received by the residents with the most effusive hospitality, the Mayor and prominent citizens meeting us at the station, and during our stay doing their utmost to make our visit enjoyable, and memorable.

St. Martinsville is an old Spanish settlement, and subsequently occupied by the French. Before the war a centre of considerable commerce in sugar and cotton. It is located on the bayou, or river Teche, a narrow, deep and sluggish stream that winds its way through the rich alluvial bottom lands of the region, with its banks fringed with massive live oaks and cypress, and at various points presenting a most pleasing and picturesque panorama. We took a long horse-back ride through the country, visiting plantations and sugar mills, and gathering stores of information regarding the country and its resources and productions. In the gardens we plucked ripe oranges and Japanese plums, saw vegetables growing in the open air on the 19th of February, ready for the market, pulled one turnip, only partly grown, weighing 6¼ pounds; were presented with roses, camelias, violets and other flowers grown in the open air. We were regaled with stories of wonderful vegetation that were almost fabulous, but all of which appeared to be well authenticated, for instance:—Irish potatoes weighing seven pounds, sweet potatoes yielding 5150 barrels to the acre after raising a crop of Irish potatoes from the same ground; turnips yielding 1000 bushels to the acre without any fertilizer, and with another crop from the same soil; radishes 18 inches long and 9 in circumference and tender throughout; corn planted in rows six feet apart yielding 50 barrels to the acre; tomato vines nineteen feet in length with fruit the entire length, bearing almost continually throughout the year; watermelons yielding two crops in one year by cutting the vines back after the first crop, etc. The country is certainly one of the richest agricultural regions that I have ever seen with an apparently inexhaustible alluvial soil; and is well worthy the description given by Longfellow in his poem of Evangeline, speaking of this locality of our visit:—

"Beautiful is the land with its prairies and forests of fruit trees;
Under the feet a garden of flowers, and the bluest of heavens
Bending above, and resting its dome on the walls of the forest.
They who live there have named it the garden of Louisiana."

The land is a sacrifice to the system of slavery. On every side are evidences of former prosperity of antebellum days. The system of immense plantations worked by colonists of negroes brought great wealth to the few white proprietors, but with the scattering of the slaves, and the indolence of the new generation, and lack of enterprise of the whites, fields of grass-grown that formerly were burdened with harvests. The only hope for a revival of the region is immigration from the north; and this the natives most earnestly desire, and there is no doubt but in time the land will again blossom as the rose.

Coming west from New Orleans we skirt the borders of immense cypress swamps, and at this season of the year I know of no other sight that is more attractive to the northern visitor. The ground is a mat of green palmettos, and a tangle of vines, and over-head the stately cypress trees tower, forming a massive forest, with every bough and twig garlanded and festooned with waving masses of silvery Spanish moss, presenting a most weird and funereal aspect.

"Over our heads the towering and tenebrous boughs of the cypress
Met in a dusky arch, and trailing mosses in mid-air
Waved like banners that hang on the walls of ancient cathedrals."

I have already extended this letter beyond what I had intended, so will not speak further of a day spent in New Orleans, another at Roseland, and our return to Chicago, to be welcomed by a most "bitting and a frosty air," and most warm and earnest hearts of relatives and brethren.

We spent Sunday in Chicago and met with the church on Bishop Court. Bro. Reed was absent, but as I had been announced I preached the word, after which we had a short visit with Sister Reed, Bro. and Sister McDonald, Bro. and Sister Turney and our relatives, and with many good byes and God-bless-you's returned to our eastern home greatly refreshed and encouraged by our little vacation from the usual routine of business and home life.

Samuel Wilson.

The Church of God meet for worship and searching the Scriptures every Sunday at 3 o'clock, p. m. All interested in Bible study are cordially invited to meet with us at 444 Olive Avenue, San Diego, California.

The services of the "Church of the Second Advent," Montgomery Ave., west of Tenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa., are led each Sunday morning by the Pastor, Elder C. C. Ramsey, who also leads the services at the "Blessed Hope Mission," at Twelfth and Dickinsons Streets, each Sunday evening, the morning service being led by Elder Wm. B. Sivel.

Services will be held at the Church of the Blessed Hope, 490 Woodland Ave., Cleveland, Ohio, every Sunday at 10:30 a. m. and 7:00 p. m. Brethren from a distance and all lovers of truth are cordially invited. Seats free.

"The Gospel of Our Salvation and kindred doctrines—Is Life only through Christ—Resurrection of the dead—Second coming of Christ—The Kingdom of God, etc., will be faithfully preached every Sunday morning at 10:30 a. m., to which services we heartily invite the seeker after divine truth! This service will close at 11:30, after which the church will meet for conference, "breaking of bread and prayers." 119 Grand st., on first floor, Brooklyn, N. Y.

PHOTOGRAPHS.

A Cabinet size Photograph of Elder S. A. Chaplin, Editor of The Restitution, will be sent to any address on receipt of 25 cents at this office.

GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICE.

THE CHRISTIAN HYMNAL

The above is the title of a New Hymn Book just issued from The Restitution office, containing 156 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, printed on fine paper, from good clear type. Music on every page, followed by two to four sets of words that go to the music, making over 400 hymns. To this is added 23 pages of Hymns for Children to use in Sunday Schools or at home. We want some good brother or sister in every locality to take this work in hand and introduce it to the friends in your neighborhood. Will every minister of our faith please send us the name and address of some good, energetic worker in each congregation where he labors.

Price 35 cents each; 3 copies for $1.00; 6 copies for $2.00; 12 copies, $4 00. Special rates to congregations wishing larger quantities to place in churches, or to those who will act as agents and introduce the work in their neighborhoods.

UNPARALLELED OFFER.

Nothing Like It Offered to Our Friends Before.

In order to increase the circulation of The Restitution we will give to ministers or others who will act as agents:

1. Fifty cents for each new subscriber; you send us $1.50 and keep 50c. as commission.

2. To the person sending 500 new subscribers, besides the 50c. commission on each one, kept out when sending the name, a present will be made of $250.00 in cash.

3. To the person sending 300 new subscribers, besides the 50c. commission on each one, kept out when sending the name, a present will be made of $125 00 in cash.

4. To the person sending 150 new subscribers, besides the 50c. commission on each one, kept out when sending the name, a present will be made of $50.00 in cash.

5. To the person sending 50 new subscribers, besides the 50c. commission on each one, kept out when sending the name, a present will be made of $10.00 in cash.

In making up these lists this offer of presents holds good to June 1, 1889. Send names as soon as you take the subscription and say that you are working for one of these presents, a careful account will be kept of all you send in.

The 50c. commission you get anyway, no matter whether you secure a present or not.

These presents are not to those getting the number of subscribers first, but if one or ten persons secure 500 names each, they will each receive a bank draft for $250.00, and so with the smaller numbers.

We will furnish blanks and samples to those who apply for them.

FOUR NEW STATES.

South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana, Washington.

On February 22, 1889, the President signed the bill creating South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington states of the Union.

South Dakota.—The great Prairie State, to which the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three main lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown, and Sioux Falls. Go to South Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

North Dakota.—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat; whose healthful climate nurtures the most vigorous and brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states; the soil of whose fertile prairies is richer than the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Mouse and Devils Lake land districts invite the home seeker to secure a free home. Magnificent daily train service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devils Lake, Bottineau and all other important points.

Montana, the Golden.—Treasures in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 4,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile fields, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal, which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate, caused by warm winds from the Pacific. The St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only railroad passing through a continuous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountains. It runs through the Great Reservation of 18,000,000 acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wood, water and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls, with its 1,000,000 horse-power cataracts; immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free land; through Helena, the capital city and commercial centre of Montana, and Butte, the richest mining camp on earth, to San Francisco by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta Route, or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars, and free colonist sleepers of its own from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is also the shortest line to Butte.

Washington.—The country of tall timber, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers en route for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass through Port Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without change or delay. Distance to the Pacific Coast is same as by other lines, but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXVIII. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 27, 1889. NO. 12.

THE RESTITUTION

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

A WAYSIDE TALK.

I suppose it is specially best to write on some topics suggestively, and not dogmatically. Any thing that bears Scripturally and rationally on the critical event of a supernatural interposition in the course of affairs, must be interesting. I have seen it hinted that a translation of saints occurred more than eighteen hundred years ago, and that this was a removal to heaven, of first fruits. The argument in part at least, was this.

Paul said to the Romans, "for ourselves also which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for our adoption, to wit:, the redemption of our body." And so it is said they who received a first fruit gift of such rare, marked and distinctive kind, must have been a first fruit themselves. And does not James say—"of his own will he brought us forth by the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures." Therefore there was a first fruit translation in those days. But it seems to me that a formidable, if not fatal difficulty, in the way of this inference, is the great hiatus, or intervening space of more than eighteen centuries between a first fruit and harvest, which is quite at variance with any fair Scripture interpretation. The harvest should follow pretty soon, after first fruit. The law teaches so much by its symbolism. And still more,—what account would be taken of those who arose from their graves at our Lord's crucifixion. Who were they? Did they live on? Did they ascend to heaven? Were they a first fruit also? Is then, the firstfruit called up in sections, successive to each other? We could hardly find warrant, I think, for such a view. First fruit and harvest are in mutual proximity. They occur at the end of this age, and along with certain grand transactions seen and related in the Apocalypse. They are some way related to the great event of the fall of Babylon. The disclosure of a first fruit praising God on Mount Zion is not very far dis-synchronous, if I may use such a word, with still another affair of a very sinister nature, "the worship of the beast." The first fruit seems to be snatched away from the appalling perils of those times. To me therefore it seems fair to presume, that a first fruit of the apostolic times, have slept, for the simple instant of eighteen hundred years—(seeing that centuries are no more than instants to the dead, as they are also in the view of God). They will therefore come up with the living elect, and both classes complete the total number. They are "purchased out of the earth," and are "purchased from among men." It [illegible] I said I would speak suggestively, and so I have.

But I would like to say something more. Doctrines, thrillingly interesting though they are—yet have also and always included among them, the one intensely interesting subject of personal maturity and perfection in piety. This theme is always present. And if I am to name one distinguishing feature of what I might for the moment term a perfect grace, a foundation of all good—and a summation of all, I should say it was this, coming, looking, attending, aspiring, and rising to God —walking, living, breathing, thinking, hoping, dwelling, resting, acting, thriving and growing in God, accepting, exalting, seeking, confessing, desiring, obeying, and supremely preferring God. No matter what else may be canvassed. There may be a multitude of things that are good and desirable. But this of all, is foremost. The King of glory must act by us in the age to come, think in us, and will in us. This is the supreme thing. I am not to be my own, one iota apart from his complete jurisdiction, his glorious all-possession of me. I say again this is the supreme thing. I am then, to live to him daily now, daily and nightly, monthly, weekly, yearly and forever. I am to grow in conformableness and conformity to him. I find trials; I have tasted bitterness. But I am to learn the sweet of conquest through temptations, and over them. I must overcome, and overcome daily. And the grand and only secret of overcoming, is indefatigable, incessant, intrepid looking, coming, calling, repairing and appealing to him—even to God in Christ, the living universal good. O, shall we not see to this, that we secretly fix our aim, set our hope, and order our way, with this undivertible and determined mind? In an attitude like this, we shall by no means think we have nothing more to learn—no former ideas to recant or modify. We shall come into the heaven of the gentleness that is at the head of all things, and of the pity that is in the heart of him who hates no creature of his, and who is fully able to make the gift of Christ of inestimable blessing beyond all the calculations that have come down to us through heretic-killing Rome. We shall learn new and great things of the power and pre-destination of God, who made never one soul in vain. We shall learn something new of that "word of patience" which the Apocalyptic Philadelphia is keeping when Jesus coming like a thief, suddenly shines on his beloved, with capturing and captivating glory. Carefully now, let us re-read that promise. "Because thou didst keep the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of trial, that hour which is to come upon the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth." Scarcely will it do to conclude that this hour of trial is simply that which is common here and there, to individuals, for it is special, and seemingly appointed for a period fixed and determined among earthly times and human agencies, and appointed for all, in all the world, at one time, except such as are by this promise reserved.

Now our province is to be keepers of Christ's word, his word and gospel of forbearance, to exemplify it in our own lives. We are not to judge others falsely. We are to be careful about nursing a spirit of self-righteous good fortune, or superiority to others. We are to have a patience born of Christ and his word and his life, and borrowed from his great and illustrious example.

And we are to be in sympathy with him in his patience with men, and his pity for the ignorant, and even the vicious. In short the Man of men, the perfect and wonderful and lovable Divine man, is to impress on our hearts by a Spirit-stamp, indelible and enduring, and he is to be reproduced in us. We keep his word of patience because that word dwells in us.

A grace and blessing indeed, to be joined to him by our own choice, by growth, and by Divine election! These all agree and work together. And never was a chain more irrevocably thrown around a martyr's breast binding him to the stake, than our hearts should be joyfully bound to Christ [illegible] and for all, now and forever,—bound to him, subject to him, and true to him by our own will, and by Divine traction, and by blessed necessity. This is the ultimatum of things, and not the ultimatum only—but also the beginning of things now, and never-ending and glorious. Every thing is to be sacrificed to this grand conclusion, fame, fortune, possessions, and whatever else occasion demands.

The patience of Jesus! Who can calculate the sum of it? Is it exhaustible, is it transitory? Its function may end in some field, where its potency seems for the time ineffective, but it can not be ineffective in the end. Blest are they who see and feel and keep that patience now. Surely if exception from a great world trial can come to us, in the seventh trumpet epoch of prophetic times, happy are we. May it be so! Bound fast, and grown fast to Christ by choice, by election, by necessity. We can no otherwise than be with him. May it be so! If now, or ever hereafter he be invisible on earth, invisibly present, then happy will be the moment when he shall reveal himself to us, and speak the word, or give the glance ineffable, that shall be the beginning of heaven, and the beginning of a new life and a new age of immortality, and swift and fruitful work in his presence and in his service.

To the Church of God in Christ Jesus, Greeting.

"And as the people were in expectation, and all mused in their hearts of John whether he were the Christ, or not," Luke iii. 15.

In those days all men looked for a "Coming One." And he came; but they "knew him not." The fleshly mind had drawn pictures of fleshly glory which the "Man of sorrows" did not reflect. More than eighteen centuries have followed those that went before—some of them in sombre shade others in steeped in gore, and the present fitting up for some tremendous commotion which earth's wisest statesmen cannot define. The brightest genius of the age is spent in devising implements of war, and all men are now musing in their hearts when, and where this war will be witnessed and who will be the victor.

Only those who turn to the Divine Oracles may know what "the watchman saith of the night."

There we find it written who the victor shall be; even him who shall be crowned Lord of all. O that the church of the living God might arise and put on her beautiful garments of righteousness and be ready to go forth to meet our coming King.

We were very much edified by reading Bro. Dwiggins' discourse as given in The Restitution, Feb. 27th. His line of prophetic application seems very clear and comforting.

The following extract I clipped from the San Diego Union and Daily Bee. It strikes me as being very appropriate to the times, as showing the present outlook for the near future. The "Mexican Financier" sees plainly that the conflict is coming, but it sees not, the after of this mighty deluge of blood.

With this thought comes another. Are we as a people endeavoring to give a certain sound that the people may get ready for the coming conflict. Are we using all dilligence to send out the glad tidings, that the great Restorer will soon appear. Let us awake to duty for the night soon cometh when no man can work. Your Sister.

Mrs. Carrie Williams.

DEMAND FOR GOLD.

"Forty years ago," says the Mexican Financier, "the discoveries of gold in California and Australia created a new order of things in the commercial world. A tremendous impulse was given to all business enterprises. More than that, the nations of the civilized world, growing richer than had been deemed possible by old-fashioned political economists, began to increase their land and sea armaments. The great armies of the modern world date from the discoveries of the yellow metal in two distant and, at that time, uncivilized regions.

Although the gold discoveries in Australia and California advanced modern civilization by bounds and leaps, and consequently, materially improved the masses of the people, it is questionable if the aggrandizement of the military establishments of civilization, made possible only through the vast additions to the world's wealth, has been altogether beneficial. It is a melancholy spectacle that Christian Europe presents today, with nation armed against nation, and millions of soldiers standing ready to leap at one another's throats.

"Nineteenth century civilization is not altogether a success. Good men everywhere must hope that Victor Hugo's prediction that the twentieth century will witness a universal disarmament, is to be realized, and that the surplus wealth of the nation's Christendom will be devoted to peaceful enterprises. Today all over Europe the demand for more gold is significant; it means that everywhere the possession of gold is equivalent to the acquisition of the most essential to the prosecution of war. A few weeks ago the English press was full of dark forebodings caused by the large exportations of gold, but now that the tide is turned and gold is flowing back into England we notice a more cheerful tone in the English financial press.

"The essential strength of the United States lies not so much in its ability to arm and equip vast armies in a few months' time, as in its possession of enormous wealth. It is the richest nation on the globe today, and is the one nation best able to sustain a prolonged conflict, for its ability to feed itself and to manufacture everything it requires for war was demonstrated during four years of a tremendous civil strife. It is not altogether improbable that the United States may be drawn into that gigantic struggle of the nations with which this century will, in all likelihood, terminate—the most universal and terrible war the world has never witnessed—possibly the final storm which shall usher in Hugo's era of universal peace and European Federation. If recent reports regarding extensive gold deposits in this country should be confirmed, Mexico will assume the role of the furnisher of the sinews of war to the nations. Nothing would so powerfully contribute to the rapid growth of this country as an extensive discovery of gold just as a general war was about to begin. Immigration would pour into the country, great enterprises would be undertaken, and Mexico would enjoy a season of wonderful progress and prosperity, remaining, as she probably would, a peaceful spectator of the world's colossal conflict. We hope to see the search for gold carried on with renewed energy here, for the possession of the yellow metal will enable this country to play no important part in the closing years of this eventful century."

The Glorious Light of Truth.

So then, O Son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me. Ezek. xxxiii. 7.

Believing as I do most emphatically that the Bible is divinely inspired by its author I hesitate not a moment to express my unwavering convictions of its reliability. Upwards of fifty years ago, God for Christ's sake forgave my sins and made me happy in his love, and adopted me into his loving and righteous family, and gave me the evidence of it, the spirit of adoption. And never have I seen one moment since that I regretted the step I then took.

Upwards of forty years ago I began to study the very precious Bible, my inspired creed, my celestial body of divinity flowing from the throne of grace, and I have been richly rewarded for my time and work, so I can conscientiously say, Praise the Lord O my soul, and all that is within me praise his holy name. How glad I am that my Heavenly Father ever called after me and set me to investigating his sacred oracles. O the richness, the blessedness, the sweetness of the sacred pages. I am so glad that my eyes have been anointed with heavenly eye-salve and opened to see the over blessed and glorious plan of human redemption, wrought out through the superlative law and goodness of our Heavenly Father, in the provision he has made through Jesus Christ for the lost sons and daughters of Adam's posterity. I am unable to express my gratitude for such a great blessing, and for soul-cheering and elevating thoughts and sentiments.

In the winter of 1842–3 my mind was called to an investigation of the conservative chains of prophecy, which wonderfully comforted and strengthened me, touching the coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. I soon discovered that God had two objects in giving us these chains of prophecy; one was to confirm us in the truthfulness of God's immutable word, so that his loving disciples might have full confidence in his divine revelation; and the other was to fully demonstrate to our minds the blazing light of our near approach to the realms of endless day, that the church might know with moral certainty when they were to enjoy that everlasting rest from the curse of a world abounding with trials, perplexities, sorrows, temptations and wickedness.

O for a full and perfect preparation to hail that long, very desirable and joyous day. In the second chapter of Daniel there is a chain of prophecy embracing universal kingdom. The fifth is God's everlasting kingdom. In this chain are sixteen prominent prophecies; fifteen of the sixteen have already had their fulfilment. The last link in that chain found in the 43d verse is now being fulfilled, so that the world now exists between the 43d and 44th verses is as sure as the square of 8 is 64 and the square root of 64 is 8. Leaving this chain we find another in the seventh chapter with more events; four great beasts, the fourth having ten horns, then another little horn comes up and plucks up three of the ten. The church of God is placed in this horn's power for a time, times and a half or 1260 symbolic days (years); then the judge sits upon the little horn power; its dominion is taken away now already fulfilled, so that the world of mankind exists between the 26th and 27th verses. So we may conclude that we are located down in the very extremity of all consecutive prophecy, on the very threshold of the overwhelming scenes of the eternal judgment.

Now comes the very important question, is the bride of Christ already for translation? Has she oil in her vessel? Is her lamp trimmed and brilliantly burning? Is she by her example and influence and testimony living in constant readiness for translation to meet her long absent Lord? Is she discharging every duty and obligation that rests upon her? Whosoever seeth the sword coming and warn not the people, their blood will be required at the watchman's hand. O to be fully resigned to the will of God, dead entirely to sin and unrighteousness and all aglow with zeal which is according to knowledge and the salvation of sin-sick and burdened souls. We stand on exceedingly dangerous ground. O may all the family of God hold themselves in constant readiness for the enjoyment of that glorious reward that soon will be bestowed upon all the worthy ones is my prayer. The world to come is too great, too glorious, too blessed, too enduring to be withheld by the dear Lord from us after so much labor, so many sorrows, trials, persecutions, perplexities and desperate conflicts with the devil. O may we watch and pray continually.

A. N. Seymour.

The Enduring Word.

Did you ever stand in some old cathedral, or ruined church, where for centuries the word of God had been preached? And did there never come over you, with a strange rush of feeling, the thought: "Where are all the men and women that bowed their knees here, beneath the vanished roof of this place?"

I remember once standing in the old church of Torcello, the mother Church of Venice, built by the fugitives from the eastern coast more than a thousand years ago. And there were the bare severe stone benches, on which the vanished presbyters had sat, and the simple rude old church in which for a millennium men and women had worshiped. And there seemed to come out, from the caves of the past, a sighing wind that, as it whistled through the open windows, with their wooden shutters, asked this question of the text: "The fathers, where are they? And the prophets, do they live forever?" Gone! gone! all gone!

There is nothing so transient as the words that are spoken by Christian teachers. Of all the seed that is sown, our Master taught us that three-fourths, at least, was likely to perish. And even where the word takes root in men's hearts, how swiftly the speaker of it passes and is forgotten! No workers so soon have their work covered with oblivion as preachers. As long as the living voice sounds, there is some chance of our being remembered, and but for a very, very little period thereafter; like some great singers whose reputation must needs die as soon as the generation that heard the sweetness of their tones has passed away.

And in another way, too, the prophets fade and perish, inasmuch as new circumstances rise about which they know nothing, new phases of thought which antiquate their teachings, new difficulties in which their words have no counsel, new conflicts in which they can strike no blow. So that when I can go into a second-hand bookseller's shop I find lying in the rubbish-box at the door the books of men that in my younger days were the guides and teachers of the churches. "The prophets, do they live forever?" Their word is but for a moment.

And yet, in all these fleeting and mingled human utterances, does there not lie an immortal and imperishable germ, even the word of the living God? Much ingenuity is expended nowadays in trying to discriminate between the permanent and the transient in Christian teaching. I am old-fashioned enough to believe that that line is to be drawn between this book and men's conclusions from it; and that whatever lies on the pages of the New Testament, the completed revelation of God to man—whether it be in the record of the incarnate and eternal, personal Word, or whether it be in what I consider the authoritative teaching of his apostles—is the permanent element in Christianity. "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth," the human systems and institutions based on the revelation of God in Christ, as recorded and expounded in Scripture, shall break up and disappear. "But the word of the Lord endureth forever"—and this enduring word is that story of Christ's incarnation, death for our sins, resurrection, and ascension, which by the gospel is preached unto you.

Therefore, we have to look beyond the dearest of human teachers, and to those to whom we owe most. We are at the best but lights kindled, and therefore having but a season to burn, during which any can rejoice in our light. But he is unkindled, uncreated, and unconsumable light, who forever and forever will be the guide and teacher of his church. Christ is the truth, which is with us and shall be in us forever. The clouds that are painted roseate and lovely by the sunshine, melt, and disappear into the blue, but the sun abides. "The prophets, do they live forever?" "They truly were not suffered to continue by reason of death," but this Man continueth ever our Friend, our Prophet, Priest and King.—Alex. Maclaren.

In the Dry Season.

I spent a few days, in November, before the "former rains" began to fall, among the wadies, or stony valleys of the wilderness of Judea, near the south end of the Dead Sea. There was not a green leaf nor a blade of grass to be seen. There appeared to be no earth; only yellow sand mingled with the red rocks and white and brown stones which strewed the surface. There were many shrubs, most of them rough and thorny, but without a vestige of foliage or a sign of life. The only exception was in the bed of the streams, now dried up, but which had been full of running water in the early spring, eight months ago. Here were scattered a few tall, slender shrubs, with long pale leaves, very few and scanty. These were the oleanders, which strike their roots down to great depth in the water-courses, and draw up the hidden moisture. But even they seemed withering and parched with thirst. The only living things were a few desert sand-colored larks, which feed on the snails that glue themselves all the summer through to the stems of the shrubs, and there remain torpid, and now and then a little herd of gazelles, "the harts panting after the water brooks," ranging the desert in search of some hidden pool, and supporting life by the bark of the desert bushes.

"Blossoming as the Rose."—In the month of February I revisited the wilderness. The rains had fallen copiously, and had ceased about a fortnight before my arrival. But for the hills and cliffs I could not have recognized the Wady Zuweirah. The stream had evidently overflowed the narrow channel, and had left a slight coating of earthy deposit. Everywhere the surface of the valley was clad, not, indeed, with turf, but with thickly crowded tufts of various plants already in full bloom, studding the ravine with spots of brilliant color, like jewels set in gold. Conspicuous among these floral gems were the narcissus, the gorgeous tulip (tulipa gesneriana), and the cyclamen: for these three sprang from clefts in the rocks, often away from the water-courses, but had been restored to life by the rain penetrating the chinks. All was life,—life everywhere. Most abundant in the bed of the stream was the scented mignonette, the seeds of which had lain patiently since last spring, awaiting their resurrection. The oleanders, which some interpret to be the "rose" of Scripture, but which are more accurately identified with "the willows by the water-courses," were now covered with their pink bloom, one of the most gorgeous of floral sights; and the retem bushes, higher up the cliffs, with their gauzy white bloom just suffused by a delicate pink, looked as though clad with a silky gossamer lightly thrown over them. In that wady I collected in one day seventy species of plants in bloom. The change since my former visit might well be called miraculous. What had caused it? Simply the winter rains. The desert blossomed as the rose. The poet-prophet seizes on this, to his hearers, familiar transformation of nature, as an apt and vivid picture of the change wrought by the life-giving out-pouring of the gospel on a thirsty world,—verdure for barrenness, beauty for desolation, life for death. So the gospel message fertilizes the wastes of heathenism, brings love in place of war, family affection in place of slavery and degradation, commerce in place of rapine, holiness in place of impurity. The first verse draws the contrast between the wilderness before and after the rains. But the next verse amplifies as well as varies the figure. However great the change on the face of the desert, it is still a land of sand. The prophet turns then to the forest-clad mountain. "The glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it."—Lebanon thus clothed up to its snow-capped crest with the changeless green of its majestic cedars, while the pine and the ilex and the tall juniper varied its hues. These forests are indeed its glory. But, grand and awe-inspiring, there is a richer, if it be a humbler, beauty than that of Lebanon. He turns next to the lower hills and plains, the "excellency of Carmel and Sharon." There is a force in the contrast between Lebanon and Carmel. Carmel has indeed its noble oaks, but its beauty in spring is of a different character. It is (at least thirty years ago it was, for fire and ax have wrought sad havoc of late) clad with flowering trees and shrubs, many of them not very large, but one gorgeous mass of blossom, in February and March, of every hue and most delicious fragrance, from the crimson bunches of the Judas tree to the pure white of the storax (the stacte of Scripture) and the myrtle. Thus the whole botanical world is taken to set forth the majesty, the sweetness, the beauty of the gospel,—the rich floral carpet of the moistened desert, the perfumed glades of the woods, the unchanging stateliness of the mountain forest.—H. B. Tristram, D. D., in S. S. Times.

It Can Not be Done.

"Gather up my influence and bury it with me," were the dying words of a young man to the weeping friends at his bedside. What a wish was this! What a deep anguish of heart there must have been as the young man reflected upon his past life—a life which had not been what it should have been. With what deep regrets must his very soul have been filled as he thought of those young men whom he had influenced for evil; influences which he felt must be eradicated, and which led him, faintly but pleadingly, to breathe out such a dying request, "Gather up my influence and bury it with me."

Young men, the influence of your lives for good or evil can not be gathered up by your friends after death, no matter how earnestly you plead. Then, remember, your influence is now going out from you; you alone are now responsible; you have now the power to govern and shape it. Then live noble, true, heroic, God-like lives.

Will the churches of the Conference of Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin correspond with me, as the two sections have heretofore worked together. I want to hear from all, that a conference meeting may be appointed in June. Address me at Lanark, Ill.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

Plymouth, Indiana, March 27, 1889.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, Post Office, County and State plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co. Ind.

Remittances should be sent by Bank Draft Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk: money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

SPECIAL REQUEST.

Bro. D. T. Taylor, of Hyde Park, Mass., is engaged to write a brief article for a Theological Dictionary giving statistics as to the different bodies of believers who are expecting the near coming of our Redeemer. Will not some one of our brethren in each State communicate with him giving the number of ministers and churches in sympathy with our general views on the fulfilment of prophecy regarding the reign of Christ in the Coming Age, the restoration of Judah and Israel, and kindred doctrines. Let none hesitate to write thinking others may do so. The more letters he gets the better, as he will arrange and condense the information. For ourself we will communicate all we can. Do not delay as he wants information at once. We have written to some personally but do not know all who might give the desired information; hence we make this request. Address him as above.

WE are compelled to postpone the publication of some articles recently received to future numbers. Some of these will appear in our next paper. We withhold articles on the "Signs of the Times" to give room to our correspondents.

As an item of quite late news from Jerusalem we call attention to the following:

A railway from Jaffa to Jerusalem is stated by Dr. Thomas Chaplin to be about to be commenced in March, 1889. He says that the Sultan of Turkey has granted a firman to Mr. Joseph Navon for the construction of a railway from Jaffa, the seaport on the Mediterranean Sea, to Jerusalem, and that a company has been formed to make this railway, which is expected to pass near the Artuf colony of the Jewish Refugees Aid Society.

THE Boston Record of March 10th says: "The signs all point to the fact that Canada is on the eve of a great religious and race war. It is to be Protestant against Catholic, English against French."

It appears that the Legislature of the Province of Quebec has passed a bill incorporating the Jesuits, giving them $400,000, and also restoring them some forfeited estates. It seems also that the Dominion Government of all the Provinces will have to pass upon this bill either to allow of its becoming a law or to disallow it. Of course there is a most powerful opposition throughout the Dominion to the allowance of any such measures. We append a brief clipping from the Family Herald and Weekly Star of March 12th:

TORONTO, March 12.—The Young Conservative Club has adopted a resolution praying for the disallowance of the Jesuits' Estates Bill. At the annual meeting, last night, of the Toronto Branch of the Dominion Evangelical Alliance a similar motion was passed. Father Chiniquy lectured in Carlton Street Methodist Church last night. He condemned the order or Jesuits in severe terms, and spoke in favor of petitioning the Queen against the bill. He further avorred that Jesuit teaching made the killing of a Protestant not a sin, but an act of sanctification, that Henry III., Henry IV., and William the Silent fell by Jesuit hands, and that the late war between France and Germany was brought about through the cunning of members of the Society of Jesus.

A BUILDING IN THE WRONG PLACE.

Tower on the Mount of Olives.

In our issue of two weeks ago we placed some account of this remarkable building before our readers. From a recent London periodical—Israel's Watchman and Signs of our Times—for the current month, we give some further and more detailed information. It is from a Mr. D. C. Joseph, Faith Missionary, Jerusalem, and bears date of Jan. 29, 1889, less than two months ago. He says: "I was yesterday on the Mount of Olives and examined the new High Tower, which is now being erected on Mount Olivet by the Greek church, which is the Russian national church. The Mount of Olives is 2,800 feet above sea level. The new tower is 210 feet high (just about the height of the monument near the London Bridge, which stands as a memento of the London fire in 1666). It is square, each side being at the base 24 feet, and tapering to 21 feet at the summit, the thickness of the walls being 6 feet 8 inches. Fifty steps of 8 inches each lead to the first floor, in which is a room 15 feet 8 inches square, with four windows, one on each side. The second floor is reached by 49 steps, 8 inches high each. The room here is 12 feet 8 inches on each side. In this is suspended a large bell 7 feet wide and 8 feet high, fixed on massive beams of timber. Images of the Savior and the saints are on the bell. There are openings in the wall on each side 6 feet 8 inches wide. The third floor is reached by 50 steps 8 inches high each. The room on this story is 12 feet by 12 feet, and has a window in each side. In this chamber are nine bells for music and two large bells with drawings of the Savior, saints and angels on them. The dome is reached by 62 steps. It has one door to go round the balcony; it is 12 feet 8 inches square. The steeple floor is made with iron bars and windows on each side, three stories high. On the top near the cross there is a round hole with a reflector and some machinery for electricity. This opening is towards the Mediterranean, and I feel sure is made for none other than strategical purposes.

"I was thinking over the prophecy concerning this Mount of Olives, that Mount on which our blessed Savior prayed so often, and from whence he ascended on high, and where his blessed feet will again stand at his Second Advent. It will be cleft in twain, which will be tantamount to being destroyed, and then presumably this tower will sink into the chasm formed by the parting asunder of the Mountain. Zech. xiv. 4. When we come to consider that the Lord is just in all his dealings, we can account for all. The ancient Temple the Lord hallowed by his presence and sanctified, but man defiled it with idols, and, therefore, God destroyed it, as he will the Mount of Olives. The Lord made it holy by choosing it for his frequent resort when on earth, but now men have filled the place with idolatrous worship and defiled it by their practices; therefore the Mount will be destroyed and all the earth burnt up, and a new heaven and a new earth shall be, in which dwelleth righteousness; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

How wonderfully prophecy is fulfilling. A text in Isaiah can now be explained that could never be explained before. It is as follows: "And there shall be upon every high mountain, and upon every high hill, rivers and streams of waters in the day of the great slaughter, when the towers fall." Isa. xxx. 25. Let us now read another prophecy in direct connection with this as well as in connection with what the correspondent says about the tower now building on the Mount of Olives. The slaughter is spoken of in Zech. xiv. 2, that Isaiah speaks of. To make the whole matter plain we will quote Zech. xiv. 1–10:

"Behold the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle. And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half toward the south. And ye shall flee to the valley of the mountains; for the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azal: yea, ye shall flee, like as ye fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah king of Judah; and the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee. And it shall come to pass in that day that the light shall not be clear nor dark; but it shall be one day which shall be known to the Lord, not day nor night; but it shall come to pass that at evening time it shall be light. And it shall be in that day that living waters shall go out of Jerusalem; half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea; in summer and in winter shall it be. And the Lord shall be king over all the earth; in that day shall there be one Lord and his name one. All the land shall be turned as a plain from Geba to Rimmon south of Jerusalem."

Ezekiel speaking of this day, says, "Surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel; so that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of heaven, and the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all men that are upon the face of the earth, shall shake at my presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground." Ezek. xxxviii. 19, 20.

For "steep places" the margin reads "towers or stairs," just what are now being built upon the Mount of Olives, and being built too by the Russian or Gog power then to be so signally overthrown. See Ezek. xlvii. 1–12, for the going forth of the waters.

In the day when the "towers fall" will be the day of overthrowing and cleaving the mountains, and in that day this Russian tower—of "towers and stairs," i. e., tower loft upon tower loft with connecting stairs,—will go down into the cleaving earth.

Last day events are now coming to the front, and the rapture of the saints is now impending; as when the Lord comes, "all the saints will come with him."

Truly the word of the Lord is as a lamp shining in a dark place. The last "jots and tittles" of the prophetic word are fulfilling in our own day.

OPPORTUNITY.

On September 8, 1857, Lieutenant William L. Herndon left Havana for New York in command of the Steamer Central America, having on board 474 passengers, a crew of 105 sailors, and about $2,000,000 of gold. During a violent gale from the northeast, and a heavy sea she sprung a leak, and became perfectly disabled. Night was coming on, and the sea was rolling high. Just at this time another vessel was passing, and the captain, discovering that something was wrong with the Central America, hailed to the crippled vessel, asking if they needed help. "I am in a sinking condition," said Lieutenant Herndon. "Had you not better send your passengers on board my vessel directly?" said the captain in reply. "Will you not lay by me till morning?" replied Lieutenant Herndon. To this the captain made reply: "I will try; but had you not better send your passengers on board now?" "Lay by me till morning," again said Lieutenant Herndon. "I tried to lay by him," said the captain afterwards, "but at night such was the heavy roll of the sea, I could not keep my position, and I never saw the steamer again. In an hour and a-half after the Lieutenant said 'lay by me till morning,' the vessel and its living freight went down—the commander and crew, and a great majority of the passengers, found a grave in the deep."

It was on Sept 11th, that the steamer sprung a leak, and sank on the evening of Sept. 12, near the outer edge of the Gulf Stream in lat. 31 deg. 41m. All the women and children on board were put into the boats and were saved, with a few men. Herndon with 426 others sunk with the vessel.

We were well acquainted with one of the passengers who was lost on this ill-fated vessel. His name was Nathaniel Lepper. Like many others, he went to California to mine for gold. He was successful so far as securing quite an amount of the precious metal was concerned. But he, with his gold, and others, with their gold, went down with the disabled steamer to sleep beneath the waves till the "sea gives up its dead." Lieutenant Herndon and the 426 persons lost the precious opportunity of escaping to another vessel. Probably the desire, on his part, to save his noble vessel, and the desire, on the part of many of his passengers, to save their gold, was the cause of neglect to use the fleeting hour they had to board another Steamer and thus save their lives. The gold on many of these passengers was just so much weight to help sink them. What a lost opportunity was that "hour and a-half." Very often how much depends on a brief space of time.

In the history of our world there are certain times that there are prizes transcendently grand and glorious proffered on peculiar conditions that are just then, and then only attainable, and never afterward.

"Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom; and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." This was the language of our Lord to his apostles. The peculiar opportunity of winning an enthronement over a tribe, or over any part of Israel, was limited to the three years and a-half of our Lord's personal ministry. And to share with him personally in this promised glory it was made obligatory on each one to share with our Lord personally in all his peculiar trials and temptations. The only exception, in time, was in the case of the apostle Paul, and although he was called in to the apostleship after the close of our Lord's personal ministry, still he was called by our Lord himself, and by him instructed into the grand mysteries of redemption; and to him the crown is also promised. He too preached in the apostolic age and generation. As to sufferings and trials for the name and cause of Christ he most certainly had a full share. Just twelve apostolic crowns—eleven were won—one was forfeited by Judas—and Paul's opportunity came—and he won the priceless diadem. It was opportunity. There were only twelve apostolic crowns to be won in all human history, these were all to be attained under very peculiar circumstances that will never occur again, and the time for giving these grand emblems of eternal royalty was brief indeed. Although there were only twelve apostolic crowns to be won, and these to be gained at a very particular time, and under most peculiar circumstances, still there were other magnificent prizes attainable at that very crisis of human history. During our Lord's ministry a young man came to him, asking "What good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" Our Lord replies by telling him to keep the law. The young man claimed to have done this and then asks "What lack I yet?" To this Jesus makes the further reply—"If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come and follow me." "But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful; for he had great possessions." Our Lord's remarks to his disciples show just what the wealthy worldly man lost, and this loss was a royalty in his kingdom. The young man had become convinced that Jesus was most probably the long-looked-for Messiah and King. He had learned from the prophets that this King would rule in righteousness, and, also, that he would have Princes associated with him to decree judgment, Isa xxxii. 1. To have one of these heavenly principalities would be to also have eternal life. To share with the Messiah, however, in the higher honors of his kingdom, could only be granted to those who would share with him, personally, in all his privations and trials. There was only a very limited few years in which this could be done literally. Our Lord, though rich, became poor—had not where to lay his head—was despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief—and in this way attained the highest honors in the universe that his Heavenly Father had to bestow, Phil. ii. 5–11. The apostles themselves say: "Behold we have left all and followed thee; what shall we have therefore?" Jesus replies, "Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Now comes the part of his reply that would have covered the case of the young man. "And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive a hundred fold, and shall inherit everlasting life." Right there and right then was this man's opportunity. The Lord's personal ministry was very short; only a transient space in the eternities. A like time will never come again.

Alas! it was an impossible thing for this rich man to comply with the terms. If he could only have bought a place of preferment with a part of his wealth, and lived in the enjoyment of the rest, he might have been willing to purchase his way to a throne of the ages. And then Christ was in such poor circumstances—could it not be done? No; those that would share personally with Christ in the highest, and the higher honors, of his kingdom, must leave everything, just as he did, and share with him personally in all his privations. A peculiar time; peculiar honors to be then won; peculiar abandonments of all to be made just at that time; to share with the living personal Christ, personally in his trials and privations.

The young man went back to enjoy his wealth for a season. The Romans however, came in a few years, and probably before the man's death, and he lost all—and lost a crown of glory too. It was a lost opportunity.

How few realize that this passing generation is living in a special space of the eternities, that has its special opportunities, and that, as a brief period, it will never return again anymore than the transient period of our Lord's personal ministry will ever return. Those, that then lived, were living in the first generation of the gospel dispensation; we, that are now living, are living in the last generation of the gospel dispensation. It is our opportunity to do now just what none before us have had the exact privilege of doing, and what none after us can ever do. Our generation is the time for heralding the impending advent of Messiah, and the immediate establishment of his kingdom on earth, with all kindred truths. To do this acceptably, we must meet with very similar obloquy and rejection, on the part of mankind, as fell to the lot of our Savior and his personal followers in his day. A crown is promised to all that look for Christ, and who love his appearing. "If we suffer we shall also reign with him." It was a great privilege to share with Christ personally in trials at the commencement of this dispensation; it is sublime to be living in this age—to belong to the "left-over" part of his church who shall be translated without seeing death, as will be the privilege of some now living if very faithful. O brother, O sister, it is a time of opportunity—it will never come again! Herald, O herald, the glad tidings! He is coming for his bridal church. He is coming to mid-heaven with his angels, and his angels are coming to earth for all his saints. To each grave of the holy dead—to each cot where lives a consecrated son or daughter of the Lord Almighty, will a celestial messenger descend to take the faithful home to ever be with the Lord. He is coming soon—the angels are coming soon—he has his crowns in his hands. O heralds of this dispensation's final hour—

We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time;
In an age on ages telling—
To be living is sublime!

O generation of the translation period, "Let us go forth!"

"Let us go forth!" and leave the world behind us,
And meet the perils of the pilgrim way;
Where Jesus walked let scoffing mockers find us,
Still hastening onward, as they bid us stay.

"Let us go forth!" The pilgrim and the stranger
Owns not the earth his weary foot must tread;
God's sinless Son, once pillowed in the manger,
Had not below whereon to rest his head.

"Let us go forth!" Were Jesus walked before us,
Unmoved by praise or censure's fleeting breath;
God's eye of love is fondly watching o'er us,
The arms eternal stretching underneath.

"Let us go forth!" Without the camp there liveth
The strength of Israel. Ye of heavenly birth,
Bask in the smile the loving Master giveth
To them that follow him, "Let us go forth!"

Our time—a far-spent, fleeting transient generation—our trial-work, to harald the impending advent of Christ, the soon establishment of his kingdom, and all related truths—our trials, the jeerings, and mockings, and scoffing of the last days—our opportunity is, now or never, to secure a part in the resurrection of the just, if we die, or a translation without seeing death if living. The rapture is near—now is our opportunity—when gone by it is gone by forever. Take heed that no man may take thy crown.

JERUSALEM.

There is in Jerusalem at the present time, a remarkable American colony which it was my privilege carefully to examine. About twenty persons arrived in Jerusalem in the year 1881, having gone mostly from the city of Chicago, where some of their number had been active Christian workers under Moody, and where they had been led to think that they could do more good by going to the Holy Land. On their way out they receive some accessions from England. Among their number is Mr. H. J. Spafford, once a leading Chicago lawyer; another, Capt. Sylvester, was formerly of the English army; another was a clergyman of the Church of England, who visited the Holy Land in company with the late Gen. Gordon, and who decided to remain with these people; another is a venerable lady, the widow of a colonel of the United States regular army. All are most deeply interested in their work, and share and have a common purse, and have now become known far and wide through the region, because they make no profession of faith, but simply recognize their allegiance to the Christ, and express by constant deeds their desire to love their neighbors as themselves.

When they first arrived in Palestine an interesting migration of Jews had just taken place from Arabia. About three hundred Jews,—called Temanites, and believed by themselves to be a remnant of the tribe of Gad,—had moved from the desert in which the tribe had long had its home, and had come to the Holy Land. They are small in stature, delicate in features, wholly free from the money-changing disposition, grateful for every kindness and eminently childlike in their characters. They were lying, when the Americans arrived, in the fields outside the city, with no one to care for them. The Americans began immediately to prepare daily rations of soup for them, to tend the sick, and in every way to watch over them according to their ability. At the present time the Temanites have established themselves in a prosperous colony, south of the village of Siloam, and in their synagogue every week they have a prayer in which Horatio Spafford and his friends are mentioned, and the divine blessing is invoked upon them for their many good deeds. The house of these Americans is daily visited by persons coming from all parts of the land, to inquire into this wonderful phenomenon. The Bedouins of the desert lean their tall spars against the wall, and are cordially welcomed, and occupy a room in the house as long as they desire to remain; and the Americans, going fearlessly across the Jordan, have returned these visits, and been received with the utmost kindness and have had an influence over the lives of the Bedouins. They deal specially with the Adwan tribe, long known to be the fiercest class east of the Jordan. The Fellahin, or peasant class of the country, find always here a cordial welcome. No evening passes without seeing its company of poor and rich, of peasants and Turkish effendis gathered in the salon, to listen to the hymns which the Americans sweetly sing; and every one on leaving the room, expresses his gratitude for what he has come to regard as the greatest comfort of his life. In this way, Mohammedans and all classes in Jerusalem are reached for good, and a lesson is taught us in regard to the spirit in which Christian missions should be carried on.

While the London society for the conversion of Jews can show no converts or nearly none, these Christians have in their own family several Jews who have become so filled with the Christian spirit that they have gladly cast in their lot with them, and are doing the same work with the others. The influence which they exert in Jerusalem is certainly to be reckoned as promising a better future for the city. Sooner or later sectarian differences will feel the influence of this life of charity. Already the Mohammedans, including the Pasha himself, have expressed their appreciation of the deeds of the Americans, and on every hand the poor people of the land pronounce daily blessings upon their work.

The Jews are now rapidly returning to Palestine. They are not coming, as heretofore, merely in old age to obtain a grave in the land, but they are coming with means and intelligence sufficient to change the face of the country. A school is now taught in Jerusalem in which the young Jews learn to make shoes, to make clothes, to work in wood and iron, to draw, to make models in clay, and in every way to make themselves useful and independent citizens. It is believed that in the near future, the Jew of Palestine will not only be permitted to land at Jaffa, which is now closed to him, and to remain in the land as long as he chooses, but that he will also be found tilling the soil and practising the various mechanical arts.

The American missionaries of the Presbyterian church in Syria, with their headquarters in Beyrout, have accomplished wonders in comparison with what has been done by their English brethren in Palestine. A large printing office now exists, books and periodicals are published, many mission stations have been established, throughout the whole Lebanon district, the college is in a flourishing condition, the graduates of its medical department are known all over the East, and a theological school has lately been established for the training of native preachers. A new department of the University, likely to be very useful indeed, is the archæological department, which is intended shall give to young men, especially young ministers who go to spend a year in the Holy Land, such practical information in archæology as comes from viewing ruins and inscriptions in their own places, and from travelling over the land itself. It is greatly to be hoped that this department will receive full recognition on this side of the water, and that the archæologists of the future will receive their training so far as Bible subjects are concerned, in the land itself, from the very competent corps of instructors connected with the Syrian College at Beyrout.

In regard to the site of Calvary, it is wise to suspend judgment. The traditional site may yet be vindicated, and the now generally accepted site over Jeremiah's grotto may yet be rejected. The present wall of Jerusalem is modern, and it is possible that it is not built on the line of any one of its predecessors. The foundation of a previous wall has lately been found near the Jaffa gate, outside the present one. Excavations are not permitted except for building purposes, and therefore no systematic study of the subject can be made at present. Pending scientific investigations, the decisions made by Lieut. Conder and others, on probabilities, are to be received with caution. There are several places near the city, which may present a reasonable claim. —T. F. Wright, in Boston Advertiser.

Mexican Mummies.

Every one that doeth evil hateth the light; for evil thrives in concealment and in darkness. The "dark ages" were full of evil deeds;—and all ages are "dark ages" where the light of God's word is concealed and suppressed The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty; and all places will soon be dark unless men take heed to that sure word of prophecy, which shineth as a light in a dark place, till the day dawn and the day-star arise.

Any religion which excludes the Word of God, and keeps the people in darkness, must be cruel and oppressive, deceptive and misleading.

Among the saddest and darkest pages of human history, are the stories of the Inquisition—that secret tribunal, where in gloom, and darkness, and seclusion, men were secretly accused, imprisoned, tortured, condemned, burned, and starved. A few tales of those horrors have reached our ears, but how much is untold, and will be, till God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing.

Meanwhile men are prone to forget those barbarities, and there is a studied effort in some quarters to suppress all statements of such facts, thus falsifying history, deceiving the people, and lulling them to sleep, while the same power that established and sustained the Inquisition, grasps the reins of government, throttles free speech, imprisons the ministers of God, and rejoices in the prospect of a speedy restitution of all its ancient powers and privileges. Hence it is ever needful to recall these unpleasant facts, and reiterate these awful statements, that men may be warned of coming evil, and taught how to avert it.

In 1857, at the time of the Mexican revolution, the Papal inquisition, which had long existed in Mexico Puebla, was given into the hands of the people, who for the first time had the privilege of freely entering its portals, and searching there for friends who had from time to time mysteriously disappeared. In the city of Mexico the people ransacked the place, but could not find what they sought.

After considerable investigation some one pointed out that the walls of the building seemed very thick. They then commenced beating upon them, and found that in certain places they were hollow. They broke into them, and from those whitened sepulchres, filled with dead men's bones, they drew out men in their clothing, dead, dried up, perished.

And lest this awful revelation should sometime be forgotten, doubted and denied, as so many others have been, they sent for an artist, placed those dead bodies in position, and had them photographed. One of those pictures, taken in the city of Mexico, came into my possession, and from that picture, painted by the sun which has no prejudices, and tells no lies, a copy was also made by the sun, untouched by any human hands, and we are thus enabled to cast upon the screen a picture, not of Egyptian mummies of ages gone by, preserved with sacred care by heathen priests, but a picture of the mummies of the nineteenth century, taken from the dungeons of the Papal Inquisition.

Is it strange that a universal, infallible, unchangeable organization, which has such a past record, and hides such skeletons as these in her closets, is very careful what kind of history the children study in the public schools of America?

Let people who fear God and love his Word, watch against these evils that are around them, and warn the unwary, and rebuke the wrong-doers. We want no inquisitorial dungeons, no walled up skeletons, no cells and chains, and bars and bolts and prisons; we want the open Bible and the common school, histories that tell the truth, and men who believe it, and are made free by its power, for whom the Son maketh free shall be free indeed. —The Christian.

Poetry.

LOVE NOT THE WORLD.

Love not the world;
Its fashions go like the flowers of grass,
And its pleasures fleet as the breezes pass;
Its brightest things like the sun-gleams die,
Its hopes and dreams with the clouds go by;
Love not the world!

Love not the world;
The blossoms of spring and of childhood's years
Are gathered and flung by the fount of tears,
The halls of song and the dancers gay,
Along our path but a moment stay:
Love not the world!

Love not the world;
For its giddy train with their idol gold,
Will trample the things that we dearest hold,
The friendships pure and the loves of yore,
And the lessons learned at our mother's door;
Love not the world!

THE MISSING ONES.

One summer evening, for a part of our family worship, I read the fourth chapter of 1 Thess. Before retiring to rest, I seated myself on my easy-chair, and mused on the last few verses of the chapter, and as I mused, I fell into a deep sleep, and had a most wonderful dream. My mind seemed to be clear and distinct, and my intellectual faculties stronger and brighter than in my wakeful condition.

I thought I had awakened in the morning and was somewhat surprised to find that my wife was not beside me as usual. Supposing, however, that her absence was but temporary, I waited, expecting her speedy return to our chamber; but after the lapse of what I considered a reasonable time, as she did not make her appearance, I arose and dressed.

My wife's apparel was where she had placed it on retiring, and I felt confident she was somewhere about the house. So I went to my daughter Julia's room, thinking she might know the whereabouts of her mother; but after knocking several times without response, I entered and found that she was missing.

"Strange, passing strange!" said I to myself; "where can they both be?" Then I went to the room of our son Frank, and found him up and already dressed, which was something very unusual for him at an hour so early. He said he had passed a very restless night, and thought he might better get up. I told him of the absence of his mother and sister from their rooms, and requested him to look around and see if he could find them. In the meantime I hurriedly completed my toilet, and soon Frank returned and the missing ones were nowhere to be found, and that every door leading outward was securely locked, as on the preceding evening. We were at our wits' end, and what to make of this strange occurrence we did not know. On again visiting Julia's room we found on a stand her well-marked open Bible. One prominent verse attracted my attention; it read, "Be ye ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." This passage, my wife had always declared, referred to the coming of Christ for his saints, the redeemed church, according to 1 Thess. iv. 14, 17, while I insisted that it only meant the preparation for death. But I am digressing. Frank and I concluded that, without waiting for breakfast, we should each take a different route, and visit some of our most intimate friends, in quest of our dear ones.

I first called on my wife's sister, Mrs. E., who, with her husband, were good, respectable people, members of the Christian Church, though rather worldly minded. After I had rung the bell several times, and waited somewhat impatiently, she appeared, and apologized for her dilatoriness by saying that she was "in a peck of trouble," and had to prepare breakfast herself, for her colored servant girl, whom she had always considered to be a real good Christian, had played her a mean trick. "She had gone off somewhere, without even putting the kettle on the range, or saying a word to any of us. But what puzzles us to know is, how she got out of the house, for the doors are all locked and the keys inside; just as we left them last evening on our return from Mrs. B.'s progressive euchre party."

"Indeed," said I, "it is exceedingly strange," and then I explained to her the object of my morning visit. When she heard of the mysterious absence of my wife and Julia, she became so very nervous that I was glad to change the subject by saying that, as I had not yet breakfasted, I would join them in their morning repast. When her husband heard my story he treated it with a good deal of levity, and declared that my wife was only playing me a practical joke, to induce me to rise earlier in the morning. He was sure the missing ones had secreted themselves somewhere about the house, and when I returned home I would find them all right.

As we seated ourselves at the table, Mrs. E. said we would have to take coffe without milk, as her milkman, who had heretofore been very reliable, had failed to make his appearance.

Presently the door-bell rang, and Frank entered in a state of nervous excitement, saying had been all over inquiring for his mother, and that, in almost every house he found trouble similar to our own. Almost every family was anxiously searching for missing ones.

He had just come from home where he found the servant girl alone, but much agitated in consequence of the numerous calls she had had to answer about missing friends. He also stated that the streets were thronged with excited people, hurrying to and fro, many of them weeping bitterly. At this announcement, Mr. E. showed evident signs of alarm, and related a conversation he had held yesterday with a friend, whose religious ideas he looked upon as quite heretical.

His friend insisted that a vast majority of church members, in these days, were but nominal Christians, "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," and that the love of the masses for the religious things had reached a very low ebb. "My friend also assured me," said Mr. E., "that the Scriptures clearly taught that, when the elect number of Christ's Church would be completed, Christ would come as unexpectedly as a thief in the night, and call his saints, both dead and alive, to meet him in the air. The transformation would be effected in the twinkling of an eye; and although the call would be made with a shout and the sound of a trumpet, yet none would hear it but those for whom it was intended. Then would be realized the import of Christ's words, 'Then shall two be in the field, one shall be taken and the other left; two women shall be grinding at the mill, the one shall be taken, and the other left.' I fear that time has now come, and, sad to say, we are among the left ones."

Now as the morning was far advanced, it was suggested that we go down to our business places. Frank had already gone to his office, and I, with a heavy heart, wended my way along the avenue among an unusual throng of men and women, whose faces betokened intense sorrow. In the business parts of the city I observed that many stores were closed, and those that were open did not appear to be doing any business. Every saloon that I passed was open, as usual, with groups of men outside, apparently engaged in serious discussion. As I passed by the City Hall, there was no perceptible diminution of the usual crowd of political "hangers on" around the building.

When I reached my own store, I found that my own book-keeper, and the faithful old porter who had served me so many years, had not yet put in an appearance. My two other clerks were on hand, doing nothing; nor did I feel like asking them to do anything.

Yesterday I agreed to sell to a worthy mechanic a small piece of land which I owned in the outskirts of the city, and had an appointment to meet him at my lawyer's office to sign the contract, but he failed to come, and I presumed he also had joined the absent ones. I then went to the Chamber of Commerce, and found the largest gathering of merchants that I had seen there in many months. Instead of the lively, noisy bustle of buying and selling, and of clerks and messenger boys running to and fro, there was a solemn gloom pervading the whole assembly. By unanimous consent, and in consequence of the great calamity that had overtaken the community, it was voted that "three days grace be allowed on all contracts falling due this day." I will not attempt to set forth any of the reasons and speculations that were advanced as to the cause of our present troubles, but all agreed that the visitation was a supernatural one, and that in some way we who were left on earth were blameable for it.

In the evening mostly every church in the city was open, with overflowing congregations. Everybody was anxious to know the cause and meaning of the "Great Visitation," and learn how lost hopes might be regained. Many of the pastors had gone with the missing ones, but some were present in their churches. All order of service was dispensed with, and noisy confusion prevailed; crimination and recrimination were bandied to and fro, between the pastors and the people; the latter asserting that, if the pastors had done their duty, and taught their flocks the plain truths of the Bible, instead of lulling them to sleep with philosophical and moral essays, they would not now be in their present sad condition. In my own church the pastor was present, with scores of persons whom I had but rarely seen at meetings.

The pastor was speaking when I entered the room, and was entreating the audience to endeavor to allay their feelings, while he would attempt to speak to them for a few minutes. Quiet being somewhat restored, he said, "This pastor's heart is bleeding at every pore in sympathy with his sorely afflicted people. The anguish which I experience at being, in a measure, the cause of our present unhappy condition, is indescribable. None of you can realize the keen disappointment I endure at this result of my labors. I am accused of having preached too much about the affairs of this life, and too little about the heavenly state, and the things to come; and of having kept you in ignorance of the imminency of the awful visitation which has manifested itself among us this day. In reply to all these accusations I can only say that I have taught you the same theology that was taught to me in college, and which I, in common with the great majority of our ministerial brethren, firmly believed to be the teaching of God's Word.

"But now I have to confess that I was sadly mistaken, for, after what has occurred, I cannot help believing that God's Word means just what it says. My pastoral labors, during all the time I have been with you, have been excessive, and in consequence, I have not been able to devote to the study of prophecy the time which a subject so deep and intricate demanded. I am glad, however, now to be able to say for your comfort that, since this morning I have made a prayerful examination of the Scriptures, as to our present condition, and find that we are yet in the place of hope."

Here a chorus of voices ejaculated, "Thank God for that!"

The pastor proceeded: "Although we have lost the glorious privilege of the raptured saints, salvation is yet ours, if we humbly and truly accept it. We may have to pass through greater trials and tribulations than the world has ever yet experienced ere we reach the Kingdom, but he that endureth to the end shall be saved. Now what is left for us is to reorganize our Church in the spirit of true holiness, to serve the Lord with all our heart and soul, and, according to his promise, he will pour out upon us such an abundant blessing that we will not be able to receive it."

Here the electric light suddenly went out, and there arose such fearful screams that I sprang to my feet in terror—and—awoke!

My wife, who was in an adjoining room, hearing my sudden uprising, hastened in to see what was the matter. Oh, how glad I was to see her, and to realize that my terrible experience in my easy-chair was only a dream. But the more I thought of it afterwards, the more solemn seemed the Scripture truths which it contained, and the more was I impressed with the importance of having our lamps trimmed and burning, ready to go out and meet the Bridegroom.—J. W., in Episcopal Recorder.

Palestine.

Four-fifths of Bible history has for its field Palestine. At Abraham's day two early nations had occupied it, so that while we do not know its most ancient name, the earliest name by which it is known to us is Canaan; after the conquest it is called Israel; in Christ's day Judea; now Palestine, which is derived from Philistine.

It is about the size of New Hampshire. Canaan, comprising the portion between Jordan and the Mediterranean Sea, contains 6,600 square miles, or about one and one-half as much as New York. Israel, on both sides of Jordan, contains 12,600 square miles. The coast line, from Tyre to Gaza, is 180 miles in extent, and Jordan, from its source in Palestine to the southern extremity of the Dead Sea, is 182 miles. In the north the distance between Jordan and the Mediterranean is twenty-five miles, and the distance between Dead Sea and Mediterranean is sixty miles.

Its waters, including its one river, the seas and mountain torrents, were named and located. The name Jordan means descending and at its source the river is 1,800 feet above sea level, whereas the Dead Sea into which it empties is 1,300 feet below. A canal from the Mediterranean to the Sea of Galilee would fill the Jordan valley from Merom to the Dead Sea inclusive and greatly increase the commercial importance of Palestine.

The natural divisions of Palestine are:

1. The maritime plain.
2. Shephelah, which means low hills.
3. The mountain region, which was largely the home of the Israelites, as the Canaanites continued to occupy the valleys.
4. The Jordan valley.
5. Eastern table lands, called Gilead, which means high. In the conquest all east of the Jordan was taken from the Amorites, or mountaineers, and Midianites in three decisive battles west of the Jordan. Joshua showed himself a strategist in fighting the battles of Jericho and Ai and marching on to Shechem in the centre and thus dividing his enemies from one another, after which the greatest decisive battle of the world's history was fought at Bethoron at the south, a battle more important in results than Gettysburg, Waterloo, or Marathon.—J. L. Hurlbut, D. D., in Pulpit Treasury.

Where Anarchy Comes From.

1. Anarchy is born in foreign lands and bred in American saloons.

2. If it cannot be strangled at birth by reason of the remoteness of its place of birth, it certainly can be rendered extinct by the removal of its breeding quarters on American soil.

3. The saloon has forced the erection of the almshouses that dot nearly every city in the United States.

4. The saloon has produced the rags that clothe every drunkard's child.

5. The saloon has placed the lines of care that are worn upon the face of every drunkard's broken-hearted wife.

6. The saloon created the bombs that gave Haymarket Square a place in history, and its subsequent horrors upon the scaffold. Not content with its conquests, the saloon sighs for more worlds to conquer, and turns its eye upon the national capitol. Shall the thinking men submit to dishonor that the crime-abetting saloon be saved?—American Magazine.

THE BIBLE IS TRUE.

At Babylon, Col. Rawlinson found the very hunting diary of Nebuchadnezzar! In it here and there are portraits of the old king's dogs sketched by himself, and underneath is written the king's name. It is wonderful. But the most wonderful of all is, that in the diary he records that he had been very ill, and in the delirium of his sickness he thought he had been out to graze like the beasts of the field! Now read God's Book, Dan. iv. 32, and so on. It says he did thus go out senseless and beast-like to eat grass seven times (years). And to think that twenty-five hundred years afterward, as if to sternly rebuke unbelief of the Holy Word, the clay plates excavated from the ruins of the king's ancient capital should confirm this old book of the prophet Daniel. It is the Book of God.—D. T. T., in World's Crisis

COMFORT.

Lesson Chapter, Psa. lxxi. 21.

"Thou shalt increase my greatness and comfort me on every side. Comfort to cheer under affliction or depression."

Who has promised comfort? The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because the Lord has anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to preach liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn. Isa. li. 3. I, even I, am he that comforteth you. Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort. 2 Cor. i. 3. Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts. 2 Thes. ii. 16, 17.

By these Scriptures we see that our Heavenly Father is the source of all comfort. But whom has he promised to comfort?

Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Isa. xl. 1. This is my comfort in my affliction, for thy word hath quickened me. Let, I pray thee, thy merciful kindness be for my comfort according to thy word unto thy servant. Psa. cxix. 50–76. Break forth into joy, sing together ye waste places of Jerusalem; for the Lord hath comforted his people; he hath redeemed Jerusalem. Isa. lii. 9. He has promised to comfort Zion. Zech. i. 17. Who comforteth us in all our tribulations, that we may be able to comfort them which are in trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God. 2 Cor. i. 4. Wherefore comfort yourselves together and edify one another, even as also ye do. Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. 1 Thess. v. 11–14.

Christ promised his disciples that he would give them another comforter, that he might abide with them forever; even the spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless, I will come again. John xiv. 16–18.

Paul, after exhorting the Thessalonians to faithfulness gives a brief description of the resurrection and second coming of Christ; with the promise that they shall ever be with the Lord, says, Wherefore comfort one another with these words. 1 Thess. xiv.

In short, "God is our comforter." He comforts his mourning church. He comforts those who mourn. The down-trodden and oppressed; the weary and distressed. Yea, he will save and comfort all who will put their trust in him.

Dear Restitution:

I cannot help writing again a few lines for the dear Restitution. Do you always respond so quickly and earnestly to every call for sympathy or help. You who have church to attend and brethren around you, can only dimly realize how lonely I have sometimes been. I have been flattered and coaxed and scolded to unite with the M. E. church two miles from here. Some of my best friends are Methodists and once I belonged to that church in my youth; but hearing the good tidings of the kingdom and learning that I was not naturally immortal, I united with the church at Indian Hill about thirteen years ago. The first one I ever heard preach the gospel of the kingdom was good old Uncle Joel Hayworth, long since asleep in Jesus; blessed sleep from which none ever wake to weep.

Many an hour has he sat in my father's house, the Bible on his knee, teaching us patiently and earnestly to rightly divide the word of truth. Though I joined the church and was baptized by Bro. Foore, 'twas no sudden conversion, but just obedience and a determination, God helping me, to be among the overcomers. I married and moved away from my church brethren and sisters, and husband not caring for them as I did, we didn't often meet. There is an old saying that God and one is a majority, and I never let the brethren know how we were getting along till my husband had learned at home from his Bible to believe as I did. No one but God know how earnest and determined I was that our house should not be divided against itself, for how can we raise our children right if parents differ. O do we realize as we should the importance of teaching our children in the Bible and sacred songs. Our home is quite a gathering place for the children in the neighborhood, being very near the school house. Often I have something interesting to read to them, and sometimes a new song to sing. (Sometimes my work gets neglected, but dishes and beds have to be done every day, and some of the little ones may never come again.)

But I took up my pen to write and thank the many friends who have sent me papers. Some did not give their names, others did not send their addresses, others sent letters and cards saying they would send papers if I would let them know. Don't send any more old papers at present. I have received thirteen packages averaging from two to twenty, and lots of tracts. I was glad to get them. A good many of our neighbors are reading and some of them are halfway believers now. O I do pray that before long some of them will be full believers. I have received letters from the church in Brooklyn, N. Y., Allegheny City, Pa., Dade Co., Mo., one from Lovelock, Butte Co., Cal., Scholl's Ferry, Ore., and one from a dear old school friend I had lost track of. She too is now resting in the blessed hope of a soon-coming Savior; she has moved back near enough that possibly we can visit in the spring when the weather gets warm enough. 'Tis only twenty miles away, near Lebo, Kan. Neither of us knew where the other lived, nor did I know she was a believer though her husband was I knew.

It gave me a great deal of encouragement and strengthened the cause here to think responses came so thick and fast from churches so widely scattered. It makes me sad to see the names of such men as Cook and Finn and realize that their letters will never appear in the paper. But I suppose their work is done and they rest from their labors.

I will answer all the letters I have received soon, and now wishing you all prosperity and happiness, and hoping, if our business prospers and the hand of disease is stayed, to soon have our names permanently enrolled as subscribers to The Restitution, we will close, as we don't want to crowd out something better. But remember, dear brethren who sent papers, and dear sisters, who sent letters (and papers to), the Bible says, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me." As a little boy is coming after papers this evening, I will have them to arrange and mark. I find people will read an article twice as quick with a few marks on it.

Dear Restitution:

You will please pardon my delay in sending you my renewal of The Restitution, as it was caused by circumstances which I could not control. I prize it next to my Bible. O, it rejoices my heart to read the letters from the dear brethren and sisters; it seems to me that they are growing better and better all the time. I feel quite lonely here, as there are none of like precious faith in this section that I know of, except my own family. If there are any I should like to have them send me their address as I would love to get acquainted with them. I would be very glad if some good teacher could come this way and wake up an interest here. There is plenty of sectarian preaching in this section but no gospel do you hear in any of it. When I look around and see the indifference of the churches to the coming of the blessed Redeemer, my heart yearns for the people, when the book says, if the blind lead the blind, they shall both fall into the ditch. May the Lord send more laborers into his vineyard, is the prayer of your brother,

John. B. Lent.

Dear Restitution:

Please publish that Sister Eliza J. Richardson died March, 14th, 1889, at the home of her son in Jamestown, Ottawa Co., Michigan, aged 70 years, 11 months, and 11 days. Sister Richardson embraced the gospel hope of immortality, eternal life and everlasting kingdom through the second coming of Christ and the resurrection of the just, about thirty years ago, in company with many others in Jamestown. This hope sustained and comforted her during all her trials and sufferings, until she fell asleep in Jesus, to wait "the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God," to wake her from the deep slumber of death. Her life has been characterized by Christian love, meekness, and a "patient continuance in well-doing, thus seeking for glory, honor and immortality." Her loss is mourned by a large circle of children and other relatives and her many friends by whom she was highly esteemed. But "they sorrow not as others who have no hope, for if Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." At her funeral the Sunday following, a large concourse assembled to show their respect for the deceased and to hear the great and precious promises of the Bible, in which she trusted, and which the writer endeavored to present. The following hymn was sung at the grave.

"Unveil thy bosom faithful tomb,
Take this new treasure to thy trust,
And give these sacred relics room
To slumber in the silent dust.

So Jesus slept, God's dying Son
Passed through the grave; and blessed the bed;
Rest here blest saint, till from his throne
The morning break and pierce the shade.

Break from his throne illustrious morn
Attend O earth his sovereign word
Restore thy trust; a glorious form
Shall then arise to meet the Lord."

To the Readers of "The Restitution."

On and after the first Sunday in May I shall be at liberty (D. V.) to preach for any churches who may need my services. I have been pastor of this church nearly seven years, and the work has not been unfruitful. I thank this people for their kindness. Any who may desire my help for a Sunday or two, or more, on or after the above date, will please address me at 6?? Lafayette Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Babyland

For April is here, overflowing with good things for the toddlers. With so many nice pictures and little stories and jingles suited to baby's eye and ear, the great popularity of this delightful magazine is not to be wondered at.

A word to the fathers and mothers: it would be difficult to suggest a way of investing fifty cents whereby an equal amount of pleasure can be given to the little ones. It is only fifty cents a year. Published by D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

Dear Restitution:

I have read your paper a little over a year. I find it very interesting as well as instructive to those seeking God. I heartily endorse all that was said and done at the General Conference. I am sure that it will be a success if those that are interested in the cause of Christ will work up to the plan. It was necessary that something should be done; it is high time that the brethren and myself were awaking out of this sleep or carelessness of the stewardship of God. We must stand firm at our post of duty toward God as we find it recorded in his book, and my prayer is that I may be found at my post doing the will of God, waiting for the King of kings in his glory.

Dear Ones of the Household:

The committee on Bible Lessons are anxious to know how the work already done has been received. Are the lessons being used? and in what localities? Has any one been blessed individually by their perusal? Has any dear learner been brought to a clearer conception of the truth by means of these lessons? We should be very happy to hear from the household, in regard to the matter, and also from any learners who have been benefitted by them. Send replies to The Restitution.

Wide Awake for March has several features appropriate to the Inauguration month: a charming adventure story, "How Nat Saw the Inauguration," relating to what befell a little fellow who walked into town from Alexandria to see President Cleveland take the oath of office four years ago; a reminiscence of the Harrison campaign of 1840, and a pretty little tale about Mrs. Harrison when she was a school-girl—these last two are in the department of "Men and Things." Daudet's pathetic Alsace-Lorraine story, "The Last Day at School," has been translated for this number by Mary Ferguson. There is an amusing Western story, "How Bess was Kidnaped," by Theodore Jenness, and a good outdoor story, "The Coon Hunt in Wheeler's Woods," by Rowland E. Robinson. Margaret Sidney's little Peppers are having a jolly time back at the "little brown house," while Mrs. Sallie Joy White, in another part of the magazine, tells "How the Blind Kindergarteners Read Five Little Peppers," the Pepper serial published several years ago. Mr. Trowbridge's "two Davids" are getting tastes of country and city life, each in a way hardly counted upon. Mrs. White, in her cooking paper, tells how the Boston Public School children are taught to boil cabbage "without smell" in the school-kitchens. Professor Starr writes about "Some Odd Fish" in his geological talks, and Prof. Mason describes the flying proa Queen Kapiolani sent to President Cleveland. There is a delightful article on "The Skylark," by Mrs. F. A. Humphrey; also a richly illustrated paper about "Pets in Literary Life," by Eleanor Lewis. The poems of the number are charming: "March Bugles," by Mrs. Whiton-Stone; "In a Glass House," by Agnes M. Lewis; "Capt. Carnes' Profitable Pepper," by John Albee, and others by M. E. B. and Clinton Scollard.

The department "Men and Things" is very full and rich in anecdotes and pithy talks. Wide Awake is $2.40 per year. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston.

If you want to prevent your hydrant from overflowing and filling the cellar, don't pay your water tax, take the money and buy a New Home Sewing Machine and the New Home Company will warrant the machine and guarantee that you will have no water.

Poetry.

PEACE ON EARTH, GOOD WILL TOWARD MEN.

The shepherds watched their flocks by night,
As stars shown down on hill and plain;
A sudden, strange outburst of light
Entranced each lowly shepherd swain.

The angel speaks: "Good news I bring,
For unto you in Bethlehem
Is born this day, the Savior-King,
To wear earth's richest diadem."

Then angel choristers appear,
As one strike all their harps of gold—
What music falls on mortal ear!
How sweet! as back the echoes rolled.

Words, suited to this richer strain
Than ever poured from human tongue,
Bore down to earth the glad refrain:—
Not mortals, but immortals sung.

"'Twas peace on earth; good will to men"
That trembled on the midnight air;
The Prince of Peace lay cradled there;
The answer to a nation's prayer.

In after years in Galilee
As teacher of the pressing throng,
He spoke of peace as yet to be,
When truth and right should conquer wrong.

On waiting ears the accents broke:
The chosen people heard the word;
Who, galled beneath the Roman yoke,
Had thought their freedom long deferred,

But centuries in their onward sweep
Have brought no peace to Judah's sons;
O'er loved Jerusalem they weep—
With lips confounded kiss her stones.

The fires of vengeance long have burned,
Against the hated exiled race,
Their pleas for pity have been spurned;
Their feet have found no resting place.

'Twas peace proclaimed at Bethlehem,
When angel song awoke the lyre;
Again, at old Jerusalem,
By Pentecostal tongues of fire.

But not alone to favored Jews;
The blest evangel spread abroad;
As far as Roman eagles flew,
The Christ-inspired apostle trod.

This peace on earth—rich heritage—
Still sounds above the clash of arms;
'Tis blazoned on the sacred page,
And thrown across the cloud of storms.

To martial strains the pulses beat;
And still is heard the bugle call;
The earth is tramped by soldiers' feet,
And thousands in the battle fall.

How long has raged the bloody strife
Of brother with his brother man;
And vengeance pitted life gainst life,
And stalked grim-visaged o'er the slain.

Yes, peace on earth! No sweeter sound
Could fill the ear, and move the soul;
Or make the sluggish pulses bound,
Where human passions spurn control.

Go, heralds of the living word,
The message bear to every clime;
The Prince of Peace the risen Lord
Is coming soon, the second time.

This time as judge of quick and dead;
To rule the world in righteousness:
The one exalted living head,
To whom must every tongue confess.

Then shall no more the battle-cloud
Arise from earth, to fill the sky;
Nor savage foes by thousands crowd
The carnival of death to die.

Report from J. W. Niles to Secretary National Conference.

NORTH BEND, West Va.

Dear Brother:

Your favor of the 12th inst. was received last evening. After reading it I felt like thanking God and taking courage, and the feeling has not worn off yet. I was not expecting encouragement in that substantial form so soon. Well I think our meeting in Philadelphia is likely to result in noble deeds of sacrifice and devotion to the cause of our Master. "Praise the Lord."

While climbing these high and rugged hills through mud and snow and sometime darkness I have at times felt depressed and as if I would about as lief be at rest even in the grave as toiling thus and so many difficulties to carry the good news of God's grace to these ignorant prejudiced people. But your letter has come to me like a gleam of sunshine through the clouds in a dark and gloomy day.

I see that my brethren sympathise with me and are disposed to aid me in my work. Brother, permit me to tell you some of the difficulties that beset my path.

First. I am not an easy, rapid, fluent speaker, like Bro. Ramsay and some others that we heard at Philadelphia. I have to make an effort to speak so as to interest an audience.

2. Years of toil and disappointment have robbed me of much of my youthful ardor and ambition.

3. I am away from my family and home, and have to sleep wherever I can get a place, sometimes with cold feet; and it is not pleasant to have to get up in a cold night in a strange place and go out of doors, perhaps from a chamber, or else suffer perhaps half of the night.

These country people among these hills are not well prepared to entertain travellers, although they are kind and hospitable. I am laboring among the poor of this world, in order that some of them may be rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom which God has promised to them that love him.

4. I am in a country place, among rough hills and deep valleys where roads are circuitous and narrow, and mud abundant from side to side.

5. Among a people whose ignorance of the Bible is great, and whose prejudices are as adhesive to their minds as the red mud of their hills is to my shoes.

6. Houses in which to hold meetings are not always at my command. Church houses are few and far between, and under control of those inimical to the truth. The school houses are occupied at this season by schools, and many trustees object to meetings being held in them even on evenings, while the schools are being kept. But amid all these difficulties the truth is being proclaimed here and there are honest and good hearts ready to receive the word of the kingdom. In my last, I gave you a report up to the first of this month.

Feb. 1. In the evening I preached in a vacant house formerly occupied by Bro. Ralph Baker and family, near Bro. Wilcox. Had an audience of about 24 persons. Subject, Repentance. In that neighborhood reside the following brethren, viz: Stephen C. Wilcox and wife, Sarah; Hanan Wilcox, son of Stephen; Newton Wilcox and wife, Jane. There are two others whom I baptized years ago but they are of doubtful character. Here I will correct a mistake made in a former report concerning the number of the members of the church here. I cannot count up more than fourteen persons who are in the faith of the gospel here out of 28 baptized here. There were two others baptized who live in Washington, Pa. Some have fallen away from the faith, some hold the truth in unrighteousness, some have died in the faith. A few I have not seen yet since coming here this time. There may be fourteen real earnest Christians. I supposed before coming back that there must be about twenty. Now to go on with my report.

2. Went on foot a round about way to Cornelius Pearsons a circuit of about five miles. A few were invited into his small dwelling-house to whom I spoke on the New Birth.

Sund. 3. I spoke in Cornelius son's house to a few invited in there. It is but a little distance from Cornelius' house. Conversed a while on the Scriptures after dinner with two men who appeared interested. Went with Bro. Hanan Wilcox across the creek to Bro Baker's vacant house and preached there in the evening to about fifty persons on the New Birth.

Feb. 4, Eve. Preached there again to a still larger congregation.

Feb. 5, Hanan and I went over hills on foot 8 or 9 miles to Shirley, I having previously sent an appointment. Found that my card had been sent to a man living about two and a-half miles out of the place, and that no appointment had been given out. Shirley is a very small village. After I had given up preaching that evening having run around considerably to find whether an appointment had been given out there or in the district above and had settled down for the night a man came in and said some had come and wanted to hear me. I signified my willingness to preach, and he went out.

After a little it was evening, I went with others to the school house where perhaps fifty persons gathered, and preached on the kingdom. One of the trustees had objected to any more than one or two meetings being held there on account of the school, so I gave out no more appointments then. Went back with my host and staid over night. The next morning after breakfast, Hanan and I went across the creek to see the man who ought to have received my card: found him, Mr. Sam. Underwood, and he went out and got out an appointment for me in the school house in his district. We went to that house in the evening and I preached to a good audience. Had to walk about a mile to get there. Told the hearers I could stay till Saturday if they wanted to hear me. One of the trustees objected to my having the house on account of the school. I began to sing "Am I a soldier of the cross," having first said "I can preach in a private house." While I was singing, another trustee went to the first one and said something to him. When I stopped singing, trustee No. 2 said they had concluded that I could have the house, so I announced a meeting for the next evening. Trustee No. 2 took me to his house and gave me a supper. His name is Wm. Sandy. His house is handy to the school house. He kept me every night till Saturday. No further objection was made to my having the house; had there been Mr. Sandy would have opened his house. I had a good audience the next evening, also Friday evening. Friday evening a man from Shirley heard me and desired me to come again and preach. He stopped at Mr. Sandy's and talked with me till 10 o'clock p. m. He gave me his address so that I can write to him and he got out an appointment for me.

Friday, I visited Mr. Underwood and talked with him and wife and read Scripture. He appeared much interested. Hanan went home Thursday. Saturday Mr. Sandy saddled two horses and took me about five miles on my way to Bro. Wilcox.

In the evening preached to a good audience in Bro. Baker's vacant house on Acts iii. 19-29. Bro. Sam. Grim was present. Sunday forenoon at 10 we had a meeting of brethren. There were present Stephen Wilcox and wife, Hanan, Newton Wilcox and wife, Sr. Baker, and Bro. Grim. I set before them the duty of Christians, to meet together for worship and mutual edification. Bro. S. Wilcox, Bro. Grim and Sr. Baker spoke and spoke well. There were a few others present. In the evening I preached to a large audience for the place on the judgment, Acts xvii. 30, 31. Evening of the 11, preached in the same place on the Hope of eternal life. Audience not so large.

Feb. 12, Went on foot about two and a-half miles to visit Bro. Asbury Shuman. He is troubled with rheumatism; has not given up the faith; but needs rousing up. I went back to my appointment. In the evening preached on Gal. iii. Audience about the same as the previous evening.

Evening of 13th, preached on the Thief on the Cross, by request. Audience smaller. Eve of 14th, preached on Rich Man and Lazarus, by request. Audience about the same as the evening before.

Feb 15, visited two of my hearers, Thom. Shuman and wife. She said they talked of joining my church; appeared much interested in the truth. He was brought up by Bro. Levi Shuman, who with his wife, was one of the first who obeyed the gospel here. They are dead. Thomas was making seats for a meeting in his house. I thought it best to have it in the school house which is about half a mile distant. Mrs. Shuman who attends the school went to the school house and gave out the appointment. In the evening I preached to quite a congregation on the work of Christ as Priest.

Feb. 16, Bro. Hanan in the afternoon went with me to my appointment about 6 miles. We rode horseback. In the evening I preached in the Jorm's school house to a good audience, on the connection between the Old and the New Testament Scriptures. Bro. Grim was present. A widow woman invited us to her house.

Feb. 17, Sunday p. m. preached on God's promise to Abraham, to a larger audience. Eve. Preached to a still larger audience, on David's throne and kingdom, proving Jesus to be the heir of it. Enquired if I could have the house for further meeting. Two trustees were present, Wesley Waters and Mr. Hurse. Waters said so far as he was concerned we could have the house. Mr. Hurse did not object. No one objected. So I announced an appointment for the next evening. Wesley Waters took me home with him about a mile distant.

Waters is a son of John Waters who is a Campbellite minister bitterly opposed to the truth. This is a Campbellite neighborhood. Wesley does not belong to the church. He believes much as I do; is intelligent: had a good visit with him. His brother Leonard who lives with his father appears to agree with us.

Feb. 18, Preached on blessing the nations in Abraham and Christ. Bad night, congregation small. An ignorant elder of the church encountered me rather roughly. Stayed that night among ignorant believers in sprinkling and immortal soulism. Talked to them with little effect. Cold night, slept in a cold room with cold feet.

Feb. 19, Read a book on Rantism-sprinkling about half through. Sick of the place went to another place in the afternoon where I felt more at home.

Eve. Preached in school house again on the relation of the church to the kingdom. Had a good audience, gave out an appointment for the next evening and dismissed. Then Mr. Hurse objected to my going on with the meetings, on account of the school. Wesley Waters replied to him and declared that he would open the house. Angry words were uttered by H. Samuel Grim was present and we thought best not to go on. We staid at the widow's that night. She belongs to the "Christian Church," is intelligent.

GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICE.

THE CHRISTIAN HYMNAL

The above is the title of a New Hymn Book just issued from THE RESTITUTION office, containing 168 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, printed on fine paper, from good clear type. Music on every page, followed by two to four sets of words that go to the music, making over 400 hymns. To this is added 23 pages of Hymns for Children to use in Sunday Schools or at home. We want some good brother or sister in every locality to take this work in hand and introduce it to the friends in your neighborhood. Will every minister of our faith please send us the name and address of some good, energetic worker in each congregation where he labors.

Price 35 cents each; 3 copies for $1.00; 6 copies for $2.00; 12 copies, $4.00. Special rates to congregations wishing larger quantities to place in churches, or to those who will act as agents and introduce the work in their neighborhoods.

Feb. 20, Went to North Bend about two miles distant, but nearer to the Wilcoxs'. The Jaem's school house is about 4 miles from where Bro. Samuel lives. I had already seen one of the trustees of the North Bend School who expressed a desire to have me preach there. I found him and the other trustee coming in his consent was obtained: and it was agreed that on Friday evening I should preach there. I went over the creek—Middle Island—to Cornelius Pearsons about two miles distant.

Feb 21, Eve. Preached in George Pearson's house to a few on Redemption. Cornelius still intends to be baptized. He is improving slowly.

Feb. 22, Eve. Preached in North Bend School house, on salvation. Had a good congregation. One of my hearers took me home with him, and we talked on Bible subjects.

Feb. 23, I went to Hanan Wilcox, changed clothes, and returned to place of meeting. Eve. Preached to a large congregation on immortality as brought to light in the gospel. I had taken some cold and was hoarse, yet after I dismissed the meeting a Protestant Methodist preacher and several others made an attack on me with questions about infants, etc., and kept me there a long time till my feet got cold; the house being cold. Samuel was present. My main opponent was the preacher, Mr. Rogers. I said we might have a regular discussion. He did not seem inclined. One of the hearers took me and Sam. about a mile to his house. He appears much interested in my preaching.

Feb. 24, Sunday morning doctored for my hoarseness, but in vain. Went to the school house where a large congregation gathered, tried to preach, but could not, so Bro Samuel preached on the promises to Abraham; after which Mr Rogers spoke a little while and gave out an appointment for the afternoon. I followed with a little history of treatment in the same district 29 years ago at the hands of another minister who publicly abused me. In the afternoon we heard Rogers. He tried to prove endless torment from the Rich Man and Lazarus. "Everlasting punishment," "The smoke of their torment ascendeth forever and ever." His audience was smaller than it was in the forenoon. His voice was more powerful than his arguments. I gave out that I would reply in the evening if I could speak; if not Samuel was to speak. I doctored for my hoarseness with little effect that afternoon. A large congregation came out in the evening to hear me I suppose, but I could not speak. Samuel spoke on David's throne. I am to reply to Rogers next Tuesday evening if I can speak. A Campbellite took me home with him and treated me kindly.

Feb. 25, This morning my voice has partially returned and I think that the anxious people will hear me Tuesday evening. Pray for me. Your brother battling for the truth.

FOUR NEW STATES.

South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana, Washington.

On February 22, 1889, the President signed the bill creating South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington states of the Union.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—The great Prairie State, to which the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three main lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown, and Sioux Falls. Go to South Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat; whose healthful climate nurtures the most vigorous and brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states; the soil of whose fertile prairies is richer than the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Minot and Devils Lake land districts invite the home seeker to secure a free home. Magnificent daily train service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devil's Lake, Bottineau, and all other important points.

MONTANA, THE GOLDEN.—Treasures in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 4,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile fields, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal; which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate, caused by warm winds from the Pacific. The St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only railroad passing through a contiguous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountains. It runs through the Great Reservation of 18,000,000 acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wood, water and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls, with its 1,000,000 horse-power cataracts; immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free lands through Helena, the capital city and commercial centre of Montana, and Butte, the richest mining camp on earth, to San Francisco by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta Route, or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars, and free colonist sleepers of its own from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is also the shortest line to Butte.

WASHINGTON.—The country of tall timber, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers en route for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass through Fort Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without change or delay. Distance to the Pacific Coast is same as by other lines; but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXVIII. Read X PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 10, 1889. NO. 14.

THE RESTITUTION

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

"THE PILLAR AND GROUND OF THE TRUTH." 1 Tim. iii. 14, 15.

May the Lord bless you in listening, and me in speaking, on the following words, 1 Tim. iii. 14, 15, "These things I write unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly; but if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth."

Time compels me to be brief, and I propose to confine myself to the last clause, relating to the house of God, the church of God, the pillar and ground of the truth; and will consider these words under the following heads:

1. The duty of the church in regard to God's truth.

2. The manner in which it is to support the truth.

3. The consequences of not supporting the truth.

First, the duty. When we speak of God's truth, or the truth, we wish you to understand we mean the truth by which we are saved, by which we are sanctified, or set apart for God's use or service and glory; not all the truth there is in the world, historic, scientific or otherwise, but the subject matter of the faith by which we are saved. I cannot at this time prove what God's truth is, but only enumerate some of the salient points of truth around which we have rallied, and which is graven so prominently on our banner as the one faith, the foundation of the one hope.

What is it that distinguishes us from the entire religious world besides? It is the one faith, the bare mention of which brings vividly to the mind of the live brother or sister, the only set of promises Jehovah ever made. It [illegible] too, that in its espousal [illegible] all other faiths as [illegible]less. What Jehovah [illegible] as the one faith, excludes [illegible] others. Underlying all necessity for faith is the fact of man's forfeiture of life and condemnation to death. This is the disease the Great Physician has prescribed for. And we have all been mentally, just where we can appreciate God's remedial scheme. I mean to say, we all understood what the matter was before we could appreciate the remedy. Secondly, we have believed the great covenants of promise respecting the land to Abraham and his seed the Christ; about the throne pledged to David's Son, the woman's seed, and Son of God, and that he is to reign over the house of Jacob forever, in their own land, and be king over all the earth; and that all who are of faith are to be blessed with Abraham as joint-possessors of that world-wide and everlasting kingdom, which includes eternal life through Jesus and the resurrection; and that the title to all this is obtained by reformation of life, immersion into the name for the remission of sins, and a godly life.

We have not only believed these as great truths, but as essential truths, as the gospel, the power of God unto salvation. We understand that belief of the truth very briefly outlined, and obedience to the same, constitutes one a member of the Church of God that Timothy belonged. These promises are so simple, so condensed in form, so adapted in their parts to each other, and form a chain just the length to land us in the age of promised glory; and they are brought down to the moderate capacity. Our text informs us that the church or congregation of God is the pillar and ground, support or stay of the truth. But the question may be asked, why does God's truth need support? Will not the truth of God hold its own against error? I answer truth is not dependent on the opinions or support of any man, or community of men. But the truth of God contemplates an aggressive mission, conducted on moral principles against minds alienated from the life of God through ignorance, minds so morally calloused that they need a representation of the truth in the lives of its believers, just as ideas are imparted to children by pictures—minds that need to be reasoned with out of the Scriptures [illegible] they can appreciate the truth. This is the work of the church. The whole body of believers are the very stay of the truth against the thinkings of the flesh.

Secondly, the manner in which the truth is to be supported. By not giving good heed to the subject many avenues of usefulness may never be frequented. The first way is by living the truth. The first thing to impress the mind of an unbeliever in favor of the gospel is the consistent life of its advocates, and disinterested earnestness manifested on his account. The life of the advocate is vigorously dissected, and if aught be discovered that is out of harmony with the doctrine taught, the whole is discarded. I admit this is not fair, but it is an excuse of the fleshly mind that is easily framed for not examining the merits of the doctrine itself. Hence the Master has said, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Matt. v. 16, "Walk in wisdom toward them them that are without, redeeming the time." Col. iv. 5. Walking in wisdom, you observe, is effective service; it is effective, powerful preaching, powerful support of the truth. Secondly, the truth should be supported by an uncompromising opposition to error. I would to God I could arouse every energy of your mind to realize the importance of this. I want you to feel the responsibility of knowing God's truth. It is true that love is the motive power of the gospel. It is true that love is of God. It is true that the more Godlike we become the more lovely will our characters and dispositions appear. But love must be formed on a proper basis. All love of all things at all times is not good, because it is love. The love of that which is good is proper, such as the principles of truth, is proper; but love at the sacrifice of truth is not proper. Truth is paramount to everything else. Truth even takes precedence of peace. First pure, then peaceable, is the order. "The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable." James iii. 17.

God, then, has been pleased to appoint that a knowledge of the truth, and obedience to it shall constitute the means of salvation that are put into the hands of man. And every obedient believer is placed as a sentinel to guard the citadel of truth. Says Paul in Gal. i. 8, "Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel than we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. There is no sickly sentimentalism here; no milk and water mixture here. Now please turn to 2 John ix 10, "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of the anointed, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of the anointed, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine (of the anointed) receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed," or wish him well. I quote this to show you God's rules of etiquette. You need not talk to me about rudeness and discourtesy and what not. We propose to do an unpleasant duty as pleasantly as we can, but we will make no compromise with error. Well may John say in view of the fearful responsibility of countenancing error, in the preceding verse to this: "Look to yourselves that we love not these things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward." In Eph. v. 11, we read as follows: "And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." The context shows this to be a darkness caused by the absence of God's word which giveth light. In the same connection (v. 6) the apostle places this matter beyond all question by this injunction: "Let no man deceive you with vain words, for because of these things the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience." Vain words, mark you, empty, worthless, idle, unreal, shadowy, delusive, trifling, fruitless words or works, they are darkness; there is no light in them. "Be not therefore partakers with them, for ye were formerly darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord."

Brothers and sisters, the Spirit's message to you is, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." Will you heed it? Unfruitful! Unfruitful!! A whole lifetime devoted to a system of falsehood yields no fruit worth the name,—a melancholy thought. There's someone here thinks I am going too far now. I am getting uncharitable. True charity demands a true statement of the facts. And if you have an idea that sincerity in error will do about as well as truth, I beg you to listen to the words of Jesus, Matt. xv. 7-9, "Ye hypocrites, well did Esaias prophecy of you, saying, this people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. But in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men." Never say acceptable worship can be rendered without truth, after that. It is vain worship.

The way of life is narrow, as I have often told you, and few, said Jesus, there be that find it. "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me." Human nature must stand aside when the doctrine of the anointed is concerned. "Let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ, that whether I come and see you or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, that ye stand fast in one spirit." Do not falter, nor waver, nor grow careless through contact with fleshly minds, but as the apostle adds, "stand fast in one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the gospel." Phil. i. 27. Here one spirit, one mind, and a striving for one faith and one gospel are enjoined. Is it not self-evident that there must be a unity of faith in the gospel before there can be a united strife for the gospel? And can they reasonably be enjoined to have one mind and one spirit if they have a number of faiths? To me it is the most ridiculous nonsense to talk about uniting a number of people as a church on the principle of love if they all have different faiths. What kind of love do they propose to unite upon? Is it in the love of God they meet? If so, why do they love God? Has he made some gracious promises to them, or has he done something that exhibits his love to them, and they love him in return? Then they must all believe what he promises or else they would not all love him. So that they really unite in or on one faith after all. But if they do not believe, or will not agree as to what has been done or promised, I deny that they have any love even to unite them, and any such union is a farce.

It is attempted on all sides to make a broad way out of a narrow way. But it must be evident to you that the Philippians were to maintain the faith at all hazards, for he tells them in the very next verse that they must not be terrified at their adversaries, nor to be afraid of their brow-beating or sophistry, or attempts to flatter the Almighty into a broader or deeper policy than he has seen fit to adopt. "For," says he, "unto you it is given in the behalf of the anointed, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake." It is nonsense to talk about suffering for Christ if there be no faith of Christ to unite upon. If an elastic band is to encircle us we can avoid the suffering very easily; it will stretch and make room for us wherever the pressure is greatest. Brethren and sisters, the spirit here plainly directs you to vigorously co-operate in defence of the one faith, regardless of consequences. It may entail, nay, it will entail, suffering for Christ's sake. Will you prepare for it? Will you meet it vigorously, manfully, confidently, joyfully? You remember that in the apostle's charge to the elders of Ephesus, Acts xx. 23, he told them that he knew grevious wolves would enter in among them, not sparing the flock, who would speak perverse things and draw disciples after them, win others to their perverse way of thinking and acting. Perverse means that which has been perverted, or turned aside from right to wrong.

I apprehend that your danger would not lie in allowing a Papist or a Mormon to enter in among you to scatter the flock. No, in order to deceive you the wolf would have to be covered with a pretty sleek sheep skin. The [illegible] counterfeit resembles a genuine bill, the more dangerous is it. I want to impress this upon your minds: our Father is exacting in two particulars, purity of life, and purity of faith! I say it with all solemnity, there can be no purity of life without purity of faith. It is as unreasonable to think of developing what the Scriptures regard as a pure life without a knowledge of the truth, as it would be to think of erecting a sound substantial edifice out of rotten timber. Some people are naturally amiable, and in the opinion of men, spotless; but if God has arranged that they shall be sanctified through belief of the truth, and they refuse the truth when it is presented to them, and think they have piety and good feeling enough to furnish them with a passport without truth, they are guilty of the most heinous crime. They make God a liar and take liberty with his plans.

You have a high calling of God, in the anointed Jesus; be zealous of it. To show you that what a man claims to be has nothing to do with it, I refer you to Rev. iii. 9, "Behold I will make them of the synagogue of satan, which say they are Jews but are not, but do lie; behold I will make them to come and worship before thy feet." Observe that the Lord Jesus regards his faithful ones as Jews. They are Jews if they are his brethren. He was born to be King of the Jews. I do not mean that they are Jews in the flesh, but Israelites indeed, Jews inwardly. See Rom. ii. 29. No one can be a Jew inwardly, without a knowledge of, and faith in, and obedience to the gospel of the anointed, which is the gospel of the kingdom, which is the kingdom promised to the little flock. Our heavenly constitution tells us what to do in the promises. In 1 John iv. 1 we are told to "believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God[illegible] things. 1 Thess. v. [illegible] soon as [illegible] Jesus, "that [illegible] exhortation. He cautions them [illegible] yes; good [illegible] evil com[illegible] to give [illegible] thee, [illegible] asketh you a reason [illegible] hope that is in you with meekness any fear. This injunction demands an obedience as thorough and complete as any other, or it would not be given at all. As there is but one Scriptural hope that in the nature of things must grow out of one faith, and one faith must take hold on one set of promises; and whoever has that faith can give his reason for it, that is, tell how and why he has it, viz, because God has promised it, and he has complied with the terms, and this constitutes him an heir of the blessings promised. This is the touchstone of truth; apply it. If they can show no reason for their hope it is to be taken for granted they have no hope, or else a hope of something that God has never promised; and if God has not promised it, it will never be realized. They are in the darkness spoken of, and darkness is unfruitful; have no fellowship with such; for if being made free from sin and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, the end will be everlasting life. Rom. vi. 22.

Our text shows that the church is the pillar and ground of the truth. This is its collective and associative office or work. It is a striving together not single-handed. This is the most economized use of power; there is strength in union of effort. And to give one more proof of what the church is to unite its efforts for, I briefly notice the third and fourth verses of the epistle of Jude, "Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints." Jude was not writing as a pastime, or as a compliment; it was needful, and when he says that you may depend upon it there was something the matter. What was it? Here is his answer. "For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, turning the favor of God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ." These creepers in must have pretended to have been in the faith. The brethren had either been lax in their zeal for the faith once delivered to the saints, or had been deceived by good feeling. The result was those who had stealthily crept in now stealthily insinuated another gospel, another faith, or perhaps no faith at all. This condition of things it was that made it needful for Jude to write them. He wanted to correct this condition of things, so he exhorts them to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. No indication of a compromise, or of a union on the principle of love, and dodge the question of faith because no two of them believed alike.

They were to contend earnestly, not in a half-hearted, listless way, but earnestly; there was something at stake; something was slipping away from them. The earnest contention was not for good feeling, but for the faith. If they have living, active faith in God it works by love, and purifies the heart, and where there is purity and love the good feeling will take care of itself. The earnest contention was not only for faith, but for the faith, the faith once delivered to the saints; not a different faith at different times. First, last and all the time it is the faith, not a faith. It is self-evident that if men cannot unite or agree on the faith, they have not learned the A B C of the gospel. And not having believed the gospel themselves they cannot teach it or contend for its faith. In these days when the Bible is being teased aside for science, falsely so called, and skepticism abounds on every hand, I call upon you to take a resolute stand for the faith. Fight the good fight of faith, not of good feeling; if you do not, you will go with the drift down the stream of don't-knowism, and no-faithism and sensualism; and the end of these things is death.

I now hastily show the consequence of not supporting the truth, and con[illegible] for the faith. I refer to [illegible] ii. 12-16. "And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write these things saith he which hath the sharp sword with two edges. I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is; and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth." I tell you brethren this is a noble record! They had held fast the name. They had not denied the faith of Jesus, and even when one of their number had been martyred for a witness of the truth, they stood by him nobly at the hour when they did not know whose turn would come next. I could almost envy them their record. But listen! The blessed Jesus has something more to say than this. Hear what he says, "But," notwithstanding the record they had made, "I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam who taught Balac to cast a stumbling block before the children of Israel, to eat things offered unto idols, and to commit fornication. So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes which thing I hate." Repent! Repent of what? Repent of allowing false brethren to teach falsely; or what will the consequence be? Repent, or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth. He that hath an ear to hear let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches. Do not think it a light matter to tolerate error after this.

Brethren and sisters remember the Master looks to the church as the pillar and ground of the truth. We have a blessed hope based upon the promises of God, and his love has devised the plan for putting away sin and of obtaining life beyond the grave so that we can inherit the blessing, even life forevermore in his glorious kingdom. May you all cherish it more and more; and while contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, endeavor to do it kindly but earnestly, unflinchingly and uncompromisingly, and then you will assuredly hear him say, "Well done, good and faithful servants, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." That that day may soon come and end the strife is my earnest prayer. Amen.

IS THE CHURCH THE KINGDOM?

Many church people think that they are now in the kingdom of God—that when they were converted and joined the church they entered the kingdom. It is rather strange that they should entertain such an idea. They cannot have got it from the Scriptures, for they do not teach it. The words Church and Kingdom are not synonyms—they are words conveying different and distinct ideas and meanings.

The English word Church is from the Greek word ekklesia, which means, called out, and is correctly applied to any body or assembly, which has been called out,—whether secular, political, or religious—organized or unorganized. See Acts xix. 32. 39. 41, where the word is translated assembly, and applied to a rabble, or an illegal gathering of people. Also Acts vii. 38, where Stephen applies it to the congregation of Israelites in the wilderness. The word Kingdom is from the Greek word basileia, kingdom, the dominion of a king; implying a king, territory, government, laws, subjects; and is used alike whether referring to human or divine governments. This word basileia occurs 160 times in the New Testament; and the word ekklesia 115 times, and they are never used interchangeably.

Let us examine a few passages of Scripture where there is a marked distinction made between the Church and the Kingdom. Then, notice

1. That persons may be in the Church and yet be out of the Kingdom. In proof of this point, read Acts xiv. 21, 22. "And when they (Paul and Barnabas) had preached the gospel to that city, (Derbe,) and had taught many, they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch, confirming the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God. Again, [illegible] xiv. 7-11, we read [illegible] Paul, and his fellow-laborers in the gospel, working for or unto the kingdom of God. And Paul was confident that the Lord would deliver him from every evil work, and preserve him unto his heavenly kingdom, 2 Tim. iv. 18. Those persons to whom the apostle Peter addressed his second letter, were in the church, having obtained like precious faith with the apostles through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ; and yet in order to have an entrance administered unto them into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they were exhorted to make their calling and election sure, by adding to their faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly-kindness, charity. In this way, the members of the church are to be prepared for the kingdom,—a future kingdom, 2 Pet. i. 5-11.

2. The church is composed of disciples of Christ, and they constitute "the little flock," to whom, it is the Father's good pleasure to give the kingdom, Luke xii. 32. He does not give them the church, composed of themselves,—but the kingdom.

3. The church is a present institution composed of believers of the gospel, who have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered them; while the kingdom is a future religio-politico administration of the affairs of Israel and the nations, after the return of Jesus Christ from the heavens. See Acts xvii. 31; iii. 20, 21; Eph. i. 10; Rev. xi. 15.

4. The church has been called out and selected from the nations as a people for the name of the Lord, Acts xv. 14, through faith in and obedience to the gospel, Mark xvi. 15, 16. A believer enters the church by a birth of water, or immersion into the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, John iii. 5; Acts ii. 38, 41. But the kingdom, being future, can only be inherited or possessed by those having a title to it. "Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, heirs of the kingdom which he has promised to them that love him," James ii. 5. "F[illegible] blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," 1 Cor. xv. 50, that is, persons in a mortal state. Hence it is necessary for a believer who has already been born of water to be also born of spirit in order for him to enter into the kingdom of God, John iii. 5. A physical, as a moral change, is absolutely essential to the everlasting possession of the kingdom—a change like what Jesus experienced when he was raised from the dead, and became the first-born among many brethren to an immortal life.

5. The church is on probation in the present state, and is called upon to be faithful, and to suffer for and with Christ. The kingdom is the place of reward; for the promise to the faithful, suffering disciple of Christ is, Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life," Rev. ii. 10; "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with Father on his throne," Rev. iii. 21. "Rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad with exceeding joy," 1 Pet. iv. 13; Rom. viii. 17; 2 Tim. iii. 12. All of these promises imply a kingdom, crown, throne, rulership, and immortality with Christ, as a reward, in the future.

B. WILSON.

Chaplain McCabe's Advice to the Pope.

I wonder if the Pope would receive a little counsel from a Methodist preacher? If so, here it is: Be quiet, old man! The world has slipped by you. The nations that are free from your yoke will never put it on again, and they mean to see that all nations, and kindreds, and tribes, and tongues shall have the same liberty they enjoy. "Peter, put up the sword." The Master told you that long ago. You have used that sword more against the friends than against the foes of Christ. The nations built upon the truth of God have grown too mighty for your control. You cannot convince [illegible] for you have no argument, no logic, and no success in nation-building to enforce the sophistry of what you call argument. You cannot compel them, for the military power of the world has passed into Protestant hands. The effort to regain it for Rome has cost you dear. Remember Maximilian and the Empire of Mexico. Austria has had her Sadowa; France has had her Sedan. Buy no more such wisdom at such a price. Neither France, nor Spain, nor Portugal, nor Austria, nor Mexico, nor the South American Republics, nor all combined, can restore to your feeble hand the fallen sceptre of the Papal States. The attempt to do that will seal the doom of the Papacy in Rome itself.

The causes you bless have been cursed, and the causes you curse have been blessed. Heaven fails to ratify either your anathemas or your benedictions. The stars in their courses fight against you. The breath of life has been breathed into the nations. The pandemonium of Rome must give place to the kingdom which is not of this world. Be quiet, therefore. Fall into line! Give the people the Bible. Ask the next Council to take back its silly decree of Papal infallibility, which every sensible man on earth ridicules. You are nothing but a man, and you know it; and all the fawning flattery of the world cannot make you believe that you are anything more than a poor, ignorant mortal like the rest of us. What is the use of keeping up this comedy any longer? Three hundred years ago when the Armada sailed it was high tragedy. Times have changed, and it is getting to be low comedy now. Three hundred years ago there were only 7,000,000 of English-speaking people; now there are 110,000,000 of them, and as sure as the sun shines in heaven this race will victoriously preserve civil and religious liberty for themselves and for all mankind. Be quiet! The soul of John Huss is marching on!

Note of Request.

Will Bro. Almus Adams, please write to S. Roxena Wines, Pierceton, Ind, giving the distance from where he lives, to Central City, Nebraska? Should be glad also to hear from any other minister of our faith, living nearest to Central City. And if there is any one of the faith in that city will they please make it known, by writing to S. R. Wines, Pierceton, Ind.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

Plymouth, Indiana, April 10, 1889.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, Post Office, County and State plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co. Ind.

Remittances should be sent by Bank Draft, Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk: money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

Being absent at the death-bed of my father, is the reason for some delay in filling orders. All will be caught up and letters answered in a few days.

A. R. Underwood.

We were in error last week in saying that the Executive Board passed a resolution that Br. Rice should receive some money from the Evangelical Fund. It was to Bro. Niles that some money was appropriated. Depending on memory without consulting the Report of the meeting led us into the mistake. We attributed the delay to a want of knowledge as to his whereabouts, and not to any want of promptness on the part of any one of the Board. Our own fault was not consulting the report, but trusting to memory.

We have another article from Bro. M. Joblin for our next entitled—"The Gift of God, What is it?" We have also received two articles from Bro. J. H. Thomas, one on—"The Origin of Evil," and the other on the "The Origin of Sin." The one on "The Origin of Evil" will appear next week. These are timely essays on important themes and deserve a careful perusal, as they treat some grave questions regarding human destiny in a very able manner indeed. Papers like these will best meet the views of our readers generally.

We present our readers this week with a short article querying—What can we—What ought we to do? In presenting what we contemplate doing briefly, we have no design to theorize, but rather to state some theories that have been before the world [illegible] some counter views that are now being urged upon the thoughtful for consideration as "the ways of God to man." After having done this, the reasons for our duplicate question will be the better apprehended. As our readers desire comparatively short articles we subdivide our subject into parts.

For the present we are quite largely supplied with communications on what is now known as—The Larger Hope. As we have already commenced the insertion of one paper from Bro. T. L. Hawley, and as he seems to be perhaps as well qualified to set forth the reasons claimed to be sufficient to sustain that side of the question regarding the future of a large portion of our race, from his knowledge of the original languages, we conclude to insert another communication from his pen next week. It will bear the same heading as his former paper—The World's Crisis. While we are very far from believing in universal salvation, we do believe that redemption, in its final results, will embrace more that the Elect Church.

WHAT CAN WE—WHAT OUGHT WE TO DO?

Before attempting even anything like an imperfect answer to this question, let us briefly scan the condition of the human race, as a whole, from that sad day when man's disobedience brought sin into the world and death by sin, up to the present time, in order to learn something of the extent of that ruin, and the depth of that woe, that have involved the world of mankind. In doing this we shall meet with some awfully startling facts—facts that "touch many a modern mind to the quick, and well-nigh drive sensitive minds to despair." How often these "painful subjects have been dealt with in a dry, cold and mechanic style." How often disputants have employed "trim, academic, syllogistic paragraphs, indicating no genuine sympathy with human suffering, no anguish of soul, no mortal conflict, not even a manlike feeling towards our fellowmen, to finish off an argument attempting to justify the ways of God to man."

The race, as a whole, embraces all that lived before the flood; embraces all those earlier kingdoms and nationalities that have scarcely left a name for an epitaph behind; embraces all the great idolatrous nations of ancient and modern times, such as Chaldean, Assyrian, Babylonian, Median, Persian, Grecian, Roman, Egyptian, with all their populations; embraces the millions of China, India, Russia, and all the tribes of the dark continent, Africa; embraces all the Pagan and Mohammedan hordes, with the hundreds of millions that belong to the apostate Papal and Greek communions, and to other scarce less apostate bodies outside of Protestantism; and, finally, embraces all in Protestant lands having the mere form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; embraces all, all living "without God and without hope in the world." In totality embraces all that vast mass of humanity which may be for a given period estimated at 1,000,000,000 multiplied by the many successive generations that have come and gone like the vanished leaves of the departed autumns, till we have an aggregate of numbers so overwhelming that the mind falters and sinks under the burden of computation. All these, like ourselves, have had human hearts, human experiences, and human aspirations.

As parents and children, as husbands and wives, as brothers and sisters, as relatives and friends, all these have loved and been loved. Multitudes untold have been enslaved and oppressed out of measure, and have toiled in hunger and thirst. The famine has consumed myriads and myriads, and the pestilence millions and millions. The trumpet has summoned millions and millions more to the battlefield, to be mown down by the sword, as a prey to the mad ambition of kingly despots. To all the rest sickness came in its thousand killing forms, and the hearts ceased to beat, the red currents of life ceased to flow, and the multitudinous millions are turned to dust! Tried by any divinely revealed test—of law or of gospel—what, O what, shall we say? As almost all lived without God, and without hope in the world, have not nearly all—yes, nearly all—died in their sins! And this deep, wide, dark stream of destruction is rolling on and millions on millions are dying out of the world, dying out of our land, dying out of our neighborhood, alas! dying out of our own homes, dying out of Christ, dying in their sins, every year!

O, we think that a heart-moving parable that narrates the tender solicitude of the good shepherd who rested not till the one lost sheep out of a fold of a hundred, was recovered and safe at home. We are human, [illegible] strange [illegible] some hearts are [illegible] when contemplating that it may be that 990 or more out of every 1000 human beings have lived sinners and died sinners—nay, more, are so living and dying today? What was regarded as sound orthodox truth a few years ago, was, that all these numberless millions, a vast, vast majority of the race would be inevitably consigned to the unspeakable tortures of an eternal hell. Alas, how this horrible, God-dishonoring doctrine was once presented and discussed with all the nonchalance of a common metaphysical question. It was remarkable that the advocates of the doctrine generally saved themselves, and almost generally exempted their near and dear friends from a doom so dreadful.

On this cold, calculating spirit a late writer says: "Polemic divines are too busy in shaping their orthodox systems to feel much of the terrors of them; for men of blunted or dull susceptibilities are unable to fix their thoughts for any length of time on one subject, and are without imagination to realize the horrors they describe. Impassioned, eloquent men, if strenuously occupied with their oratorical labors, throw off on others, in their very eloquence, the fire that might have consumed themselves. Chemists show us that in the very centre of a flame that scorches everything about it, there is a cool and tranquil spot. The head of a college, zealous for the integrity of his doctrinal scheme; the popular preacher, whose very occupation is to diffuse the terrors he holds salutary, are personally safe. They, for the most part, will be very genuine, very busy, very laborious, and very calm believers."

The Bible has been found to afford no support to such cold, calculating, self-saving deductions. Orthodoxy itself has been smitten with dumbness. No wonder, for it is an awful calculus that, when worked out to solution, finds only a minimum fraction on the saved side of the equation, and, on the other side, the grand mass of humanity, left to be consigned to the tortures of an eternal hell. Just think of the conclusion; that in the day of judgment, and judgment doom, only a "little flock" are to enter the heavenly mansions of blessedness, while the multiplied millions and millions of each and of all generations are to go, soul and body, into excruciating agonies without end and without mitigation! Awful arithmetic! Tremendous doom! No wonder orthodoxy becomes dumb; no wonder humanity shudders; no wonder thoughtful ones express themselves on this wise: "To the modern mind there has come to belong an awful capacity of feeling, and a liability to intensities, both of suffering and enjoyment (the one as well as the other intellectual not sensuous), of which the bright, gay, surface-loving mind of antiquity seems to have known little or nothing. Then along with this power of feeling, striking, as it does, into the roots of the soul, there are perceptions, and instinctive judgments, of which it must be said that they are altogether modern developments of humanity; they are true elements of our nature, but they have been newly brought from the subsoil. It is to the slow working of Christianity upon human nature that I attribute nearly the whole of this deeper vitality of the modern mind."

There is another view of the destiny of this great mass of sinners that is infinitely preferable to this orthodox view, and so commends itself much better to the human conscience, and which is claimed to be perfectly Scriptural. According to this view the great mass of mankind are irretrievably lost, but lost in utter destruction of all being. Like the orthodox view in respect to resurrection and judgment, all these countless hosts of mankind, even all that have ever lived, are raised from the death state, and all appear personally before the Judge of all for sentence and doom. As a result it is claimed that the "holy blessed" alone will be immortalized and enter the life and enjoyments of the world to come, and that the mighty aggregate of humanity, which according to the orthodox view, went to a hell of torments eternal, are burned up soul and body, root and branch, in one vast holocaust, and in a consuming fire that reaches the foundations of the mountains, and melts the whole earth with fervent heat. While this view sustains the literal meaning of the Bible, that "the wages of sin is death," still humanity hesitates, pauses, and questions, and is likely to press the question, Is this the outcome of 6000 years of world-history? Surely it is a sad outcome, a frightful ruin, an awful arithmetic still. Should infants and a very few of the best adults be exempted, as sometimes claimed, still the ruin is enormously frightful, and, considering the mental activities characteristic of thinkers in this nineteenth century, it is not to be wondered at that the subject of human destiny should be made one of prominent importance.

TRUE, EVERY WORD OF IT.

I refer to the excellent, and very able article which appeared in The Restitution of April 31., from the pen of our beloved Editor, entitled "The Measure of Divine Love." I wish we might be favored with many such expositions, and I sincerely hope that he will favor us with the one promised, on "Motherhood and Sonship on the human side," ere long.

It does seem to me, that those who teach that Joseph, and not God, was the real father of Jesus, strike at the very foundation of the Christian system. If it is necessary to take our scissors and clip out of our Bibles the passages which speak so plainly of the birth, and origin of Christ, and then misinterpret and misapply all the remaining testimony bearing on the same subject, it is but a short road to infidelity and complete worldliness. How thankful we should be that the testimony is not that "God so loved the world that he gave the Son of Joseph, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." We think if our salvation had depended on a son of Joseph we should have found that this son needed a Savior himself, and we should have been still in the miry pit, without a helper. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, He hath provided us with a Mighty Deliverer, even the Son at his right hand.

Imagine, if you can, such passages as these: "And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he (the son of Joseph) that came down from heaven, even the son of Joseph which is in heaven."

"For God sent not the son of Joseph into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved."

"He that believeth on the son of Joseph hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the son of Joseph shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."

Can anyone see how belief in the son of Joseph will confer everlasting life any more than belief on the fleshly son of any other fleshly parent will?

May the Lord save his people, every one of them from believing so pernicious a doctrine as this, and may he open the eyes of those who have been led astray, and restore them to a knowledge of truth as it is in Christ Jesus.

Thomas Wilson.

Dear Restitution:

I feel that Bro. George Elton's publication in The Restitution of March 13th is of the right spirit, and that everyone who believes that life is only in Christ and that now is the day of salvation, should let their sentiments be heard, as this doctrine of a fair chance for all is doing much injury. "To Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not to seeds as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed which is Christ." "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." What if we are not Christ's? Then we are not Abraham's seed and we are not heirs according to the promise. Hence we are without Christ, "being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world." Eph. ii. 12; iv. 18.

From these quotations I would understand that we should now (not after death), become acquainted with the "covenants of promise," and that if we do not there is no hope, we are without God in the world. Should death overtake us in this condition, we then will be left in the grave. He that is in honor and understandeth not is like the beasts that perish. He that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregations of the dead. This is very plain language. The Scriptures foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. It does not say as some would have it that by Abraham and his seed shall all nations be blessed. Neither does it say the heathen will be justified without faith. But by one man sin entered into the world and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men." Jesus says [illegible] will not come to me that ye might have life. There is an abundance of Scripture to show that man is in a dead st[illegible] his doom. "Let the dead [illegible] There is al[illegible] ra[illegible] life [illegible] we ha[illegible] likeness of his [illegible] be also in the likeness [illegible] his resurrection." "If we be dead with Christ we believe that we shall also live with him." Rom. vi. 5, 8. Suppose we have not been planted together in the likeness of his death. I would say we shall not live with him. We are none of his. We are yet in our sins which we have inherited from Adam and unless we get in Christ and become one of Abraham's seed there is no hope, no promise, without God, as he does not hear sinners unless they come to him through faith and obedience. Life in Christ is conditional.

WALK.

"To go on the way; to go on; to step rightly; to go on habitually."

Golden Text. "Furthermore then we beseech you brethren and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk, and to please God, so ye would abound more and more." 1 Thess. iv. 1.

When we view the word "walk" from a Scriptural standpoint we find a basis for some thoughts which may stimulate us to a more thorough study of God's word. The word not only implies the steps we may take in our daily avocations, but it also implies that God is the director of all right-walking and pure conversation in daily life.

Paul in the golden text has admonished us how we ought to walk, and to please God, so we may abound more and more. It is our duty to enquire how we ought to walk.

Jesus, in John xii. 35, reminded the Jews to walk while they had light, lest darkness come upon them. He was the light; when he was withdrawn, they were left in darkness. Then the question arises,

Q. How shall we walk?

A. We are to walk by faith and not by sight. 2 Cor. v. 7. Walk honestly and circumspectly; for as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them and mercy, and upon the Israel of God. Gal. vi. 16.

Q. Where shall we walk?

A. In Isa. ii. 3 we are instructed to go to the house of the God of Jacob and he will teach us his ways and we shall walk in his paths. See also Matt. vii. 13, 14, where Jesus tells us to enter in at the strait gate, because the gate is wide and the way broad that leads to destruction, but strait and narrow that leads to life.

Q. How do we begin the Christian walk?

A. Rom. vi. 4: Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.

Q. Is the reward which God has promised to give to those who walk in his paths of sufficient importance to justify us in following the precepts laid down in the golden text? Let us see what the reward is.

A. For the wages of sin is death but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. The reward then is eternal life. Is it not worth walking uprightly to obtain?

Wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness and all her paths are peace, Prov. iii. 17, but the way of the transgressor is hard. Prov. xiii. 15.

Then let us as we have received Christ walk in him, Col. ii. 6; walk after the Lord, 2 Kings xxiii. 3; walk with the Lord, Gen. v. 22; vi. 9; walk after his commandments, 2 John 6; walk in the truth, 3 John 3; walk in his ways, Josh. xxii. 5; walk in the spirit, Gal. v. 16; not according to the course of this world, Eph. ii. 2; not in the counsel of the ungodly, Psa. i. 1; that we may walk safely, Prov. iii. 23; and surely, Prov. x. 9; and by and by walk with Christ in white, Rev. iii. 4; and sit with him in his throne, Rev. iii. 21.

HOW THE BIBLE IS SELLING.

The phenomenal sales of "Robert Elsmere," "Mr. Barnes of New York," and "Little Lord Fauntleroy" have attracted attention, yet there is one book, issued from one publishing house, the sales of which quadruple all these taken together. This book is the Bible. In the last year the Bible Society has sent out 1,326,672 copies, and in the seventy-two years of its existence it has issued nearly 50,000,000 Bibles, or, to be more specific, 49,829,563 copies. At present their presses print 4,000 copies a day, and the increasing immigration indicates that still larger demands will be made.

Within the last six years the Bible Society has undertaken to canvass the entire United States and to see that every family is supplied with a Bible. The work is done by States, and the reports of the agents present some curious statistics. Among these it appears that Maine is the most ungodly State in the Union. While in Texas, for example, "wicked neighborhoods have been transformed into orderly, peaceable communities, temperance promoted, and Sunday-schools fostered," and in Nebraska the miners and farmers are rejoicing, and "a growing interest is manifested on every hand," in Maine, on the contrary, there are more than seventy towns and plantations where religious services are seldom, if ever, held, and in the best towns the greater number of the people are seldom reached by any Christian influence beyond the Bible Society's agents.

The estimate from the various statistics of these State reports is that one out of every seven families of all the families visited are without the Bible, and that there are towns in which not a copy of the Bible can be found.

In this city the work has largely tended toward the laborers on the aqueduct, where the Bible Society has founded a wide field, and at Castle Garden. It is said scarcely an emigrant arrives in the country with a Bible. Accordingly, an accredited agent of the Bible Society finds work enough to do there alone. And the society finds some satisfaction in knowing that when the emigrant goes back, a few years after, he takes his Bible with him to the benighted lands over the sea.

Under the immediate supervision of the Bible Society it appears that the Bible is published, in addition to the English tongue, in German, French, Welsh, Spanish, Portugese, Danish, Swedish, Italian, Dutch, Hebrew, Greek, Latin, Arabic, Syriac, Russian, Hungarian, Bohemian, Polish, Gaelic, Irish, Finnish, African, including five dialects, the Zulus being amply provided, Sandwich Island, and Micronesian, Armenian, Slavic, Bulgarian, Chinese, Japanese, and in eight Indian dialects.

One of the experiments has been the publication of parts of the Bible for the Japanese in Roman characters, in the hope of introducing them in Japan, but our alphabet does not seem to have had the success that other American fashions and customs have had with the Japanese. The department of translation in which the society seems now to be most interested is the Spanish, and with a view to our increasing relations with Mexico.

The revised version, it seems, has been little more than a curiosity in this country. It is not published here at all, but is received through the English agency.

A probable reason outside of the reasons based on sentiment and association, which have proved powerful, is that by its charter the Bible Society is prohibited from publishing anything but the authorized or King James version.—New York Sun.

DEATH.

No sex is spared, no age exempt. Death comes equally to us all and makes us all equal when it comes. The ashes of an oak in a chimney are no epitaph of that, to tell me how high or how large that was; it tells me not what flocks it sheltered when it stood, or what men it hurt when it fell. The dust of great men's graves is speechless too; it says nothing; it distinguishes nothing. So when the whirlwind hath blown the dust of a churchyard into a church, and the man sweeps out the dust of the church into the church-yard, who will undertake to sift those dusts again and to pronounce: This is the patrician, this is the noble flower, and this is the plebian husk" Ah, it is true that a few friends will go and bury us; affection will rear a stone and plant a few flowers over the grave; in a brief period the little hillock will be smoothed down, and the stone will fall, and neither friend nor stranger will be concerned to ask which one of all the forgotten millions of the earth was buried there.

Every vestige that we ever lived upon the earth will have vanished away. All the little memorials of our remembrance, the lock encased in gold, or the portrait that hung in our dwelling, will cease to have the slightest interest to any human being. We need not look into the cemetery and see the ten thousand upturned faces; ten thousand breathless bosoms. There was a time when fire flashed through these vacant orbs; when warm ambitions, hopes, joys, and the loving life pulsed in those bosoms. Dreams of power once haunted those empty skulls. The little piles of bones that once were feet, ran swiftly, and determinedly through twenty, forty, sixty, seventy years of life, but where are the prints they left? He lived, he died, he was buried, is all that the headstone tells us. We move among the monuments, we see the sculpturing, but no voice comes to us to say that the sleepers are remembered for anything they have done. A generation passes by. The stones turn gray, and the man has ceased to be, and is to the world as if he had never lived.

He Changed Masters.

A young man changed masters. He entered into the service of the Lord Jesus. "Now," said he, "I shall give up smoking. It does not look right to be spending money in cigars which are of no real good to me, when the Lord has so much need of it to carry on the affairs of his kingdom."

He threw away his cigar and gave to good objects the money he spent in cigars. How much do you think it was a year? One hundred and fifty dollars. How can the children tell why it is that so many men, who smoke a cigar now and then, and occasionally take a glass of beer, never can afford to give a dollar to the minister or ever enough to pay for a good paper? I think that there would be a change if some of them would change masters as the young man did.

The Pansy for April brightens our table with its pretty cover. The contents are even more interesting than usual. Pansy (who is undoubtedly the most popular writer today of the best class of Sunday-school literature) edits the magazine, and several of the stories this month are from her pen. Margaret Sidney's serial is delightful reading. Altogether there are thirty-two pages of reading matter and pictures, besides several pages devoted to the Pansy Society, letters from the children, etc. The price is ten cents a number, $1.00 a year. D. Lothrop Company, Boston, will send a sample (back) number at half price.

My address is now 72 Old Hall Road, Sale, near Manchester, England.

Six more workers in Foreign Mission fields are yet to be provided with our paper for 1889. Who will pay for a paper to be sent to China, Japan, India, New Zealand, Italy, or Palestine?

DIED

Underwood.—At St. Charles, Ill, April 2, 1889, E. Underwood, aged 61 years and 3 months.

Mr. Underwood was born at Clapham, England, January 3, 1828. He married Maria Raggett at Brixton, England, January 21, 1849. He settled with his family in St. Charles May 5 1851, coming across the Atlantic in a sailing vessel which occupied seven weeks on the voyage. Mr. Underwood was employed in the Haines-Bunting mill about 33 years. He was engaged in farming, and worked on the old Air Line R. R. previous to engaging in mill work. He was a strictly upright, conscientious and industrious man, highly respected by all who knew him.

A member of the Church of England in early life, on hearing the good news of the Kingdom he immediately accepted of it, and after being baptized lived the remainder of his life a consistent Christian, and died in full faith that his rest will be short and his waking glorious.

Mr. and Mrs. Underwood reared a family of six children. Emma M. and Sara J. (both now dead); Arthur R., of The Restitution office, Plymouth, Ind.; Fred G., of Kansas City, Mo.; Frank M and Charles A., both of St. Charles, who with their mother are left to mourn the loss of a kind and indulgent father and husband. The funeral was held April 4th at the family residence, Benjamin Wilson, of California, officiating.—St. Charles Chronicle.

Will the churches of the Conference of Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin correspond with me, as the two sections have heretofore worked together. I want to hear from all, that a conference meeting may be appointed in June. Address me at Lanark, Ill.

Babyland

For April is here, overflowing with good things for the toddlers. With so many nice pictures and little stories and jingles suited to baby's eye and ear, the great popularity of this delightful magazine is not to be wondered at.

A word to the fathers and mothers: it would be difficult to suggest a way of investing fifty cents whereby an equal amount of pleasure can be given to the little ones. It is only fifty cents a year. Published by D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

Excursion to New York.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION OF THE INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT WASHINGTON, APRIL 29th AND 30th, 1889.

The Nickel Plate will sell excursion tickets to New York and return at extraordinary low rates, from all stations. This is the last of the Centennial Celebrations and will be one of the greatest occasions New York has ever participated in. Everything, as far as possible, will be done to copy the proceedings of a hundred years ago. Commanders of military organizations and excursionists desiring to take advantage of the low rates offered by the Nickel Plate, will find it to their advantage to consult agents of the Nickel Plate.

To the Readers of "The Restitution."

On and after the first Sunday in May I shall be at liberty (D. V.) to preach for any churches who may need my services. I have been pastor of this church nearly seven years, and the work has not been unfruitful. I thank this people for their kindness. Any who may desire my help for a Sunday or two, or more, on or after the above date, will please address me at 833 Lafayette Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Poetry

The Temple Not Made With Hands.

I saw a temple not made with hands
Standing on a sunlit plain,
'Twas white as the snows of Lebanon,
With portals of golden light.
The mountains on the further side
Towered high above the fire-rimmed cloud,
While the plains which intervened
Were decked with brightest flowers.
I saw white-robed bands with wreaths
Of flowers come lithely from the wood,
And enter through the portals grand
Of the temple not made with hands.
They sang their songs of love and praise,
Their faces beaming with delight:
Each waved a palm as they entered in
Where the banquet feast was spread.
A glorious form of the sons of men
Was seen to welcome all within,
He wore a three-star diadem
Which shown like the burnished gold.
Trees of immortal growth resplendent stand
On the banks of a flowing stream,
Whose crystal waters flowed along
From underneath a throne.
Twelve gates, twelve angels and twelve names
Emblazoned o'er the portal ways:
Then twelve kinds of fruit from living trees
On the pendant branches hung.
Twelve living stones—brilliants rare,
Twelve pearls one for each gate,
Stood majestic above the foundations twelve.
These beauteous pearls and stones
Bedecked the temple not made with hands.
The life-trees bore their luscious fruits
In twelve successive months per year.
The deep blue skies above the plain
Where the temple stood, had no storm,
No death reports in the city's streets:
No pain, no sending tears,
The joyous bands no sorrow knew;
Their loves were pure and sweet,
Their worship was simple and reverent
Like the bending lily o'er the waterbrook.
Nations brought their glory here;
No night made dark the way,
The saved were in their endless rest,
In the temple not made with hands.

THE SUNSET OF LIFE.

The stream is calmest when it nears the tide.
The flowers are sweetest at the eventide;
And birds most musical at close of day,
And saints divinest when they pass away.

Morning is holy, but a holier charm
Lies folded close in the evening's robe of balm;
And weary man must ever love her best;
For morning calls to toil, but night to rest.

She comes from heaven, and on her wings doth bear
[illegible]oly fragrance like the breath of prayer;
[illegible]teps of angels follow in their trace,
[illegible]t the weary eyes of day in peace.

[illegible]ched before her as she
[illegible]r mantle of repose;
[illegible] calmer beauty and a power
[illegible]orning knows not, in the evening hour.

[illegible]ntil the evening we must weep and toil—
Plow life's stern furrow, dig the weedy soil,
Tread with sad feet our rough and thorny way,
And bear the heat and burden of the day.

Oh! when our sun is setting may we glide
Like summer's evening down the golden tide,
And leave behind us, as we pass away,
Sweet, radiant starlight round our sleeping clay.

A MARCH EVENING AND MORNING TALK.

One of the gigantic evils of our age is rum-selling. Nay, it is the twin and double evil of rum-selling and rum-making. O, to think of the magnitude of it! The magnitude of the amount, made and sold, and the magnitude of the wrong and sin of making and selling. One is really astonished at the boldness, the heartlessness and the villainy of all this wrong and not only astonished, but pained, and not only pained, but indignant. These three sentiments dwell, (and slumber not) in the upright human breast. What daring of men, ready to kill their thousands without scruple! What jealousy of interference by law with their work of murder!

Ah, surely judgments are in reserve for the rum-cursed nations, if they do not repent,—judgments for the authors of the wrong, the fosterers of the great, wide-spread destroying wrong. It is wonderful that in an age of so much light, so much activity, so much progress in knowledge, evil so hateful and so heinous can be bold and so pestiferous,—wonderful, wonderful. Imagine men able to create deadly serpents, and sending them by shiploads unto all the world to bury their fangs in heathen human flesh. Men are doing this daily, (in a metaphor); doing a work every whit as deadly and wicked—doing it with an air of business calm, or with cold eyes and cold calculation, and strangely mingled apathy and eagerness. In the hearts of these men is the undying hunger for money, and the deep dead sea of unconcern for the woe and death they over and over and over again produce. O, age of crime and havoc! Not much longer will the mighty wrong be endured. Surely these men will be brought unto the deep valley of shame and humiliation. However we interpret the great red dragon of the apocalypse—there is a dragon of horrid length and shape in the might and power and villainy of strong drink, and the strong drink interest.

We live on a hill overlooking railroad and river. Over yonder is a festival—and (some one whispered) a dance to come after. Introductory to both is the prowess of a professional whistler, who is to whistle for entertainment—and the whole petty machinery is in the interest of organ-buying for a new church. Is comment called for? Let every man make his own. O, how utterly powerless is all this art or artifice, all this cheapness, this childishness, to attract by so much as the waving of a little fish's fin a soul that looks for the presence, the royal presence of the Great One—known in the Book, by such names as these. Melchizedek, Immanuel, and Messiah! What royal names are these! What dignity and purity in them, what honor and what power! And is there such charm and blessedness in a great modern church organ, with its portentous bulk, its pipes and keys, its pomp and circumstance of sound, and in these graceless executions customary in these days for the titillation of the public ear, while the people come and go—known by the title of voluntaries. Be this as it may, I would much prefer service with humbler minstrelsy, or none at all, than that it should be the price of such devices, as suppers and dances in the cause (so-called) of the Lord. Mind, I have put so-called in a parenthesis to fence it around, and in italics to emphasize it.

This is a life of some pains and penalties for being true to conscience. One has some bitterness, be it loneliness, isolation, poverty, or what you please. And what a war of doctrines! O, let me hide and retire from all contention. I am weary of it. God knows my heart and my secret life—trials, temptations,—whatever they are. And he only is my deliverer. If he hear not, and save not, I am gone. But he is Omnipotent. He can do all things. It is good to wait on him, and yet sometimes it is the hardest of hard things. Why, how much easier to work than it is to wait. But no door is a good door unless it is God's door. No way is safe and suitable unless it is God's way. O, but a man says, "I will hew my road, I will make my way. I will conquer and compel success." Well, perhaps you will—but I have learned to distrust my wisdom. I have learned so much if nothing more, and unless God lead, help and keep me, unless he go before and direct, unless he be what he is, omnipotent to save, I might better have been buried long ago—nay, I might better never have been born.

Let us go down and see some of these men that hew their way. It may be they are strong in body and brain, but hard as a millstone at heart. I do not say it is certainly so. It may be they care little for the weak or less shrewd, as a crow cares for a worm he snaps up with his bill. It may be that in hewing their way, they scruple not to cut others' interests into mincemeat. I say it may be. But it is better to be buffeted, than to triumph by injustice—better to suffer pain than to do injury. That was both the spirit and life of Christ. He would rather receive than inflict pain—rather be bruised and wounded himself than to bruise and wound others. Yes, indeed he would. Are we like him? Certainly we ought to be. Who is this man with heart of stone, that would beat and bruise and rob and wrong his neighbor? Who is he? Let him come forth and show himself. Let him learn a lesson of pity and patience from his God. Let him repent and be wholly a new man.

Some men are as callous and unscrupulous, as if there was neither God nor death. Look at an old blood-stained rum-seller, retired from business, and leaning on the crutch of his ungodly gains. Look at him withered and guilty, without any true relenting or repenting of spirit—worrying along to the grave, with the specters of the dead whom he has murdered, showing pale and ghostly out of the blackness of his past life. Look at an old beer brewer, fat and rich, who has spent his life in torturing and perverting the grand golden grain that God made, into stuff for vitiating body and blood, and sending great train-loads of barrels into twenty states. To do this was the great aim and end of life. And there is the distiller with the guilt of his misdeeds, fresh and red upon him. What of his half million or more of gains? What a shame of discovery is awaiting him somewhere, when the old snake-skin of his blindness drops off, and he sees what a wretch he has been! I do not damn him—for I have neither the right nor wish to do it. His own deeds will punish him—and when he is punished sufficiently—I am willing to let him live and have the benefit of a terrible lesson. All things, (good, not bad,) are possible with God.

Now is the great rush and race for office, at the beginning of a new administration. But while thousands and thousands of the common people will get no office, let the poor, humble, buffeted believer in God call to mind the stations of honor reserved by the Mighty One for them who patiently continue in well-doing. Political offices are transient. They are often given to the unworthy. They are often a reward of political service. They are sometimes the fruit or reward of a tremendous scramble. Now and then a man of iron in his eye, and eagerness as keen as an eagle's, and force of will as unyielding as the grip of ratel (a species of weasel in India, Ed.) or blood hound, demands of his superior, such or such a prize, and will never take no for answer. Such are the ways of men. They have their reward.

The Christian struggling along in poverty or disappointment may be for the present say as a world-famed writer said:

"Some falls are means the happier to arise," and think of the rising of the poor in the resurrection—while he remembers also in his hours of sadness and dejection, "That heaviness foreruns the good event." And what good event? It may be some golden, glorious, and precious blessing reserved for his weary soul in this life, and much more the wonder and joy of the life to come.

We often hear it suggested that the world is old, and so no doubt, it is. That old things are ready to vanish away, and so no doubt, they are. That vanities and follies and failures have become so heaped up and multitudinous, that a new era is needed, and so indeed it is. And that is the very point of emphasis and rejoicing. Purdon, the eloquent writer of serial articles,—"The last vials," said we were not so much in the end, as in the beginning of things. The look of God ahead, means ever so much that is good and blessed for those who have been crying to him. The upright old saint therefore, is just going to begin to live. The weary old mother, who has been carrying burdens for many years, is coming to the end of vanities, and will now enter on realities. The obscure little Christian who has stuck fast to God's testimonies, in troubles and temptations, has all the good time coming.

The old shell of earthly tabernacling and frailty will not bear its effeteness into the coming time. All will be new life, new hope, new joy, new possession, and in fact the beginning of all good things. Now, some are naturally not over-hopeful, but the opposite. They are not born sanguine, but perhaps apprehensive. But they have conscience, and choose the right. They pray to the Almighty maker of their frame. They plod on, praying, amid the smoke and confusion of conflicting opinions, and in the babble of ten thousand tongues. Are you that man? Hold up your head. Timid woman, with your cares and weakness, is that you? I reckon deliverance is not far off. Let us hearken for the drum-beat of the cohort and captain of salvation. Sorrows may be long, but they are not forever.

O. Colegrove.

THE RESURRECTION OF BELIEVERS: AN EXPOSITION OF 1 Cor. xv. 12--58. No. 2.

The apostle next, after these statement concerning Christ and the kingdom, adduces reasons for the resurrection. There was a very superstitious practice prevailing among some in his day, if a Christian died not having been baptized, for another to be baptized for him. On the supposition that there was no resurrection, what reason could one have for being concerned about another who had passed away ere he had been baptized? If he had perished, the baptism of a relative or friend on his behalf would have been idle or useless. "Else what shall they do," argues Paul, "which are baptised for the dead? If the dead are not raised at all, why then are they baptized for them?" Thus, without approving of the practice, which was both unscriptural and foolish, he bases an argument upon it to show the unreasonableness of a denial of the resurrection of the dead. But his own way of life, his renouncing the pleasures of the world, his giving up earthly honors and emoluments, his laying himself open to reproach and persecution, and his being in constant danger of a violent and cruel death, for the sake of preaching Jesus and the resurrection, were utterly inconsistent and reprehensible, if the doctrine was not true. If the resurrection was a false doctrine there was no reason for the apostle to expose himself to martyrdom by preaching it. He daily exposed himself to the wrath and fury of his enemies. For his belief of this doctrine, he put himself in constant peril. But what reason had he for this course, what was the use of his thus jeopardising his comfort and even his life, if there was no hope of resurrection hereafter? It was his certainty of a future immortal, glorious life that made him willing to sacrifice his earthly life. "I die daily," he says. That is, "I am day by day in the sight of death, exposed to it, and expecting it." Persecution was imminent; he was looking for a tumult of opposition.

It is not quite clear, and it is not necessary to speculate, as to what Paul meant by the word beasts, in verse 32. "If after the manner of men I fought with beasts at Ephesus, what doth it profit me? If the dead are not raised, let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die." His meaning may be, as one writer puts it, "I have fought with men resembling savage beasts." Doubtless the sense is, there would have been no advantage in thus contending with formidable enemies, if he forsook all that this world considers great and good, and yet if he died in the fight, had no hope of a resurrection. It is as if the apostle had said, If there is no resurrection, if death ends all, we may as well enjoy ourselves while we can; we may as well gratify our fleshly desires, and avoid, as far as possible, all afflictions, for we must soon pass away into an eternal sleep. We may as well act on the principle of the Epicurean, and, while life lasts, indulge the bodily appetites. If this is the only life,—if there is no hope of another beyond it, there is no reason why we should not make the most of it by getting out of it all the enjoyment possible. Such is the drift of the apostle's reasoning. And there is reason—sound reason—in thus reasoning, for the inference is a natural one, if the resurrection is untrue. And without doubt the disbelief of this doctrine led some to adopt and carry out that maxim; for disbelief of the truth fosters a life of sin. The utterly false views these persons had imbibed in denying the resurrection, had brought them into a state of deep unconcern regarding their obligations to God; they were unrighteous, unholy. Hence as soon as he finishes this argument, he gives a caution and an exhortation. He cautions them against [illegible]ves; good manne[illegible]il communic[illegible]leas-ening th[illegible] then, as if by a sudden impu[illegible]werful inspiration, he cries, Awake up righteously, and sin not; for some have no knowledge of God: I speak this to move you to shame." As if he had said, You are already in a measure under the influence of these men who say there is no resurrection; you are morally drunk, and are in peril of letting slip what you have attained; for some lack a knowledge of God, or they would not deny that the dead shall be raised, which I declare, to produce within you, if possible, a sense of shame, seeing that these deniers of the truth are among yourselves. As it was with the deniers of the truth, so it is, we believe, with many in our day. The walk and conduct of those who deny the resurrection, and thus cut off the prospect of eternal life, is destructive of righteousness and holiness.

In the next fifteen verses the apostle speaks of the method of the resurrection, or the kind of body with which the dead are raised. On this question there has been much speculation, much we fear that has neither tended to the elucidation of the subject, nor to spiritual profit. Different theories have been invented, and so much human philosophy has been brought to the explanation of the matter, that any real resurrection of the dead has been almost explained away. It is better to abide by the Word even when there are statements involving phases of truth which are somewhat mysterious to us. Let us honestly try to understand every declaration, but if there are any we cannot understand, let us not fritter them away to suit preconceived opinions, but let us accept them as they are, and pray and wait for further light. However much we know here, we know but in part; the most advanced amongst us is yet but a learner in the school of Christ.

In verses 35–38, the apostle proceeds thus: "But some one will say, How are the dead raised? and with what manner of body do they come? Thou foolish one, that which thou thyself sowest is not quickened, except it die: and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not the body that shall be, but a bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other kind; but God giveth it a body even as it pleased him, and to each seed a body of its own." The body will not be resurrected with the same constitution; that will undergo a great change, for corruptibility will give place to incorruptibility. That which was ever liable to decay, and which at last fell under the power of death, will be raised in immortal youth and freshness and vigor; and when thousands of years have passed, no impression of age will be seen upon the countenance.

Without attempting to philosophize, we understand the Scriptures to teach that the body which is laid away in the grave will live again. It is to be the same body changed,—greatly, marvellously, and mysteriously changed. The animal is changed into spiritual. It was laid in the grave flesh and blood and bones of a corruptible nature, but it is raised not of flesh and bones, without blood, of an incorruptible nature, the principle that animates it being the Holy Spirit of God. That which went down into the grave conquered by death, rises out of the grave conqueror over death.

And Scripture is very plain, in other parts, in its teaching that the resurrection body will be a real and substancial body. It will not be immaterial, but material; it will not be a phantom, but something tangible. And it is to be made like unto Christ's glorious body. This thought is very wonderful and amazing, yea, almost overwhelming. It is an honor, a glory, a happiness so much greater than we could have conceived, that this thought should cause unspeakable joy and gratitude. Surely to have a part in the resurrection of the saints is something worth living for, something worth striving for, something worth laboring and suffering for.

To make the subject better understood, the apostle illustrates it from nature by the seed that is sown in the earth, and which dies before it is quickened. A change passes upon a grain of wheat after it is buried in the earth, and shortly another body comes up; it comes up from that which was sown; that which was dead is quickened,—is quickened "into a new sprout with increased produce." But how the seed which was sown, and which in dying was changed, is quickened into new and beautiful life, and springs up before our eyes, we know not; we are ignorant of the process by which the mortal body died and laid away in the earth, shall be changed and spring into immortal life. The peculiar way or method of this is far beyond our highest knowledge. We can only say that it will be accomplished by the power, and wisdom and goodness of God. He who was able to create the starry heavens, and the earth with its innumerable trees and plants and flowers, and man, and animals, and birds, and the sea with its countless millions of fishes, great and small, is able to raise dead men to life.

And the manner in which personal identity will be continued, is mysterious to us; yet Scripture affords abundant proof that it will be continued. That identity will not depend upon the substance of the body. As an illustration of this, take a man at three score years and ten. He can remember, of course, when he was a man of middle age, but he can remember also when he was a little boy of five or seven years old. The personal identity is the same, yet no one will presume to say that the substance of the body in the man at seventy is the same it was at the age of seven; for we know that there is a continual waste and a continual building up again of the body going on. But Fausset thinks "there is a hidden germ which constitutes the identity of body amidst all outward changes." This may be so. He says, "The outward accretions fall off in its development, whilst the germ remains the same. Every such germ ("seed," v. 38) "shall have its own body," and be instantly recognised, just as each plant now is known from the seed that was sown."

Some have concluded from verses 41, 42, that one glorified body will be more glorious than another. Doubtless the honor conferred on some will be greater than the honor conferred on others; this is distinctly taught; for every believer's reward will be according to his works. And the enjoyment of some will doubtless be greater than the enjoyment of others, for some have cultivated a closer and more intimate fellowship with God, and have won more souls to Jesus than others, and they have also larger capacities; but that there will be a difference in the glory of different glorified bodies, does not seem to be the thought of the apostle. His meaning probably is, that as there is a difference between the lights of heaven, so there will be a difference between the body as it now is and the body as it will be then. And this meaning, indeed, seems more evident from the latter part of verse forty-two, and the forty-third verse. "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power."

He then again declares the fact of a spiritual body; it is raised a spiritual body;" that is, "a body wholly moulded by the Spirit, and its organism not conformed to the lower and animal, but to the higher and spiritual." If a body is necessary for the animal life here, so will a body be necessary hereafter for the spiritual life.—for the constant indwelling of the Spirit of God, for he will be the life of the spiritual body.

In verse 50, the apostle shows the need of the resurrection; he shows that in our bodies of flesh and blood we should be excluded from the heavenly kingdom; that the spiritual body must take the place of the animal, or we cannot enter therein. In verses 51, 52, he very vividly sets forth the means by which the resurrection will take place. He shows that it will be by the sounding of the last trumpet; that in the least particle of time the sleeping saints shall be waked and changed. Then follows, in verses 53, 54, the great blessing of the resurrection. Incorruption takes the place of corruptibility, and immortality takes the place of mortality. It is no wonder the apostle, seeing all this with his prophetic eye, should cry out in holy joy at the victory which believers shall then gain over death through Jesus Christ our Lord. He closes this remarkable chapter by an exhortation to faithfulness and usefulness, which he grounds on the certainty of the resurrection. For though we may fall under the power of death for a while, we shall live again, and therefore, our labor will not be lost. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not vain in the Lord."

Let us keep this subject more before our minds. Its influence upon us cannot fail to be good and salutary. It will tend to lighten our burdens, and make bereavements less painful, and divest death somewhat of its terrors. If we die, we shall live again, and our sleep in the grave will not be long. If the Lord does not come while we are alive, but our bodies are allowed to turn to corruption, the vivifying, regenerating, restoring word of the Lord when he calls us up from the dust, will more than compensate for all our afflictions here. The past humiliation will be forgotten in the enjoyment of an exaltation and glory so great.

And why sorrow over much for your departed Christian friends? You shall see them again in the resurrection morning. That morning will be one of wonderful gladness and joy. You may weep now, you may shed tears over the graves of your loved ones, but there will be no tears in that morning hour of waking up and making alive.

And how important it is to be fully satisfied that we are true believers in Jesus,—that we only accept him with our understanding but with our hearts; for on this depends our having a part in the first resurrection. If we would be found amongst those who shall be crowned with victory in that glad morning, we must be numbered with them now, must be the children of God now by adoption through faith in the Christ.

But how this precious truth of the resurrection is neglected in public teaching. It is indeed taught, more or less, by all Christian denominations, but it is not taught often enough; and when it is taught, there is not that prominence given to it which its great importance requires. We know certainly that it is much overlooked by Methodist preachers, and by the Methodist people generally. And for many years of our own public life, hearing but little prominence given to it whenever it was our privilege to be a listener, we naturally fell into the same neglect. Thank God, we have, some considerable time since, seen our error, and hope we have, in some degree, remedied that mistake. And this neglect amongst ministers has doubtless been induced, and has become widespread, through the general belief that the moment a Christian dies, he goes to his reward and receives his crown. Holding this belief, the necessity of the resurrection has not been fully realized. The doctrine has been received, and has found a place in the creeds of the Church, and in books on theology, but being little preached, it has not taken a deep hold of the Christian mind. It is high time there was a change in regard to this.

Hospital Work in Jerusalem.

Dear Sir:

There is great need for a new English hospital outside the city walls, where alone it can be healthy. At the present hospital there is no drainage, or any provision for the application of sanitary principles. The hospital represents Protestant England, and compares unfavorably with those of all other nations and creeds, who have been able to build fine hospitals in good situations. It is meant only for Jews, who flock to it in great numbers, and seem impressed with the kindness and skill of the doctor, who is an earnest Christian, and speaks to them very plainly of his belief in the Savior. We have lately come from Tottenham to take charge of the nursing; we feel we cannot do justice to the patients, and so we make this appeal. A lady in England has promised £1000, and we trust that sufficient help will be given to enable us to proceed with the work.

At present we are in the midst of narrow streets, into which refuse of every description is thrown, and the effluvia makes fever unavoidable. In the court-yard is the opening from an old cesspool underlying the hospital, and connected with the drains of the town. A stream of foul air penetrates to every part of the building incessantly. The wards are cold, dark, not properly ventilated, and with no means of heating them. This is a real practical mission work, intended to benefit both the souls and bodies of men. It only needs ample support to make it a centre of great blessing in the years to come, when the Jews will probably be here in increased numbers. The patients seem astonished to be treated with kindness, having been accustomed to the reverse. The London Jews' Society, 16, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W. C., will supply further information and receive the gifts of friends.—Deaconess Ada., Care of Dr. Wheeler, English Hospital, Jerusalem.

George Washington's Inauguration.

Excursion tickets to New York City at very low round trip rates will be sold from all principal stations on the Pennsylvania Lines west of Pittsburgh for the Centennial celebration of the inauguration of George Washington, to be held April 29th and 30th, 1889. This celebration is in the hands of well known and enterprising citizens of New York, who promise that it shall be a most picturesque and magnificent carnival. For complete information regarding rates of fare and train accommodations for individuals or organized bodies apply to the nearest passenger or ticket agent of the Pennsylvania Lines. 3tApril10.

Wide Awake for April is a model number, whether for home reading or for supplementary reading in school. For instance, there is an extremely interesting article by John Burroughs—his own story of his own boyhood—that will be read with equal pleasure by young and old. And the same may be said of the historical article entitled "Ralegh and the Potato." A novel and graceful Easter game for young people, "The Cascaroni Dance," is beautifully illustrated by Edmund H. Garrett. The short stories are of unusual interest; especially "A Dash for a Flag," a story of the Civil War, thrillingly illustrated by Sandham. The poems are particularly good, really for children—several very funny, too. Mr. Bridgman's "Court Calendar" is a decidingly amusing conceit. The helpful series of Public School cookery articles treats this time of "marketing," with diagrams of the various "cuts" of beef. The serials, "Five Little Peppers Midway," by Margaret Sidney, and "David Vane and David Crane," by J. T. Trowbridge, are jolly reading. The index page shows a list of over thirty different contributors to this number, and fifty illustrations. The publishers, D. Lothrop Company, Boston, send a sample (back number) for five cents. The price is 20 cents a number, $2.40 a year.

My address will be Andover, Dak., until further notice.

UNPARALLELED OFFER.

Nothing Like It Offered to Our Friends Before.

In order to increase the circulation of THE RESTITUTION we will give to ministers or others who will act as agents:

1. Fifty cents for each NEW subscriber; you send us $1 50 and keep 50c. as commission.

2. To the person sending 500 new subscribers, besides the 50c. commission on each one, kept out when sending the name, a present will be made of $250.00 in cash.

3. To the person sending 200 new subscribers, besides the 50c. commission on each one, kept out when sending the name a present will be made of $125.00 in cash.

4. To the person sending 150 new subscribers, besides the 50c. commission on each one, kept out when sending the name, a present will be made of $50.00 in cash.

5. To the person sending 50 new subscribers, besides the 50c. commission on each one, kept out when sending the name, a present will be made of $10.00 in cash.

In making up these lists this offer of presents holds good to June 1, 1889. Send names as soon as you take the subscription and say that you are working for one of these presents, and a careful account will be kept of all you send in.

The 50c. commission you get anyway, no matter whether you secure a present or not.

These presents are not to those getting the number of subscribers first, but if one or ten persons secure 500 names each, they will each receive a bank draft for $250.00, and so with the smaller numbers.

We will furnish blanks and samples to those who apply for them.

Poetry

THE END OF THE WAY.

My life is a weary journey;
  I'm sick with the dust and the heat.
The rays of the sun beat upon me,
  The briers are wounding my feet;
But the city to which I am going
  Will more than trials repay.
All the toils of the road will seem nothing,
  When I get to the end of the way.

There are so many hills to climb upward,
  I often am longing for rest;
But he who appoints me my pathway
  Knows just what is needful and best;
I know in his word he has promised
  That my strength shall be as my day,
And the toil of the road will be nothing,
  When I get to the end of the way.

He loves me too well to forsake me,
  Or give one trial too much:
All his people have dearly been purchased,
  And Satan can never claim such.
By and by I shall see him, if faithful,
  In the city of unending day,
And the toils of the road will seem nothing,
  When I get to the end of the way.

When the last feeble step has been taken,
  And the gates of the city appear,
And the beautiful songs of the angels
  Float out on my listening ear;
When all that now seems so mysterious
  Shall be plain and clear as the day;
Yes, the toils of the road will seem nothing,
  When I get to the end of the way.

Though now I am tired and weary,
  I shall rest when I'm safely at home;
I know I'll receive a glad welcome,
  For the Savior himself has said, "Come!"
So when I am weary in body,
  And sinking in spirit, I say:
All the toils of the road will seem nothing,
  When I get to the end of the way.

Cooling fountains are there for the thirsty;
  There are cordials for those who are faint;
There are robes that are whiter and purer
  Than any that fancy can paint:
Then I'll try to press hopefully onward,
  Thinking often through each weary day:
The toils of the road will be nothing,
  When I get to the end of the way.

A Letter to My Cousin, a Baptist Minister. No. 2.

But do you not believe in the sleep of the dead! Let us see. We will leave this question to inspiration to decide. The Lord said to Moses, "Behold thou shalt sleep with thy fathers." Nathan said to David "And when thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers." Job, also says, "For now I shall sleep in the dust." Job vii, 21. What do you suppose Job thought about the sleep of the dead? Dan. xii 2 "Many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake," 1 Cor. xv. 51. "We shall not all sleep," 1 Thess. iv. 14. "Even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him," 15 v. "Shall not prevent them which are asleep." But I can quote only a tithe of the proofs that plainly show that inspired writers understood the death of the righteous to be a state of sleep, and that the awakening will be at the resurrection of the just, when they will be rewarded as the Savior said.

But the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, so far as it is believed, destroys the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, for if the dead are not dead, but alive, and the saints in heaven as Orthodoxy teaches, they cannot be resurrected from the dead. But Paul dwelt strong on the resurrection. He says, "If by any means, I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Also Acts xxiii. 6. Of the hope and resurrection of the dead, I am called in question."

But you will say "Yes, we believe in the resurrection of the body, but not of the soul." Let us see, David says, Ps. xlix. 15, "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave."

Hezekiah says, Isa. xxxviii 17. "But thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption."

These quotations are sufficient to show that inspired writers understood that the soul was mortal and subject to the grave, and would be resurrected and brought up from the grave.

Well and truly did Adam Clarke, in commenting on 1 Cor. xv., say, "One remark I cannot help making. The doctrine of the resurrection was thought of much more consequence in primitive times than it is now. How is this? The Apostles were continually insisting on it, and inciting their followers to diligence and perseverance on account of it, and their successors in the present day seldom mention it. There is not a doctrine in the whole gospel preaching upon which more stress is laid, and there is not a doctrine in the present system of preaching, that is treated with greater neglect."

The Dr. appears to express very great astonishment that such a grand and glorious doctrine should be almost entirely overlooked and left in the background, and so little regarded. But the Dr. should remember that the church has invented a new plan of salvation that Paul knew nothing about. A plan that supercedes the slow process of the resurrection. They make "death the voice that Jesus sends to call them to his arms." So if the saints can be in Jesus' arms as soon as this old body dies, (or house in which they lived decays) then what need for a resurrection? This carelessness about the resurrection is a direct and legitimate offspring of the serpent's lie with which he deceived our first parents.

Again, the doctrine of the inherent immortality of man, and the doctrine of immediate rewards and punishments which grows out of it, destroy the doctrine of a general judgment. All will agree that a man must be judged before he can be rewarded, and so, after the saints have "been there ten thousand years, bright shining as the sun;" they must be called out to be judged again as if to see if there had been a mistake in the first assize.

Again, what place would idolatry occupy in the world, were it not for this doctrine? The idolater worships a departed hero through an elephant, a crocodile, a dog or an ape, thinking the soul of the hero resides in this, or that animal. Idolatry is the direct and legitimate offspring of the serpent's lie.

Again. Where would now, or at any time since the great Apostasy set in; where would be the church of Rome, were it not for the serpent's lie? Where would be the prayers to, and the worship of the Virgin Mary? Where the prayers to the saints in heaven, or for the dead in Purgatory? Where would be the vast array of judgment and mockery founded in Babylon the Mother of Harlots, or the many false doctrines found in Orthodoxy, were it not for this groundless doctrine? Popery lives and fattens on the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. This is the Rock upon which she is built.

But alas! Time would fail to tell of Spiritualism, with its severed matrimonial and social ties, and broken hearts; its tricks and deceptions to prove that a dead man is not dead, but alive and knows more than any living. In short, spiritualism, bald and black, is the mature and ripe fruit of that plant so long and successfully nurtured by Orthodoxy and which has been toiled as a sweet morsel under her tongue. Instead of the bristling [illegible] given to [illegible] and such vast proportions that many of the mightiest lights of Orthodoxy have been extinguished by it, and the whole church is badly mixed up with it.

But what is Orthodoxy but Spiritualism? When you get right down to the inwardness of it, there is but very little difference. Spiritualists acknowledge that there is no creed necessarily belonging to spiritualism but a belief in the immortality of the soul. Orthodoxy believes this, and very many in good standing in Orthodox churches believe and teach that departed spirits return to converse with friends left behind. What more does spiritualism?

But you say Orthodoxy always does, when trying to shield and sustain the serpent's lie; "since Adam did not die on the same day in which he sinned, therefore, the death that was threatened Adam must be understood figuratively," so they call it spiritual death and describe it as a "death of his moral principles, alienation from God, loss of his favor," etc. This is claimed to be the death pronounced upon Adam as a penalty for his sin. But a thought or two right here is overlooked. A state of alienation from God, a loss of his favor, or a spiritual death cannot be a penalty for sin, but it is the sin itself.

Adam became a sinner by disobeying God. So God drove him out of the garden and placed a flaming sword to guard the way to the tree of Life, lest he partake thereof and become an immortal sinner. If Adam already had immortality as the serpent said, why guard the way to the tree of Life. Partaking thereof could make no difference with him. He had already all that the tree of Life could bestow.

But God said die, and there can be no spiritual death in the threatening Adam himself enacted the spiritual death, God did not. But we are not left to conjecture, nor was Adam, what kind of a death was pronounced upon him? When God called him up before him, and reiterated the penalty, he said, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." There can be no guess work about this. The penalty was literal death; return to the ground whence thou wast taken. All the days of Adam were 930 years and he died.

But suppose you consider the day to be figurative rather than the death penalty that Adam died the same day he sinned. Peter says, "One day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. This view makes a complete harmony in the Scripture on this controverted subject, but your spiritual death theory introduces inconsistencies, contradictions and crookedness. The expression "a death that never dies," carries on the face of it a flat contradiction, and can be no death at all, for that which does not live is not life. The death threatened Adam was a death that did die, and he found it so. Understand the time of the death to be figurative rather than the death itself, then you have a complete harmony.

Again. The doctrine that the soul does not die at death, saps the very foundation of our holy religion. Orthodoxy acknowledges that the "body is no part of the man, and that the soul is the real man, that the soul or real man dwells in the body the same as a man lives in his house, and that when his house decays, or is burned, the man goes and lives elsewhere, just so the soul, when the body dies the real man goes to live elsewhere." Therefore, according to the above testimony, Christ did not die at all, only his body, the house in which he lived. Hence there has been no sacrifice for the soul, and can be no Atonement.

But the prophet Isa. chap. liii., says, "His soul was made an offering for sin." "He hath poured out his soul unto death." And Christ himself said, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death." And Peter, Acts ii. 31, in speaking of David, said, "He seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell (Hades,) neither his flesh did see corruption." To believe in the immortality of the soul, is virtually to deny the death of Christ. I can see it in no other light. I was once talking with a lady, a daughter of a Methodist minister, on the immortality of the soul. I asked her if she believed Christ's soul died on the cross? She said she did not. Said I, you believe the soul is the real man? She said, she did. Then said I, the real man Christ did not die? She acknowledged that she did not understand it, and finally settled to an acknowledgment that Christ did not die.

In making the penalty threatened Adam, a figurative rather than a literal death, and that death to be eternal life in misery and suffering; and also, in understanding the death of Christ a vicarious or substitutionary death, there you have Christ today suffering in eternal torment, or a "death that never, never dies." Of the inconsistency and folly that man will resort to, to uphold and sustain that abomination that has been born and cradled in the church of Rome.

By thus tampering with God's word, Cousin, you put a weapon into the hands of such men as Ingersol and Bradlaugh, with which they are but too successful in sapping the very foundation of the Christianity of the present day, and in bringing the Scriptures into contempt and ridicule, and so they reject the Bible and its Author as unworthy of any credibility.

No wonder that the world is full of scepticism and infidelity. No wonder that such men as Col. Ingersol can challenge the whole Orthodox world to a discussion of the Divine inspiration of Holy Scriptures. No wonder that none dare to take up the gauntlet thrown down by the infidel, and try to sustain that God-dishonoring doctrine, the eternity of sin and suffering. No wonder that Orthodoxy can find no proof in heaven or earth; in reason or in the Scripture that God is so much in love with sin, that he has prepared a place where it shall be perpetuated to all eternity. Professing Christians have done more to encourage bringing the Scriptures into disrepute, by their pernicious system of mysticism, and trying to sustain the doctrine of the eternity of sin and suffering, than all the Tom Paines and Ingersols that ever lived. Infidelity and scepticism are the direct and legitimate offspring of that mystification of the Scriptures which has been [illegible] up-hold [illegible] can challenge [illegible] ministry to discuss [illegible] truth of Revelation, and find none to take up the gauntlet, and why? Because his positions in opposition to the Orthodox view of the Bible, in many respects, are valid and just. But if a man accept his challenge, who does not believe in the eternity of sin and suffering, Mr. Ingersol will not meet him in discussion, as one of our preaching brethren has proved. With such an opponent Mr. Ingersol knows full well that he can have no chance of success. Such a man will take away all his thunder.

But evidently the serpent was far-seeing enough, to take in the idea, that if he could instil his doctrine of man's immortal nature into the minds of our first parents at the fountain, it would poison the whole stream of life in man's probationary state, (so far as it should be believed), and would neutralize every effort looking to the salvation of man in all ages, I believe it to be the great Upas tree of man's probationary state. Its influence is bad every where, and it poisons whatever it touches. The slime of its parentage marks its track wherever it goes.

FOUR NEW STATES.

South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana, Washington.

On February 22, 1889, the President signed the bill creating South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington states of the Union.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—The great Prairie State, to which the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three main lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown, and Sioux Falls. Go to South Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat, whose healthful climate nurtures the most vigorous and brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states; the soil of whose fertile prairies is deeper than the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Minot and Devils Lake land districts invite the homeseeker to create a free home. Magnificent daily train service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devils Lake, Bottineau, and all other important points.

MONTANA, THE TREASURE STATE.—Treasure in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 4,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile fields, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal, which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate, caused by the warm Chinook winds. The St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only route now passing through a continuous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountains. It runs through the Great Reservation of [illegible] acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wheat, oats and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls, with its 1,000,000 horse-power cataracts; immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free land; through Helena, the capital city and commercial centre of Montana, and Butte, the richest mining camp on earth, to San Francisco by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta Route, or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars, and free colonist sleepers of its own from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is also the shortest line to Butte.

WASHINGTON.—The country of tall timber, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers en route for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass through Port Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without change or delay. Distance to the Pacific Coast is same as by other lines, but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXVIII. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA. APRIL 24, 1889. NO. 16.

THE RESTITUTION

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

A Letter to My Cousin, a Baptist Minister, No. 4.

The Jews are still looking for their Messiah to make his appearance and fulfil all those promises of a glorious reign, found in the law of Moses and the prophets, and in the Psalms concerning the Christ. The Hebrew Scriptures are full of promises of the perpetuity of the throne of David, and the Jews did not construe them as Orthodoxy does, to mean the exact opposite of the language. But modern Christians are so full of hatred to the Jews because they will not accept of Jesus of Nazareth at their hands, that they are willing to introduce their hatred into the Scriptures, and make the prophets subservient to their purpose in holding up a false Christ, and a false plan of salvation, and offering them to the Jew for his acceptance.

And it appears to be a matter of very great astonishment to Christians that the Jew is so very obstinate against admitting the claims of Jesus as the Messiah. Christians are emphatic in citing the prophecies concerning the birth, the life, and death of Jesus, and claim that they have all been literally fulfilled, therefore Jesus must be Israel's Messiah. But the Jew has a powerful weapon of self defence against the appeals of modern Christianity, and he knows full well how to use it. The relation of a little incident in this connection may not be out of place, as showing the status of Israel against accepting Jesus as their Messiah.

A Christian, in urging the claims of Christianity upon the attention of a pious Jew, quoted Isa. ix. 6, "For unto us a child is born," etc. "Here," said the Christian, "is a claim in favor of Jesus as being the Messiah that Jews cannot set aside." Said the Jew, "Why do you apply that prophecy to Jesus?" The Christian replied, "Because history shows that it was literally fulfilled." The Jew replied, "read the next verse." Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Said the Jew, "Did Jesus occupy the throne of David and his kingdom," etc.? The Christian answered, "We understand that prophecy in a figurative sense. Christ is now occupying the throne of David in heaven." "Ah," said the Jew, with a curled lip, and a look of scorn and contempt "You believe the first declaration because it is a matter of history, yet you virtually throw the second away, because of your hatred against the Jews, and because of your unwillingness to accord to them any of the blessings of inspiration. I cannot acknowledge a Messiah whose subjects are so elastic as to make flesh of one prophecy and fowl of another. We believe both of these declarations shall be fulfilled because God has declared it.

The Jew cannot accept of Jesus of Nazareth as his Messiah at the hands of Gentile Christians, because to do so, he is called upon to throw away and discard a large proportion of Moses, and the prophets, and the psalms, by manipulating and moulding them in an unnatural manner. Why is it that modern Christians cannot see that they are fighting against God, by changing the meaning of the prophecies, and thus pilfering every prophecy of good to Israel, and applying them to an already proud and aristocratic Gentile church? Do you think Cousin that God is well pleased with such trifling with his Word? Read Rev. xxii. 18, 19, and be sure that these declarations are applicable to the Orthodox churches of today.

You say, Cousin, that I inveigh rather too strong against commentators, inasmuch as I enter the list of commentators myself. I think I cannot be considered a commentator. Webster says, to comment is to write notes on the works of an author with a view to illustrate his meaning. This I do not propose to do. The commentaries in general use, instead of being illustrations, too often prove to be mysticisms. Paul said, "The wages of sin is death," and he does not need a commentary to explain the meaning of death.

You say, "Whether on earth or in heaven or both, we gather at last, I want to be in fullest, dearest, heartiest fellowship with all I shall meet there.

No doubt the above flow of fellowship would meet with a hearty response by all who look upon the plan of salvation from your standpoint, but from a Bible standpoint no one can possibly be in any doubt whether the gathering place shall be in earth or heaven. Indeed, to doubt on this subject, is to discredit the express promises of God, for he says repeatedly, The meek shall inherit the earth. The very fiat or sum-total of the gospel, absolutely precludes the idea of going to heaven, for the gospel promises take hold on earth, and must be fulfilled on the earth as they can be fulfilled nowhere else.

Dear Cousin, Do you claim to be a preacher of the gospel, an instructor and counsellor of the ignorant, and yet are doubtful about pointing the enquirer after truth, to earth or heaven as the place where the meek shall find their inheritance and reward? Don't the Savior say plainly, "The meek shall inherit the earth?" Don't the Psalmist say, "But the meek shall inherit the earth and delight themselves in the abundance of peace?" and again, "their inheritance shall be forever." To expect, or desire to go to heaven, is so near a repudiation of the gospel, that I would not dare harbor such a desire. It would be treating the promises of God as unworthy of confidence. How is it that you cannot see that the gathering place shall be on the earth, not in heaven? There is no doubt you could see it plainly enough, if you were not looking through the Serpent's spectacles.

We feel fully justified in rejecting each and every promise that the righteous shall ever go to heaven to find their inheritance and reward, and count it as filthy rags. All such promises originated in the church of Rome the Mother of Harlots, and were loaned to the daughters when they started out to set up house-keeping.

To illustrate this part of my subject let me say, that I recollect when Queen Victoria of England was married; the officiating clergyman said, Do you Victoria take Albert to be your lawfully wedded husband, and do you promise to reject all others, and keep yourself for him alone? Queen Victoria replied, I do. She was willing to commit herself to one alone, rejecting all others, while you are not willing to commit yourself to one plan of salvation, rejecting all others as filthy rags. But you appear to be very much like the Irishman on his death-bed who prayed good Lord and good devil, for said he; "I am going to a strange country and I want to be in friendship with all I shall meet there, for I don't know whose hands I may fall into."

The true Christian is willing to commit himself to that one promise, "The meek shall inherit the earth," rejecting all other promises as sinking sand. Let us examine carefully what God has promised, and then believe with all the heart. The Lord wants no praying, good Lord and good devil. Let a man show what he is, if he is anything.

Paul says, the gospel is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth. No one will deny this literally, but "actions speak louder than words." Men make their feelings the standard of faith, instead of the gospel. Men may, and often do get strange impressions, which if carried out, would lead to consequences most disastrous.

Freeman the child murderer was fully impressed that he must kill his child, and by listening to the tempter, instead of meeting him with a plain Thus saith the Lord, he came to believe that God required a trial of his faith; so he plunged the dagger into the heart of the child. If he had gone to the Word of the Lord for his guidance, instead of depending on his feelings, he might there have learned that God has said, "Thou shalt not kill."

When God has told me plainly what the gospel is, and what I must do to be saved, I do not propose to distrust his word by asking him to send me a revelation, to tell me that my sins are forgiven, and that I am a Christian, I can trust his word for that.

But Orthodoxy does not believe in a literal kingdom. They are proud to assert that the birth, the life, and the death of Christ, were all literally fulfilled, just as the prophets brought them to view. But when they read of the return of Israel, and this incorporation into the kingdom of God, as well as those plain declarations respecting the reign of Christ on the throne of David, they are willing to "comment" upon all these, and declare they are to be understood in a figurative or mystical sense. But to expound the few prophecies in relation to Christ's humiliation, in a literal sense, and the voluminous utterances of the prophets concerning his second coming and glorious reign, all in a figurative or spiritual sense, certainly strikes the mind as a gross prostitution of the oracles of God to a base and ignoble purpose. Where is there any authority for any such rule of interpretations. I have never seen any, and I am sure there is none, except in the imaginations of a base system of commentary. But why do we need a commentary to tell us what the Angel Gabriel meant in his annunciation to the Virgin Mary? The language is plain enough, and any illustrations of, or comments upon it, can only serve to darken counsel with words without knowledge, and especially is this true, when we can find the same declarations interspersed all through the prophetical writings, and hundreds, and I might say thousands of utterances that teach the same thing. But more than this. We find the [illegible] of Jehovah is pledged with an oath, to the perpetuity of the throne of David. "Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established forever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven." Again, "I have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David my servant, Thy seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations." God says, "My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips." But puny man is presumptuous enough to alter this covenant, and change the whole face of the oath, by assuming that the throne of David will never again stand in the place, nor upon the ruins, of its former greatness. But we believe with all our heart, that Isaiah and Micah told the truth, when they said, "And it shall come to pass in the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills and all nations shall flow into it. And many people shall go and say,...."for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Again, The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; He will not turn from it; of the fruit of the body will I set upon thy throne." For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest for ever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it." Put this by the side of that joyful acclaim of of the Revelator, when he said, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God." See Ezek. xliii. 7. Son of Man, the place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever, and my holy name, shall the house of Israel no more defile, neither they, nor their kings, by their whoredoms, nor by the carcasses of their kings in their high places."

But I can quote only a few of the many plain declarations of the prophets, showing that God has predetermined and declared it plainly, that he will reerect the throne of David on Mount Zion, in the place where David formerly occupied it, and that thereunto shall all nations "go up from year to year, to worship the King, the Lord of hosts and to keep the feast of tabernacles," Zech. xiv. 17.

D. HOWARD.

ORIGIN OF EVIL---WHY HAS GOD PERMITTED IT?

An Answer to Wm. Lyle in the Morning Herald, of Rochester, N. Y.

In my last lecture I set before you the teaching of Scripture in relation to the origin of natural evil and why it is permitted. We will now consider the origin of sin, or moral evil, and why God has permitted it.

All nations however barbarous when they bow down to stocks and stones acknowledge their belief in a supreme power. Paul declares that all men are without excuse because his eternal power and Godhead may be seen and understood by "the things that are made." And the poet hath well said,

> "Whoever plants a seed beneath the sod
> And waits to see it push away the clod
> He trusts in God."

Not only so, but in all ages, and in all nations that have attained to civilization at least, we find the same acknowledgement, the same expression and admiration of the wisdom, beneficence, and munificence of the Creator.

Is it any wonder then that thinking minds believing in such an All-wise and good God should ask the questions, "Why has God permitted sin with its long train of evils to enter this world?" Is it any wonder the Atheist should sneeringly ask, "if there be a God why all this sin and misery?"

To those unenlightened in the truth, the problem is most difficult, yea impossible to solve. The Rev. Dr. Sloan of Pittsburg, Pa., in answer to the question says, "I don't know. It is an insoluble problem to the human mind, [illegible] any man can answer [illegible] can [illegible] has the sages and philosophers of [illegible] centuries did." Had Dr. Sloan [illegible] the sages, and philosophers of the past better understood the Scriptural teaching in relation to the nature of man they might have been able to solve the problem. I contend however, that no man, be he sage or philosopher that believes man was created immortal can answer the question. But when we understand, that the Bible teaches that man was created mortal, that immortality is a gift of God to those who develop a Godly character, we are better prepared to understand why sin exists; and the answer in a word is, it is unavoidable. This will appear as we go forward.

From many passages we find that the purpose of God was, that the earth should be filled with his glory, in other words, that it should become the abode of an immortal race of men who should be all righteous, or Godly in character and in nature—all sons, or children of God. Therefore he has said, Ps. cxv. 17, "The heaven even the heavens are the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men." And Isaiah xlv. 18, says, "I created the earth not in vain; I made it to be inhabited." And God says again, Num. xiv. 21, "As truly as I live all the earth shall be filled with my glory."

Now it will be seen at a glance that a man could not be created with a character either good or bad. That must be the result of his life; as character must be developed, it cannot be created. A child has no character, it is good or bad, as his life shall be.

What do we find then? We find man was created capable of understanding and obeying law in order that he might develop a righteous character and so become worthy of immortality. If then it was possible for man to obey law, it was possible for him to disobey law. This we find he did for he disobeyed the law of God which was sin. This is the solution of the problem of sin. It will then be readily seen that it was necessary for the All-wise and beneficent Creator to permit sin, or not create man, provided man should sin; for it was impossible that he be created with the power to do right and without the power to do wrong—with the power to obey law, and without the power to disobey law; for the same power that would enable him to obey would enable him to disobey. There is a law underlying the whole creation which for convenience we may call a law of necessity: for example, if a man be created so he can feel the heat he is necessarily created so he can feel the cold.

We find therefore that man was created with the power or capacity to do right by obeying law in order that he might develop a righteous character which God could honor with the gift of immortality: he had therefore the power or capacity to do wrong by being disobedient and so introduce sin and death into the world. This he did do, therefore says Paul, "By one man sin entered into the world and death by sin."

God in his wisdom knew this would be the result in the case of Adam the first; so when he had created him, and given him a command to keep, he warned him of the consequences of disobedience by saying to him, "In the day thou eatest thereof dying thou shalt surely die."

Nevertheless he disregarded the warning and sought rather to gratify his fleshly longings than to obey his maker. We now see the consequences; sin, misery and death, are our heritage in Adam.

We are not to blame for this, any more than our children are to blame for our indiscretions; yet we suffer in consequence just as our children suffer for what we entail upon them. But we need not go down to everlasting death on that account; for a new way of life has been opened up by him who hath taken away the sin of the world, and so being delivered from Adamic death, we stand on our own account; if we perish it will be for our own transgressions not for Adam's. But to return, it was not only necessary that man should be created so that by obedience he could develop a righteous character but it was also necessary that he be created mortal in order [illegible] such a development: for an immortal being must of necessity be a righteous or Godly being.

Immortality or deathlessness belongs only to God and those who are Godly. It was impossible then that Adam could have been created immortal, as he could not be Godly until he had walked in obedience to God and so developed a Godly character.

This is clearly taught in various passages. In the account given of his creation we are told that he had access to the tree of life, which had he continued to walk in obedience, he could have partaken of, and so have lived forever, in other words have become immortal. It is also said of Jesus that he was made perfect through suffering—that he was tempted in all points as we are. Paul says, "For in that he himself hath suffered, being tried he is able to succor them that are tried." By this we see that not only Adam the first was put on trial for immortality but also Adam the second. Though he was the Son of God, yet he learned obedience by the things that he suffered, and being made perfect, became the author of eternal salvation unto all of them that obey him.

Even Jesus himself was mortal that he might be tried, put to the proof—learn obedience in order to immortality. It is clear then that a righteous or Godly character is necessary in order to immortality; therefore Paul says, "that was not first, which is spiritual (immortal or deathless) but that which is natural; (or mortal) the first man is of the earth earthy, the second man the Lord from heaven."

As we have born the image of the earthy we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. We shall now be able to see why sin is with us. It was necessary that man, if made at all should be mortal—of the earth earthy, and subject to trial in order to develop a Godly character that he might be endowed with immortality and so live forever. But this he failed to do and so brought sin and death into the world.

But the question is often asked, Could not the Creator have made man so that he could not have sinned? We answer no. For the word "man" is expressive of a being that has the capacity to obey or not obey, as we have already shown; just as the word "liquid" is expressive of that which can flow or run. Take away the capacity to flow and you take away the name. Just so with man, take away the capacity to obey or disobey and you take away the man. The All-wise Creator could have created a being that could not have sinned, but such a being could not have been man. In fact he did create many such beings, or creatures—the bear, the lion, the horse, are so created that they cannot sin, because they have not the capacity to obey or disobey God's law; therefore they cannot sin, for sin is the transgression of law. Man therefore if created incapable of sinning would have been incapable of becoming righteous—would have been like the bear or the lion, a mere animal wanting in intellectual and moral faculties which make him in the image of God capable of understanding his will, and obeying it.

Every ordinary mind with proper reflection should be able to see why sin is permitted. God had a purpose in creating the world. He tells us what that purpose was, viz., that he created the earth to be inhabited and to fill it with his glory—"that the knowledge of the Lord should cover the earth as the waters cover the sea." To accomplish this purpose it was necessary to create beings upon the earth with the capacity to understand his will and obey his law. This being he called man. But as we have shown the man disobeyed and brought sin and death into the world. But has God's purpose changed, or failed? Nay verily; he still declares that the earth shall be filled with his glory. He therefore permits sinners to live, and sin to exist, and all its attendant train of evils for a time—until there can be developed from the race of man a people who love God, love his law, and will obey him.

When this is done he will put the rulership of this world into their hands, and they will rule the world in righteousness, and subdue it. Under their righteous rule all nations shall be blessed. Then in the language of the Psalmist, The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away, but the righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever.

Having accomplished his purpose sin and evil will exist no more; the tabernacle of God will be with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall their be any more pain" for the former things will have passed away and all things will have been made new." Then in the language of Paul, The whole creation that now groaneth and travaileth in pain together shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. The Revelator closes this sublime picture of the glorious future in these words, "He that overcometh shall inherit all these things, I will be his God, and he shall be my Son.

We think we are speaking a truth when we say that prayer is much neglected by the far greater number of such as profess to be of the One Faith. As acquaintanceship increases in extent and intimacy, the more doth the sad fact become apparent. The closet is specially the place for prayer: and it would be wise for each one to ask himself or herself, Do I frequent my closet where no eye but God's is on me; and there, conscious that he sees in secret, probe my heart before him? Do I faithfully examine myself and earnestly desire holiness? Do I really hunger and thirst after righteousness? Do I not crave something for self: some fleshly indulgence; some elevation above brethren or sisters, rather than a willingness, yea, a preference to be least? In short, is my purpose purely to do the will of God? Examine yourselves; prove your own selves. "Be diligent that you may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless." H. H.

EASTER LILIES.

The nave, and the beautiful chancel,
That wonderful Easter day,
With garlands of trailing arbutus,
Looked glad as the meadows of May.
And gifts of the royalest roses,
And crocus in purple and gold,
And ferns from the woodland, and mosses,
Made light of the rain and the cold.

And spite of the gloom of the weather,
The slips to the chancel were filled,
And preacher and people but waited,
For the words of the song to be stilled;
All solemn and quiet the faces
That bend to the hush of the prayer,
And the hearts of the people are stirring,
The risen Redeemer is there!

But just in the moment of silence,
A vision of beauty is seen:
The priest's little child in the doorway,
With lilies her fingers between!
"I have brought to the Savior my lilies,—
You know he has come from the dead,—
He loved them; he taught us with lilies,
I want him to have them," she said.

And so by the side of the roses,
The sweet-scented lilies were hung,
While again from the tongue of the organ,
The musical anthem was rung;
And the heart of the preacher was lifted
As it never had been before,
When he bowed in the prayer with his people,
Adown by the chancel door.

A REAL HERO.

Not long ago, on board an English steamer, a little ragged boy, aged nine years, was discovered on the fourth day of the voyage out from Liverpool to New York, and carried before the first mate, whose duty it was to deal with such cases. When questioned in regard to his object in being stowed away, and who brought him on board, the boy, who had a beautiful sunny face, and eyes that looked like the very mirrors of truth, replied that his step-father did it; because he could not afford to keep him, or to pay his passage out to Halifax, where he had an aunt who was well off, and to whose house he was going. The mate did not believe the story, in spite of the winning face and truthful accents of the boy. He had seen too much of stowaways to be easily deceived by them, he said; and it was his firm conviction that the boy had been brought on board, and provided with food by the sailors. The little fellow was very roughly handled in consequence. Day by day he was questioned and requestioned, but always with the same result. He did not know a sailor on board, and his step-father alone had secreted him and given him the food which he ate.

At last the mate, wearied with the boy's persistence in the same story, and perhaps a little anxious to inculpate the sailors, seized him one day by the collar and dragging him to the fore, told him that unless he told the truth in ten minutes from that time he would hang him from the yard-arm. He then made him sit down under it on deck. All around him were the passengers and sailors of the mid-day watch, and in front of him stood the inexorable mate, with his chronometer in his hand, and the other officers of the ship at his side. It was the finest sight, said our informant, that he ever beheld—to see the pale, proud, sorrowful face of that noble boy, his head erect, his beautiful eyes bright through the tears that suffused them. When eight minutes had fled the mate told him he had but two minutes to live, and advised him to speak the truth and save his life; but he replied with the utmost simplicity and sincerity by asking the mate if he might pray. The mate said nothing, but nodded his head and turned as pale as a ghost, and shook with trembling like a reed with the wind. And there, all eyes turned on him, the brave and noble little fellow, this poor waif whom society owned not, and whose own step-father could not care for him, knelt on the ship's deck and prayed.

Our young friend was a true believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, and there, with clasped hands, and eyes upturned to heaven, he asked the dear Lord Jesus to take him to himself and to forgive the mate. Our informant adds that there then occurred a scene as of Pentecost. Sobs broke from strong, hard hearts, as the mate sprang forward to the boy and clasped him to his bosom, and kissed him and blessed him, and told him how sincerely he now believed his story, and how glad he was that he had been brave enough to face death and be willing to sacrifice his life for the truth of his word.—Watchword.

THE RESTITUTION.

Plymouth, Indiana, April 24, 1889.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, Post Office, County and State plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co. Ind.

Remittances should be sent by Bank Draft Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk: money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

WILL our friends, who send for books, or who write about any business matters, recollect always to write to Bro. Underwood and not to the Editor. It is a cause of unnecessary delay to write to ourself, as we do not manage any part of the business, and can only take letters addressed to us over to him for answer. Make all remittances to him, and save delay.

WHAT CAN WE—WHAT OUGHT WE TO DO?

There is a counterview held and advocated by quite a large number of those who are looking for the soon coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and who also hold to conditional immortality—or eternal life only through the Son of God—which we may best state in the words of one who advocates the theory; which is, that none excepting the heirs of salvation will be raised from death, and that all unpardoned sinners—those who live and die in their sins—will be eternally holden by death and never be the subjects of any resurrection whatever. Our author says:—"Man is an animal being. As such he is mortal, and unless God shall exercise his preventing power, the whole race must perish. But this he proposes to do. 'God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish' It is only those who believe, hence no promise has been made to save unbelievers from perishing. Believers are saved by a resurrection from the dead; but unbelievers have no part in it, they being unworthy 'to obtain it,' and so they perish utterly. May all lovers of Jesus faithfully labor to lead sinners unto him, and thus swell the number of them who shall, through the Son, obtain the priceless gift." Commenting on Rom. vii. 5, the same writer says:—"Reader, dost thou live after the flesh? Dost thou grieve the Spirit of grace, yielding obedience to fleshly lusts? Then this know that thou hast no life in thyself than a mere animal one, and if when that ends thou hast failed to lay hold of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, thine must be the blackness of darkness forever."

On another page, continuing his remarks on the subject, he says:—"Life and death are set before you. One or the other must be your destiny; the choice is with yourself. To the one you are rapidly tending; to the other the Son of God has made it easy for you to attain. If you choose the better part, 'when Christ, who is our life, shall appear,' you will be accounted worthy to 'appear with him in glory.' But if you serve self, you will die as the fool dieth; and when the righteous are glorified you will be left in death as too vile and corrupt a thing to have any place either in heaven or on all the earth."

In commenting on Mal. iv. 1, the writer from whom we quote remarks:—"There is nothing about the text to suggest the thought, much less compel the conclusion that the wicked dead are to be raised for the purpose of being destroyed again. When the judgment commences then all (the then living) [that do wickedly will be as stubble, not all who have (throughout the past) done wickedly."

Once more our respected author says:—"It was not the prospect of death, popularly regarded as a mere transition in conscious existence, that the apostles preached as a motive to repentance and obedience. The dogma, incorporated in later theology, of entering a state either of happiness or woe at death, had no place in their teachings, and for the unexceptional reason that Jesus taught it not to them. On the contrary, they steadfastly asserted, and diligently labored to convince all deniers that man is wholly mortal; that without a union with Christ the Life-giver; without receiving the Spirit which the Father sends in Jesus' name, and yielding obedience to its indications to duty, thus developing a character in harmony with God, they have no germ of eternal life in them, and cannot, therefore, have a deliverance from the power of death. They have not received the Spirit of adoption. They are not begotten of the incorruptible seed, and hence cannot have a resurrection birth." The view set forth by interpreters of this class, is, that the Scriptures teach that all unpardoned sinners—all who die out of Christ—will remain eternally "in the congregation of the dead." For those that die in their sins death ends all, and none such are ever to have a resurrection from its drear abodes. As a general thing, we believe, that those who advocate this view hold that the work of salvation closes with the Gospel Age, and does not in any sense extend into the coming age. Only those who are begotten by the word of truth and quickened by the Spirit, will ever be made alive again, and called out of the death-state where they now are. This view of the final outcome of "the redemption that is in Christ Jesus" has many earnest advocates among those who are looking for the Lord. While this view may lack in comprehension, as to the extent of salvation, and even as to the extent of the resurrection, it is infinitely better, and incomparably better sustained by the Scriptures than the preposterous dogma of eternal torment. We will now introduce two quotations, the first setting forth the doctrine of eternal torment in these words:—"God is present in hell in his infinite justice, and Almighty wrath, as an unfathomable sea of liquid fire, where the wicked must drink in everlasting torture.

The presence of God in his vengeance, scatters darkness and woe through the dreary regions of misery. As heaven would be no heaven if God did not there manifest his love; so hell would be no hell if God did not there display his wrath. It is the presence of God which gives everything virtue and efficacy; without which there can be no life, no sensibility, no power. God is therefore himself present in hell to see the punishment of those rebels against his government, that it may be adequate to the infinitude of their guilt. His fiery indignation kindles and his incensed fury feeds the flames of their torments; while his powerful presence and operation maintain their being, and render all their powers most acutely sensible; thus setting the keenest edge upon their pain, and making it cut most intolerably deep. He will exert all his divine attributes to make them as wretched as the capacity of their being will admit." Think upon it, reader, that, according to this view, God, by creating the human race, has imposed upon himself the work of eternally tending the fires of hell! O, was it not bad enough for professed teachers of God's word to ascribe such a work to devils, without implicating our Heavenly Father—God who is love! For the authors of such misrepresentations of the Divine character our Savior may pray now, as once he prayed for his murderers,—"Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." The law of God's Universe is—"The wages of sin is death"—and it is plainly written on the pages of nature's volume as well as on the pages of revelation.

To this abhorrent doctrine of endless misery we have, in this paper, been presenting a counterview claiming that it is at the grave that the great and final separation between the saved and the lost will take place. The salvation of God will consist in redeeming the saved portion of the human race out of death by raising this portion up to eternal life. As all the rest are morally unfitted for the life of the ages, they are left behind in their graves eternally. Well, the outcome of man's creation, according to this view, is—"The survival of the fittest." Very opposite to this conclusion are the words of a very noted and eloquent author which we here give as a second quotation. "Our religion is not all a mistake. We are not visionaries. We are not 'unpractical,' as men pronounce us when we worship. To try to follow Christ is not to be 'righteous overmuch.' True men are not rhapsodizing when they preach; nor do those who waste their lives who waste themselves in striving to extend the kingdom of God on earth. This is what life is for. The Christian in his life-aim is in strict line with nature. What men call his supernatural is quite natural. Mark well the splendor of this idea of salvation. It is not merely final 'safety' to be forgiven sin, to evade the curse. It is not vaguely, 'to get to heaven.' It is to be conformed to the Image of the Son. It is for these poor elements to attain to the Supreme Beauty. The organizing Life being Eternal, so must this Beauty be immortal. Its process toward the Immaculate is already guaranteed. And more than all there is here fulfilled the sublimest of all prophecies; not Beauty alone but Unity is secured by the Type—Unity of man and man, God and man, God and Christ and man till 'all shall be one.' Could science in its most brilliant anticipations for the future of its highest organism ever have foreshadowed a development like this? Now that the revelation is made to it, it surely recognizes it as the missing-point in Evolution, the climax to which all creation tends. Hitherto Evolution had no future. It was a pillar with marvellous carving, growing richer and finer toward the top, but without a capital; a pyramid, the vast base buried in the inorganic, towering higher and higher, tier above tier, life above life, mind above mind, ever more perfect in its workmanship, more noble in its symetry, and withal, so much the more mysterious in its aspiration. The most curious eye, following it upward, saw nothing. The cloud fell and covered it. Just what man wanted to see was hid. The work of the ages had no apex. But the work begun by Nature is finished by the Supernatural—as we are wont to call the higher natural. And as the veil is lifted by Christianity it strikes men dumb with wonder. For the goal of Evolution is Jesus Christ. The Christian life is the only life that will ever be completed. Apart from Christ the life of man is a broken pillar, the race of men an unfinished pyramid. One by one in sight of Eternity all human Ideals fall short, one by one before the open grave all human hopes dissolve. The Laureate sees a moment's light in Nature's jealousy for a Type; but that too vanishes

'So careful of the type?' but no
From scarped cliff and quarried stone
She cries, a thousand types are gone:
I care for nothing, all shall go.'

All shall go? No, one Type remains. 'Whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son.' And, 'when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.'"

As we read the Scriptures, we are persuaded that a far greater number will be saved than those who are raised from the dead and changed from among the living at the advent of Christ preparatory to arising to meet him in the air in order to being ever with him. With our present [illegible] we should find it difficult to exp[illegible] tain passages referring to the [illegible] to come to harmonize with this view. But as we are aiming to present some views adverse to the doctrine of endless misery, we will forbear giving any reasons for dissent from this theory, and close this paper.

A FAIR PROPOSITION.

We are glad from our heart that Br. Wilson has sent the following proposition, which we place in our own column that it may not be overlooked. It relieves us of quite a little mountain of perplexity and difficulty, and, at the same time, shows that our readers choose to have the columns of THE RESTITUTION occupied with other subjects. It was out of deference and kind feeling to some of our brethren, who entertain the views known as The Larger Hope, that has induced us to admit some articles favoring the theory. It will be far better to have the discussion printed and circulated in Pamphlet form, as it will all be before the reader at once. As Bro. T. L. Harvey, of Berlin, Arkansas, has commenced writing, he may think best to accept the proposition. Should he decline Bro. G. B. Stacy of Amelia, Va.—may accept. We mention these because we believe them to be well posted on their side of the question. It is enough to say in conclusion that if the discussion is carried on it must be in pamphlet form. Bro. Wilson's letter follows.

Future Probation.

Dear Restitution:

It is not my intention to enter the lists of disputants over this doctrine through the columns of our paper. I deplore the fact that too much space is given to its discussion already. This space, in my humble opinion would be better devoted to articles on the first principles of our faith, so that the paper can be used as a missionary tract to scatter among unbelievers.

I have a proposition to make to some one of those writers who believe in this doctrine and are anxious to publish their views to the world. If some one of them will take the affirmative I will take the negative of the following question:

Resolved, That the Scriptures teach a future probation for the dead who have died without a knowledge of the way of life.

The discussion to be embodied in a 64 page pamphlet, each using 32 pages as follows. The affirmative will occupy 8 pages with his first article; then the negative will follow in the next 8 pages, and so on alternately through the pamphlet. About 650 words will fill a page. This will give each a "fair chance" and should exhaust the subject. I will agree to stand the whole expense of publishing the pamphlet and will furnish them singly or in quantities to any one who wants them at cost of publication. As soon as the first installment is received from whoever takes the affirmative, it will be immediately put in type, and proofs of it and my reply also in type will be furnished the writer. The manuscript must be carefully prepared and legibly written. It would also be a good plan to number the paragraphs for handy reference. When once in type and the proof corrected no changes can be made as electrotype plates will be made and the type distributed.

I make this proposition in hopes that some one will take it up and that this pamphlet will suffice in lieu of an endless discussion of the subject in the columns of THE RESTITUTION. Who will affirm? JAS. W. WILSON,

Austin, Ill.

THE TEMPORAL POWER OF THE POPE.

In a late address to the College of Cardinals the Pope urged that Catholics everywhere should agitate for the restitution of the Papal supremacy, and spoke violently and bitterly regarding recent enactments in Italy. But it is exceedingly doubtful whether the Italians themselves would permit the inauguration of a Pope-king at Rome should the attempt be made. Even at the present time the person of the Pope is exposed to the threats of the Italian people. The day has gone by for Papal supremacy to be tolerated at Rome. He is now a contemptible puppet in the Eternal City and must make the best of it. And the end is not yet. He is on the down-grade toward a frightful precipice, and the plunge will be perdition. The blasphemous farce of Infallibility enacted in 1870 has turned out to be a very stupid piece of fallibility—a most complete exhibition of insane foolishness. Romanism has been on the decline and Protestantism on the increase in the seven-hilled capital ever since. As an evidence of this note the change. "There are now twenty-two Protestant places of worship in the [illegible] of Rome. [illegible] time is within easy [illegible]ory when [illegible] Protestant congreg[illegible]uld meet within the gates of Ro[illegible] even in a private house. Certa[illegible] revolution brought about in a quarter of a century is very remarkable. The gospel is free even in the city of Rome, and the Pope of Rome declares himself a prisoner in a melo-dramatic sense."

The blasphemous folly of the Ecumenical Council has by no means exhausted the stock of perverse foolishness, as the following from a late paper will demonstrate: "The Pope is the foundation of the building (the church of Christ), the king of the kingdom of God on earth, the visible head of the body of the church. But what is a king without a kingdom? a foundation without a building? a head without a body? To the exalted position of the Roman Pontiff all honor and obedience should be rendered by his children, bishops, priests and people. While the Pope is the subject of an earthly king he is not free to carry out his mission to humanity. Hence his children should unite in demanding that he shall enjoy such independence as will enable him freely to discharge the duties of his office."

No, indeed; he can no longer "carry out his measures to humanity." We thank heaven, and rejoice that he cannot. The world is more than satisfied with Popish measures. It wants no repetition of Bible burnings, ale do fes Bartholomew days, murderous crusades, or tortures in infernal inquisitions, till a duplicate of 50,000,000 or more of martyrs shall be sacrificed to the Moloch of Romanism. God is now about to carry out "his measures," and woe to the Man of Sin and to the Mother of harlots and abominations. There is another government at Rome now, and the following will explain its proposed measures:

"The new Italian penal code, which goes into effect next June, has caused a good deal of excitement in the Vatican, because of a provision in it which makes it a misdemeanor for the Catholic clergy to advocate, in the pulpit or out, the restoration of the temporal power of the papacy. This is the sharpest assault upon his cherished scheme that Leo has yet received—a home thrust which is simply unendurable; and yet it is difficult to see how King Humbert can act in any other way. He certainly has no right to resign his own authority as sovereign ruler over any portion of Italian territory to the Pope or any one else; and if he cannot so abdicate, it is time that a stop was put to this useless, and, in a certain sense, treasonable, agitation. The Pope, it is said, is preparing an encyclical in which he invokes the intervention of European powers in behalf of his temporal sovereignty; but such intervention—it is needless to say—will not be granted."—Zion's Herald.

MUST WE OBEY GOD?

The idea which people entertain in reference to obedience to God, seem to me to be very far from the truth. They obey just so far as it suits their notions of propriety, or not at all. God, though the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, is treated with less respect and reverence than would be the humblest autocrat of earth. His commands are looked upon with indifference, often with contempt. Men dare to contradict him, when he proposes the terms for their salvation; and to reply, "it is not essential, that I do this or that, your mercy is so great, that you will save me anyhow." What an answer to make to God! As if he has not the right to dictate to man the laws whereby he shall become a citizen of his glorious commonwealth, and a child of his family! "Not essential to salvation!" How, oh man, do you know? How dare you say so of what God has told you must be done? You come to the baptismal stream, and will not cross, though that very step is set before you as a test of loyalty, or non-loyalty to God, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost:

Teaching them to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you:"

"He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

These are not the words of man, neither is this law, the law of man: it is law made by the great Jehovah himself. All who are taught are to be baptized, all who believe, are to be baptized.

Our feelings have nothing to do with the matter. To obey is imperative. Faith is made essential, and baptism is made essential. He that believes, shall be saved, is not all,—it is he that believes and is baptized shall be saved. We are to observe all things that Jesus has commanded, not a part.

Why should God command us to do a thing that we might be saved; if it were not necessary that [illegible] should be done? Why enunciate his laws at all? Why give any revelation? Why send his Son into the world to die, that we might be saved? If one has a right to say, that baptism is not essential, another has a right to say that faith is not essential.

Yet the one rests on the other. The man who says he believes God, and who yet refuses to be baptized, has really no faith at all in God. Let me illustrate: Abraham was called to get out of his country and far away from his kindred into a land that God would show him, and it was told him, that he should be made a great nation, and be blessed and that in him all families of the earth should be blessed. He believed God; but how? By "departing, as the Lord had spoken unto him." The blessing was contingent upon the obedience: Abram's faith, was shown to be faith, by his going where God had told him to go.

Saul thought it not essential to obey God, when commanded to destroy the Amalekites. He thought he might safely spare one man, and some sheep and oxen, but, how did God look upon his course? As having turned back from following him, as having rejected his words, and as having committed the sin of rebellion.

His course showed a want of faith in God, just as ours show our want of faith, when we refuse to keep all God's commandments.

Just as he committed the sin of rebellion, so do we commit the sin of rebellion when we refuse to do that which he has told us must be done.

He says, in answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of your sins." Not a part of you, but "every one of you." That is God's law, disobey at your peril.

THE BIBLE LESSONS.

Dear Helpers in the Work:

Be of good cheer. So far as heard from, the Lessons are well received. One beloved sister says that they are a help to her in preparing her sermons. At another point they are frequently used in social meetings and liked very much. One brother says, "No one who considers these lessons, will fail to be greatly benefitted. They are a great help to the Bible Class Teacher." A sister writes, "We like the Bible Lessons very much and think them a great addition to the paper."

RESURRECTION.

A future, literal resurrection of the dead is so plainly taught in God's word that it seems very strange indeed that anyone professing faith in that inspired book should call it in question. That an infidel should reject it is what might be expected, disbelieving as he does, everything supernatural, but that a professing Christian should deny it on the ground of philosophic or scientific reasons, is very inconsistent and shows more faith in the theories of men than in the plain statements of divine revelation.

Dear Restitution:

I renew my subscription as time is out. I dare truly say THE RESTITUTION has reconstructed my mind wonderfully; I mean brought it back 1800 years to the teachings of the apostles. Glory to God for that. Standing in the liberty of the sons of God I cannot help praising God continually for this means to illuminate my mind, to burst the bands and cast off the shackles that enslave. Truly the Lord is leading me. He is preparing a people for his name. While we have this assurance, O let us walk in the light, before our Heavenly Father with a pure heart, who has made it so easy for us to come to him and be saved. The ways of the Lord are pleasantness and all his paths are peace. O it is a pleasant reflection to have the mind free from all the rubbish of orthodoxy and creeds, and to soar heavenward as on eagle's wings to give glory to God and in return receive such an abundance of heavenly joy that our hearts cannot hold it, but that it even overflows the eyes. I thank God that by the reading of your paper I have gotten clearer views of the love of the Father in sending his Son, our Lord, who has redeemed all his people from their sins, and has implanted all the attributes of God in man, his child, in a small degree, which we must cultivate day by day, walking in the fear and sacred nearness with God, taking the holy Savior as our pattern and guide. Estimation of the Guilt of Dishonesty. Luke xvi. 10.

There is a tendency in gross and corporeal man to estimate the criminality of injustice by the amount of its appropriations....to count the man who has gained a double sum by his dishonesty, to be doubly more dishonest than his neighbor,—to make it an affair of product rather than principle; and thus to weigh the morality of a character in the same arithmetical balance with number or with magnitude.

Now this is not the rule of calculation, on which our Savior has proceeded in the text. He speaks to the man who is only half an inch within the limit of forbidden ground, in the very same terms, by which he addresses the man who has made the farthest and the largest incursions upon it. It is true that he is only a little way upon the wrong side of the line of demarcation. But why is he upon it at all? It was in the act of crossing the line—and not in the act of going onwards after he had crossed it—it was then that the contest between right and wrong was entered upon, and then it was decided, that was the instant of time at which principle struck her surrender. The great pull which the man had to make, was in the act of overleaping the fence of separation. There might, after the absolute limit between justice and injustice is broken, be another limit against the extending of a man's encroachments, in a terror of discovery, or in a sense of interest or even in the relentings of a kindly or compunctious feeling towards him who is the victim of injustice.

But this is not the limit with which a man's truth or a man's honesty, has to do. These have already been given up. He may only be a little way within the margin of the unlawful territory, but still he is upon it; and the God who finds him there, will reckon with him and deal with him accordingly.

As it regards the material of injustice, the question revolves itself into a mere computation of quantity. As it respects the moral of injustice, the computation is upon other principles. The Savior stands on the breach between the lawful and the unlawful, and he tells us, that the man who enters by a single footstep on the forbidden ground, immediately gathers upon his person the full hue and character of guiltiness.

It is not by a gentle transition that a man steps over from honesty to dishonesty. There is a wall between them rising up into heaven; and the high authority of heaven must be stormed, ere one inch of entrance can be made into the region of iniquity.

The morality of the Savior never leads him to gloss over the beginnings of crime. His object ever is, as in the text before us, to fortify the limit, to cast a rampart around the whole territory of guilt, and to rear it before the eye of man, in such characters of strength and sacredness, as should make them feel that it is impregnable."—Chalmers.

Survivors of the Ancient Samaritans.

A letter from Haifa, in the Holy Land, to the New York Sun, describes the last remnants of the ancient Samaritans. These people now number 160, and reside at Nablous. They are descendants of colonists sent into the country by Shalmaneser, King of Assyria, when he led the children of Israel into captivity. The colonists came from a number of different towns and nationalities under Assyrian rule. Some were from Babylon, others from Hamath and Sippara. These people received instruction in the Jewish religion through teachers sent by the Assyrian King and finally intermarried with the Jews. But the Jews always hated them, and hate them to this day. This feud is the oldest in existence. The Samaritans finally adopted the Jewish religion somewhat modified by their own. They preserve to this day some very important ancient manuscripts, fragments of the Old Testament.

LONGING FOR HOME.

We long for the kingdom—we long for the King,
Who will wrong overthrow and will righteousness bring;
To the ends of the earth will wars make to cease,
And will gladden the nations with plenty and peace.

We long for the kingdom—we long for the King,
When with shouts of Hosanna grand Salem shall ring;
Salvation her walls, and her gates shall be praise;
We glory in prospect of Salem's bright days!

O, are there not signs of the wonderful day?
Behold the great nations in battle array;
Each ruler gives warning, my people prepare!
Lo! armies of millions are waiting for war.

Frail man falls before the sweep of the cold;
None stand its dread blast, its death-chilling hold!
Flood, earthquake, and fire, the avalanche, fall,
Plunge thousands in ruin, and nations appall.

O, hasten the conflict, though dread be its scene,
We know in its darkness will light intervene!
The times of the Gentiles—begone their dark sway,
Speed, speed the glad morning of Zion's bright day! H. H.

THE NEW COVENANT.

"Behold the days come saith the Lord that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake although I was an husband to them saith the Lord. But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel. After those days saith the Lord, I will put my laws in their inward parts and write it in their hearts and will be their God and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor and every man his brother saying, know the Lord, for they shall all know me from the least of them unto the greatest of them saith the Lord; for I will forgive their iniquity and I will remember their sin no more." Jer. xxxi. 31-34.

My purpose in calling attention to this prophecy is to answer the question, Has this covenant been made or must we still look for its being made some time after the Lord Jesus returns?

I have the opinion that it has been fulfilled as far as it was possible to be fulfilled by the ministry of Jesus and his disciples.

The prophecy of Dan. ix. 24-27 points to this same covenant, "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city to finish the transgression and to make amend of sins and to make reconciliation for iniquity and to bring in everlasting righteousness and to seal up the vision and prophecy or prophet and to anoint the Most Holy. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate even until the consummation and that determined be poured upon the desolate or the desolator."

The 24th verse details the several things to be done at the end of seventy weeks from a given time. Verse 27 states that in the midst of the seventieth or last week he the Christ shall confirm the covenant. This latter statement is not conclusive in itself as it does not say whether the old or the new. But from the fact that he was the end of the law on the one hand by fulfilling every jot and tittle of it, he at the same time and by the same act confirmed the new. And here let us listen to Jesus himself before he suffered, but just in full view of his death as the next event after. "And he took the cup and gave thanks and gave it to them saying, Drink ye all of it for this is my blood of the new testament (covenant) which is shed for many for the remission of sins." There are slight corrections in Mark and Luke's record and also in Paul's statement in 1 Cor. xi. 25, but not enough to change the substance of his assertion that his blood was shed with his own consent to confirm the new covenant relating to the remission of sins. There is also his further statement after he suffered death and was alive again. "And he said unto them, Thus it is written and thus it behooved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead the third day that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations beginning at Jerusalem. And ye are witnesses of these things. And behold I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." Luke xxiv. 46-49.

Again in Paul's account of what Jesus said unto him when he called him on his way to Damascus we have the same thing in full detail. "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest, but rise, stand upon thy feet for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee, delivering thee from the people and from the Gentiles unto whom now I send thee, to open their eyes, to turn them from darkness unto light and from the power of Satan unto God that they may receive the forgiveness of sins and inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith that is in me.

Paul in his second letter to the Corinthians iii. 5, 6, says, "Our sufficiency is of God who hath made us able ministers of the new testament (covenant) not of the letter but of the spirit, for the letter killeth but the spirit giveth life." Now this same covenant Paul affirms in his letter to the Galatians was confirmed to Abraham and his seed the Christ four hundred and thirty years before the law was given and could not be disannuled by any law that came after it. It was confirmed by God, the apostle says, but it could not be confirmed by Christ before he was born nor until he personally confirmed it as Abraham did by making the sacrifice of himself as it was written in the book of God's law. When the Christ came into the world he said to God, "Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not but a body hast thou prepared me. In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure. Then said he, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do the will of God. He taketh away the first (or Mosaic) that he may establish the second covenant, by the which will we are sanctified by the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once. This body was without spot as the apostle says in the same letter. How much more shall the blood of Christ who through the eternal spirit offered himself without spot to God purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God." Heb. ix. 14. It is this cleansing of the conscience which above all others stands out in contrast with the Mosaic which simply gave temporary relief while the second or new gave permanent, "For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." And here he refers to the prophecy of Jeremiah xxxi. 33, 34, and says, Whereof the Holy Spirit also is a witness to us for after that he had said before, "This is the covenant I will make with them after those days saith the Lord I will put my laws into their hearts, and into their minds will I write them, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." Now where remission of these is there is no more offering for sin.

The following sentences clearly show that the apostle held that he and all his brethren were then under the conditions of the new covenant for he says, "Having therefore brethren boldness to enter into the holiest of all by the blood of Jesus by a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us through the vail, that is to say his flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God, let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience and our bodies washed with pure water." Heb. x. 14-22.

If therefore the apostle and his brethren of the Hebrews were in possession of the things promised by the Lord in Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, it also follows that all his brethren of the Gentiles were in the same state of favor. The things specified in the new covenant are,

First. I will put my laws in their hearts.

Second. And in their minds will I write them.

Third. Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more.

In Jeremiah it is stated, "And I will be their God and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord, for they shall all know me from the least of them unto the greatest of them saith the Lord, for I will forgive their iniquity and I will remember their sins no more."

The apostle quotes the first and last parts, or to put the matter more definitely, he quotes the cause and the effect but not some of the intermediate effects, which however cannot be separated really although not quoted by the apostle.

I think therefore that these different statements from Jesus and Paul answer the question definitely in the affirmative. That from the time Jesus confirmed the new covenant by his own blood and entered into the presence of God in possession of eternal redemption from sin and death and sent forth the Holy Spirit upon his disciples upon the day of Pentecost the new covenant came into active operation and that everyone who believes the gospel of its confirmation by Jesus Christ as it is historically given by the four gospel narratives, and is afterwards baptised into his name, has the law of God written in his heart and has all his past sins and iniquities forgiven. He is then in the position the apostle describes as "Having his heart sprinkled from an evil conscience and his body washed in pure water and able to enter into the holiest of all by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us through the vail that is to say his flesh."

This embraces the profession of our faith or confession of our hope which we are exhorted to hold fast without wavering because he is faithful who has promised. And by which we are exhorted to consider one another and to provoke one another unto love and to good works. Not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is, but to exhort one another and so much the more as we see the day approaching. For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins but a fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries. He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses, of how much more sorer punishment suppose ye shall he be thought worthy who hath trodden under foot the Son of God and hath counted the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing and hath done despite unto the spirit of grace. For we know him that hath said, vengeance belongeth unto me I will recompense, saith the Lord; and again, the Lord shall judge his people. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

If my contention be right we, i. e., the house of Israel and the house of Judah and afterwards the Gentiles have been favored with the confirmation of the new covenant being preached to us by those who were eye witnesses of what they preached, then we today are those who believe what they preached or we are rejecters of it or we are ignorant of the whole matter. If we are believers of it then God's law is written in our hearts and minds, our sins and our iniquities are forgiven and remembered no more. God has become our God and we are his people. We are all taught of him. We are heirs of God and joint heirs with his Christ of God's kingdom and glory. But if we are not believers of what the apostles preached after we have read the testimony which they gave then we are despisers of the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified, and we treat despitefully the spirit of grace which performed signs and wonders in confirmation of the apostle's testimony and expose ourselves to the condemnation of despisers. If totally ignorant our criminality depends upon the causes of our ignorance whether personal or otherwise. One thing is distinctly affirmed by Paul and that is that those who know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power. Let us therefore act the part of wise men and give an attentive ear to him who now speaks to us from heaven, for if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth how much more shall not we escape if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven." Heb. xii. 25. W. Ellis.

Report of Labor.

I began meetings at Hesperia Jan. 29th, preaching twelve discourses. My work there was needed as much to build up the church as to bring the truth before those who were out of Christ, and I believe it was not lost. I left the church in a much better condition than when I went there. I expect to visit them again in about a week to remain several days.

All who were present at the Philadelphia conference and many others are, we know, waiting anxiously to hear of our work in Grand Rapids. Wife and I went to that city Feb. 16th, advertised our meetings in four of the daily papers, engaged a hall and went to work. We preached twelve discourses. Had to pay $2.60 a night for a hall. Circumstances were somewhat against us while there. A saloon was kept under the hall and at any time during the meeting could be heard the rough, loud laughter of the occupants. Then we could not occupy the building every evening as the Sabbath Adventists held their meetings Sunday evening, and the Baptists on Friday evening.

We have only a few believers in the city and while some, thank God, done all in their power to make the work a success, others never came near the meetings once, and we were not encouraged by such remarks as this: "There is no use of their trying to do anything here, for they cannot." We feel confident if all who knew the truth would work unitedly and with a spirit of determination there might be a church yet planted in that city. We worked very hard and done the best we could. But wife's health is poor and she could not be with me all the time, and her presence was greatly needed especially to assist in the singing as there were but few to help in that part of the worship. However our numbers increased until we had about forty. Then we had to wait from Thursday evening until Sunday morning, again from Sunday until Tuesday evening. Of course the numbers and interest were much less, and we concluded, as the brethren at Fisher were very anxious for meetings there just at that time, to adjourn meetings in the city for a time until a more desirable house could be provided.

As yet we had been unable to reach one of the "Children of Zion," but there is some hope at present of reaching them if we can have the means to go there. Some become greatly discouraged if success is not immediately achieved in any undertaking. But it is something with our work like a man driving for a well; if a vein of water is not at first found he locates another place where he thinks it may be possible to reach it, and after perhaps several attempts he is successful. The Sabbath Adventists worked hard with their "city of tents" three months at a time for two years before they succeeded in raising their church of about sixty members, and they had any amount of capital at their command with scores of helpers, and we might be successful if the State of Michigan would throw themselves into the work, use the means God has given them, procure a tent, and now, very soon, at our June meeting perhaps, arrange for some tent work there. Have more than one or two to roll the car; let our brethren gather from all parts of the State and elsewhere if possible, and give it a grand impetus, and when God sees that we are in earnest he will speedily help us.

O brethren let us do something. The time is so short to work in and there are so few to give their time or money to God's service. It is not right for this State to expect the National Conference to help us do this work when hungry ones are crying for the bread of life in different States who need this help so much more than we do, hearts who have long since been in the Master's keeping, lonely and isolated, without any means of their own to pay for an evangelist's work, are crying the old Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us." Shall we close our ears when we can bring to them the glad sweet message of redeeming love? Will we be selfish enough to rest contentedly because we have found the pearl of great price, and see others perish within sight of the kingdom almost? Shall "weighed in the balance and found wanting" be said of us? God help us to be true and liberal with what has been given us, whether it be money, a gift to preach, to write, to say comforting words, or whatever it may be that will help his cause.

But I have wandered from the subject. I went from Grand Rapids to Fisher March 18th, staid there three weeks, preaching twenty-four sermons in all. Never was there better interest, a well-filled house night after night. I baptized nine, one sister from Grand Rapids. A very sad accident happened while we were at this place. Two young men were wrestling just before service was to begin, when one fell upon the other and broke his neck, causing instant death. He was the adopted and only child of his widowed mother, who had lost her husband about three years ago very suddenly. The poor woman was nearly crushed with grief, but was comforted in her sad bereavement with the bright hope beyond. She had taken the name of Christ by baptism the week before. I preached the young man's funeral sermon on Saturday following his death, to a very large audience.

The next Wednesday I had to close the meetings as I was quite sick, having worked constantly for about six weeks. Wherever we work we try to convince the people of the great necessity of adopting the system of finances proposed by the National Conference, and although it seems like slow work we trust all will eventually see the need of adopting it, as our cause can never be a success while depending on this haphazard way of getting money. During the time of holding our meetings I was called away three times and wife once to preach funeral sermons. Thus the warnings keep coming, "Be ye also ready." Yours working for the Master, Shall we have a Creed?

Yes! We must, and should have a creed. The only question is, what creed shall we adopt? Among the multitude of sectarian creeds, that constitute the platform on which they stand, we cannot find any that suits us. These creeds, from the Westminster confession of faith, and the thirty-nine articles of the Church of England, down to the latest human creed, embody much truth and well expressed. But they lack one essential quality,—they are uninspired, and hence imperfect documents,—their authority is merely human and not divine. But holy men of old have written as they were moved by the Holy Spirit; a creed which is perfect and inspired of God. "All Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction and for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works," 2 Tim. iii. 16. This Scripture, or writing, forms a perfect creed and discipline. We can step on to this platform without any fears of falling through, because it is the "foundation of prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Paul says, "My speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." "That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God," 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5. "Which things also we speak not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth, comparing spiritual things with spiritual. Paul writes to Timothy (i. 13,) "Hold fast the form of sound words which thou hast heard of me." The apostle has written out this form of sound words for the benefit of the disciples to the end of the age. In the Scriptural form of sound words, we have the Gospel with all its doctrines and duties, as well and plainly stated as human language can do it. "The man of God is thoroughly furnished for every good work," by the revealed word of God. Paul said to the afflicted Christians at Thessalonica, "Comfort one another with these words,"—words about the coming of the Lord and resurrection. Can these words, or any other inspired words be improved upon or made any plainer? If there are some things "hard to be understood" through the nature of the subject and our limited capacity, yet the Gospel plan is made exceedingly clear in the Old and New Testaments. We, as a people, have made great progress in that knowledge of the Scriptures in the past thirty years, by comparing "spiritual things with spiritual," and by adopting the plan of literal interpretation. When the light of the true gospel, and of the "blessed hope" broke in upon us, it found us in bondage to these human creeds—shut up in these sectarian pens. But, as unruly sheep, we jumped over the fence, and have since fed in all the green pastures of the Bible with that perfect liberty wherewith Christ maketh free. Now, shall we return to a similar bondage by adopting another human creed? Shall we allow any men, however good or wise, to write out such creed article by article, and demand our submission to it on pain of excommunication? or, as a condition of entering the church of Christ? If we believe the Gospel and obey Christ, are we not baptized into the body of Christ? But some among us say, we are in a loose condition, are not doing what we should to spread the truth. Well, let us be corrected by the word —"not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together;" exhort each other as the day approaches—observe the ordinances—give as the Lord prospers, etc. The trouble with us is, not that we need to be bound together by a human creed, but that we do not believe the one we have got already, and thus feel its power and walk by its discipline. The world has crept in and choked the word, and we are unfruitful to a great extent. A new consecration is necessary. The doctrine of "the Bible a sufficient creed," has prevailed over sectarian opposition so much, that the oldest sect in the land—the Congregationalists—are giving up their creed as a test of church membership. (See the late action of their association in Ohio).

A few years ago the Congregationalist ministers of this section invited me to meet with them, and hear their essays on "the state of the dead," "on the kingdom," etc. I did so, and was invited to join in criticising these productions. My criticisms of doctrine made such a stir that they had to construct a creed for the association to keep me and all such out. Human creeds, as tests of church fellowship, or saving faith, have always in the past, and must necessarily produce divisions among Christians and prevent a free investigation of the revealed word. But, it is alleged in favor of a creed, that all say they believe the Bible, or Gospel, when it is evident they understand neither. Well, instruct such, and lead them to understand the true Gospel, believe and obey it. "Preach the word" from the lips of Christ and the apostles, and thus induce men to adopt a platform, every plank of which is inspired, and therefore authoritative. "If any brother err from the truth" or step off from the Divine platform, or "form of sound words," he can be disciplined by Divine authority, but if he denies any human creed, or "words of men's wisdom," he simply defies human authority. No brother has any right to make out an epitome of Bible doctrine, and demand that others shall subscribe their names to it as a condition of fellowship. "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage."—E. Hoyt, May, 1875.

A Horseback Ride through Palestine!

The Dead Sea lies about 1300 feet below the level of the Mediterranean. We pass over barren hills and along deep and lonely ravines. We ride single file with the Sheik proudly leading the procession. From some heights the sea seems to lie at our feet nestled in the mountains, but we find that it is far away. From the new Russian tower on the Mount of Olives, I afterward have a fine view of this sea which is eighteen miles distant in a straight line. This wilderness is the one in which John the Baptist preached. How fitting it was that Christ's work did not begin at the Dead Sea, the place of desolation, but at Galilee, the scene of beauty and life, for he was to remove the blighting influence of sin and fill hearts with new life. We pass a number of Bedouins, on camels, on their way to Bethlehem from east of the Jordan. They are carrying wheat to market. They look wild and daring. We are glad to be protected by the Sheik. But the truth is that he is usually employed to avoid being robbed by his own clan. The sea is not so much a scene of death as I expected to find it. There are little springs and bushes full of birds not far from the salt encrusted shore. Birds even fly over its waters. I sit down on the trunk of a tree carried there by the Jordan and untie my shoes, preparatory to taking a bath. We go in near the little island at the northwest corner of the sea. The water is clear and the shore quite pebbly. I find that one cannot sink, but floats like cork. There is no danger of drowning, the only fear one can have is that he might get out so far as to starve. The water is 26 per cent. salt, 2 per cent. more than Salt Lake. The bitter water is a gentle reminder that I have been bitten some by the insects. My bath stuck to me well. About 11 a. m. we start for the ford of the Jordan, about 4 miles distant. This is the hottest ride I have had in Palestine. This desert waste near the crossing place of the Israelites must be the part referred to by the author of that beautiful hymn "On Jordan's stormy banks I stand." I think he was never there. But we believe that this land could be irrigated by the Jordan and made to bud and blossom with the beauty of vegetable life, and why is it not done? Because there is so little government protection given to farmers that the Bedouin east of the Jordan would come and rob them of their crops. I was a little disappointed in my first view of the Jordan. It is less than 100 feet wide, deep, muddy and flows quite rapidly. We stop at the ford, the traditional site of the crossing of the children of Israel. I must have freedom from the salt I carried from the Dead Sea, so, preparing myself for a bath I hold to the branch of a willow and jump into the sacred Jordan. It is quite deep. The Sheik comes to me in the midst of my ejaculations of joy and motions for me to get out. I immersed myself some fifteen times. This was the most refreshing bath I ever had. Below the ford is the traditional site of the baptism of Christ, and here the Greek Catholic pilgrims, Easter season, come and bathe. At the curves in the river the water is comparatively calm. We see three Bedouin cross to our side of the river. They undress, put their clothes in a goat skin bag, tie it up, and one puts the one end of the string between his teeth, and the baggage follows the swimmer. One had to be assisted by the others as he was not an adept at the business. But we must hasten to Jericho.

Gilgal is a little green knoll near Jericho, with no remains of the stones set up. We camp at the modern Jericho, which has the lowest class of people we have seen in Palestine. We made up a purse to see the women of Jericho dance. Rather strange for preachers. But the women did not dance with the men and the dance simply means standing in the form of a crescent with clasped hands and swinging to the right and left continuously and yelling something like wild animals. The filthy and dirty condition of the performers would not suggest that they dwell so near the pure waters of the Fountain of Elisha. The huts of the modern town resemble stone sheep pens, partially in ruins. Jericho was made famous by Joshua, Elijah, Zaccheus and Bartimeus.

On Saturday morning we start for Jerusalem, passing Mt. Quarantania, the supposed mountain of Christ's temptation. Its sides are filled with caves. I cut a branch of thorn, doubtless the kind with which the Savior was crowned.

Crossing the brook Cherith we begin to climb the mountains. From the heights we frequently look back and have a fine view of the Jordan valley. Below us, 500 feet, is the bottom of Brook Cherith. Here Elijah, trusting in God's word's, waited for the food which the ravens brought. We stop for lunch at the supposed site of the inn of the good Samaritan. Here the Sheik, after extracting extra backshish from us, departed. We journey on toward the city of the Great King. Climbing a long hill we come to Bethany. Here Jesus loved to visit Mary and Martha at their suburban home. This ruined town may again, when redeemed from the withering influence of the Moslem, be a beautiful place to live. It is raining very hard. My horse turns his rump to the storm and stops; just then I discover that I am holding my umbrella in the wrong direction and receive a good shower bath. The water runs in the road like a river. This is the rain for which the people of Jerusalem have been longing.

A little farther on, I behold the city. Truly it is "beautiful for situation." This sight of Jerusalem will never fade from my memory.—Levi Marshall, in Christian Evangelist.

JESUS BY THE SEA.

O, I love to think of Jesus
As he sat beside the sea,
Where the waves were only murmuring on the strand;
Where he sat within the boat,
On the silver wave afloat,
While he taught the waiting people on the land.

CHORUS:
O I love to think of Jesus by the sea,
O I love to think of Jesus by the sea,
And I love the precious word,
Which he spake to them that heard,
While he taught the waiting people by the sea.

O I love to think of Jesus
As he walked upon the sea,
When the waves were rolling fearfully and grand;
How the winds and waves were still
At the bidding of his will,
While he brought his loved disciples safe to land.

CHORUS:
O I love to think of Jesus by the sea,
O I love to think of Jesus by the sea,
How he walked upon the wave,
His beloved ones to save,
While he brought them safely o'er the stormy sea.

O I love to think of Jesus
As he walked beside the sea
Where the fishers spread their nets upon the shore;
How he bade them follow him,
And forsake the paths of sin,
And to be his true disciples evermore.

CHORUS:
O I love to think of Jesus by the sea,
O I love to think of Jesus by the sea,
And I long to leave my all
At the dear Redeemer's call,
And his true disciple evermore to be.

Immortality Illustrated by the Magnet, or Substantialism.

In my travels among the hills of W. Virginia I have lately come across a wonderful paper entitled "The Microcosm," edited by A. Wilford Hall, 23 Park Row, N. Y. The object of the paper is to enlighten the world concerning "substantialism." But what is "substantialism?" It is the doctrine that all the "forces" of nature [illegible] substances;" that [illegible] heat, sound, gravity, [illegible] immaterial entities, to which, as to cause, all the phenomena of nature are referable. To illustrate this "science" the magnet is considered the best adapted to the purpose. Thus discourses the associate editor, Mr. Robert Rogers, in the Microcosm of February, 1889:

"There is no single piece of scientific apparatus known to philosophical investigators so important for the demonstration of the truth of substantialism, as relates to a possible immortality for man, as the common steel magnet. Its conclusiveness in favor of the central proposition of the substantial philosophy, that the forces of nature are objective entities, at the same time immaterial substances in opposition to the mode of motion theories of the schools, is so overwhelming that to deny it is to express one's total incapability of reasoning logically on any philosophical subject."

Mr. Rogers states the matter very plainly thus far, and now we will let him explain the action of the magnet. "Place a handful of common tacks on a glass or porcelain plate, and then pass the poles of the magnet below the plate, moving it criss-cross and in circles, and watch the tacks darting hither and thither, following the minutest movements of the magnet! What conceivable idea can the rational mind form when disenthralled of the theoretic shackles of modern scholasticism, save that an immaterial substance radiates from the magnetic poles, passes unimpeded through the glass, fastens itself to the same potential substance in the tacks, and thus holds and manipulates them according to a fixed law of nature." This is the explanation.

Now we will let another of these advocates of the "substantial philosophy" apply it to the soul, because he speaks out more plainly on that subject. His name is John Crawford. He writes under the titles of Rev. D. D., F. R. S. Of course he is a man reverenced for his learning in theology, and also in science and literature. I copy from his "Specimen Lecture on the Substantial Philosophy," published in the Microcosm of February, 1889. He says: "The bodies of men and beasts are material organisms; but, within the material there is another organism which is immaterial.... The spiritual organism fills the physical in every part. The inner man also weaves its own material covering.... Not only does the incorporeal, vital organism repair the material, but it even builds the latter in the womb; and, while the material ovule in the goat, sheep, dog, wolf, man, etc., are precisely alike physically, viewed under the stronger lenses, the development is different, because the immaterial organism, which builds after its own pattern, is different in each and determines its own form. Now when the outer covering of the soul, the physical organism, is dissolved in death, it by no means follows that the inner, vital and spiritual organism, the intelligent and responsible soul perishes with it."

I will now quote from the editor himself concerning the "normal condition of matter." In the same paper on the "Inconsistency of the Molecular Theory," he says: "Thus we demonstrate by ocular inspection of material bodies which we can see and feel and weigh and measure that the normal condition of matter is rest, as implied in the very property of inertia, while motion is the abnormal condition, produced by some extraneous cause, since no inert body can either start, stop, or change its own motion."

Having read these statements, we have the theory and the premises upon which it is based.

1. Matter moves.

2. But matter cannot move itself.

Therefore that which moves matter is not material. The magnet being material does not move the tacks. Therefore there is an immaterial substance in the magnet which moves the tacks. The body of man is material, yet it moves. It cannot move itself, therefore there is an immaterial substance in it that moves it. Material bodies cannot organize themselves, therefore each body is the product of an immaterial organism which fills the material one.

But let us carry out the reasoning. The material body becomes dissolved in death, disorganized. This is the result of motion, therefore the body cannot disorganize itself; therefore that which disorganizes the body is an immaterial substance. The disorganized force must either be the immaterial organism that produces the material organism, or it must be another immaterial substance in the body. It is absurd to suppose that the same force which builds up the body and preserves it, does, at the same time, work to the derangement of the body and its destruction. Therefore the force which works out the destruction of the body, is another immaterial substance, and ought to be called the death force.

Question: Is this death force also an immaterial organism? If it is unorganized and can overpower the organized immaterial entity, what advantage is there resulting to the life force from its being organized? If the death force is an organism is it not a living organism? Or can there be a dead immaterial organism? If so, may not the life force become a dead organism when the death force has so deranged the material organism that the life force cannot operate upon it? Further, does the immaterial death force drive the immaterial life force out of the body? If so, does the life force, in being driven out become disorganized? If not, how is it that in the struggle with the death force it can maintain its own organic structure, but cannot maintain its position in the material body to which it naturally belongs? For if the life force built up the body from the start, and preserves the body, and moves the body at its will, it must have more power than any other force residing in the body; and, therefore, if it is itself an imperishable organism, it ought to be able to preserve its outer covering which by its own power it wove around itself, from wearing out, so long at least as the material with which to repair the waste is supplied by earth, sea and air.

But why does our "Rev." "substantial" philosopher talk about the "physical organism" being "dissolved in death;" since it is evident that if the substantial philosophy is true there is no death unless the immaterial organism dies. But if the immaterial organism dies, what light does "substantialism" throw on the great question of immortality? But our authors are of the opinion that the "vital, spiritual organism" does not "perish" with the body. Very well; then according to their theory there is no death; for the "inertia" of matter is the fundamental doctrine of their philosophy. Matter, say they, is "inert," that is, it has not the power to move; and therefore there is within every animal body an immaterial organism which moves the body.

Then it follows that material bodies are not alive, and not being alive cannot die. Then if the living, spiritual organism does not die, there is no dying; and if no dying, no dead. And if there are no dead there is no resurrection of the dead. And if there is no resurrection of the dead, then Christ was not raised. And if Christ was not raised our preaching, faith and hope are vain, and we are yet in our sins; and "those that have fallen asleep in Christ have perished." This is according to Paul's reasoning in his first letter to the Corinthians, fifteenth chapter. He also affirms in that chapter that "there is a physical body, and there is a spiritual body," but declares that the spiritual is not first, but the physical, and afterward the spiritual. But these substantialists, philosophers make the spiritual organism to be first, for they say that the spiritual organism builds up the physical. So they are found to be in opposition to the gospel. Life and incorruption, or immortality, is brought to light in the gospel, and the immortality thus brought to light is a state to be entered by the resurrection from the dead. From all these considerations the conclusion is that substantialism is a very unsubstantial foundation on which to build one's hope of a future life. The real spiritual organism, or "body," as brought to light in the gospel, which stands related to the future life of Adam's race, is Jesus himself raised by the power of God from the dead and endowed with power to raise the dead and transform their physical bodies into the image of his own glorified body. Substantialism as interpreted by these philosophers adds no light to the gospel light, and therefore is of no account to the Christian whose sole trust must be in the word of Jehovah, the God of Israel.

J. W. NILES.

With all their knowledge how little in truth do mankind know of mankind. It takes a lifetime to learn ourselves, and this only imperfectly. Humanity is understood by God alone. What facts turn up continually showing errors of opinion and judgment. Persons may be acquainted thirty years, and to use an Americanism may think they know each other "like a book," and lo! a surprise comes: and one says of another, I did not think he or she would have served me so. And this may be in family relationship. Persons of experience and observation who have lived to advanced years will not dispute me here. They know the fact: and this being so with the little compass of relationship, how minute must be our knowledge of mankind generally. True, the person who has watched his own heart, and been faithful with himself, need not wonder at what he sees and hears, for he discovers his natural vileness, and has some conception of what a wretch he would have been but for God's grace.

From the Scriptures we get the knowledge of men: look at Jeremiah xvii. 9. But a person may ask, how is it that man, made good at first, is so desperately wicked? We refer the one asking to Rom. i. 21, etc. Yet the person may honestly think this hard to understand in view of Ps. xxxii. 15. To such a thoughtful person we say the words are surely there. "He fashioneth their hearts alike," and it seems perplexing to think that human hearts should be so wicked. But where there is perplexity in view of this and that Scripture, the wise course is to humbly look to God for increasing light and deeper understanding. Searching the Word as for hid treasures and meekly persevering in prayer will be blessed of God, and where we cannot fathom we must wait for insight until God sees good to give it us. In knowledge there is growth: so never be stumbled, but constantly wait on God.

Good, eternal good, is the grand finale. "The former things are passed away." And while in the present state of things much appears sad, sad indeed, let us rejoice in view of the glorious and eternal issue.

THE CHRISTIAN HYMNAL

The above is the title of a New Hymn Book just issued from THE RESTITUTION office, containing 156 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, printed on fine paper, from good clear type. Music on every page, followed by two to four sets of words that go to the music, making over 400 hymns. To this is added 28 pages of Hymns for Children to use in Sunday Schools or at home. We want some good brother or sister in every locality to take this work in hand and introduce it to the friends in your neighborhood. Will every minister of our faith please send us the name and address of some good, energetic worker in each congregation where he labors.

Price 35 cents each; 3 copies for $1.00; 6 copies for $2.00; 12 copies, $4.00. Special rates to congregations wishing larger quantities to place in churches, or to those who will act as agents and introduce the work in their neighborhoods.

The annual conference of the churches of God in Christ Jesus, for the state of Iowa will be held at Ferguson, Marshall Co., Ia., commencing on Friday evening June 7, 1889. Ferguson is on the C. M. & St. P. R. R. Those coming on the C. & N. W., from the east change at Tama City, those from the west change at Marshalltown to the Iowa Central and change again at Pickering for Ferguson. Those coming on the Central Iowa change at Pickering for Ferguson. There will be teams at Ferguson to carry all who come to camp.

All believers in the gospel of the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, and who take the Bible as their creed, and who live in harmony with its teachings in faith and works are earnestly requested to be present.

There are many reasons why you should come, among which are;

1. It will do you good.

2. You have an interest in the work to be done at the conference.

3. You have an interest in the work the conference is to do the coming year in the state.

4. The conference needs your help.

5. You ought not to forsake to assemble with the brethren.

6. We want your counsel in important business matters, a duty no one can do for you.

Let the meeting be the event of the season for all the brethren and sisters in Iowa. The people of the world have their important annual gatherings and why should not the Lord's people. Many of our people have already written us that they intend to come. In reality it will be a camp meeting. The camp ground will be near Ferguson eight miles south of Marshalltown, in a natural grove. The meeting must be self-sustaining, that is to say you will be expected to take care of yourself. There are no brethren in the immediate vicinity of the camp, but a team will go to town (a mile or two distant) and return each day for provisions, mail, etc., for the purpose of accommodating those who may need to send.

We will be near a church to which we can retire to hold meeting, in case of rain.

Last year there were six tents on the ground. Bro. John Garton and family made their tent on the ground. A bolt of sheeting, a needle and thread, and a blanket or two, or some quilts, is all the material needed to make a comfortable tent. A good sized trunk will hold all the baggage, including a few dishes, etc., etc.

We want to see you all there. Make a little sacrifice, if necessary, and come. Again we say come.

A. J. EYCHANER, Chairman.

FOUR NEW STATES.

North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Washington.

On February 22, 1889 the President signed the bill creating South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington states of the Union.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—The great Prairie State, to which the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three main lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown, and Sioux Falls. Go to South Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat, where healthful climate nurtures the most vigorous and brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states: the soil of whose fertile prairies is richer than the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Minot and Devils Lake land districts invite the home seeker to secure a free home. Magnificent daily train service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devil's Lake, Bottineau, and all other important points.

MONTANA, THE TREASURE.—Treasures in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 4,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile fields, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal; which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate, caused by warm winds from the Pacific. The St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only railroad passing through a continuous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountains. It runs through the Great Reservation of 18,000,000 acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wood, water and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls, with its 1,000,000 horse-power cataracts; immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free land; through Helena, the capital city and commercial centre of Montana, and Butte, the richest mining camp on earth, to San Francisco by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta Route, or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars, and free colonist sleepers of its own from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is absolutely the shortest line to Butte.

WASHINGTON.—The country of tall timber, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers en route for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass through Port Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without charge or delay. Distance to the Pacific Coast is same as by other lines, but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXVIII. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 15, 1889. NO. 19.

THE RESTITUTION

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

The God of Our Fathers, and Who He Is.

From the beginning of Genesis to the end of the Apocalypse according to the record of Revelation this expression, "The God of our fathers," as a familiar formula of identification, is constantly recurring in the writings of all the inspired "mouth-pieces" or "prophets" of this same personal God. He is moreover continually and consistently represented to be unchangeable and unvarying in all the attributes that belong to personality. "The same yesterday, today and forever" is the abreviated record. The preamble to his formulated assertion of law emphasizes also in a very marked manner an important fact that seems to have been strangely ignored even in these ages of wide-spread illumination, but great apostasy, namely that he is one Lord, however many instrumentalities personal and otherwise he may make use of in asserting this lordship.

Whoever therefore asserts the will of this one person is asserting this person's lordship or sovereignty and is in this sense per se one with him and glorifying him. On the other hand whoever is asserting equality in lordship or sovereignty is in this respect at least asserting his own personality and glorifying himself. Moreover whoever attributes to any other person an equality of lordship or sovereignty ignores this first postulate of revelation and becomes disloyal to this one God. And it was right here and nowhere else that the battle of God's covenant people with heathendom and polytheism of old was persistently and consistently fought. Just so is it today. The principle involved has not changed at all with the changing ages. The primacy is as important today as it ever was. It is just as impossible for you or me to be loyal to three persons as it ever was for heathendom to worship Baal and swear by the Lord God of our fathers."

Ignorance may cover a multitude of sins and a man's loyalty of heart may be a great deal better than his creed or the accepted postulates of erroneous reasoning. This is no doubt frequently the case. But this can[illegible] palliate nor excuse enlightened intelligence when the right appeals to covenant promises. It once appealed to Scribes and Pharisees "of the strictest sect" and they wilfully shut their eyes and ears. Were they excused? Their plea was not the silly one of agnosticism however, but gnosticism. They knew too much in their own estimation. They knew they had possession of their Lord's vineyard and were unwilling to render an account of their stewardship to his delegates the prophets or to his Son even when sent unto them.

In whose name did he tell them he, the Son, had come unto them? Was there any misunderstanding (as there is nowadays) on this point? Did he say I'm acting on my own authority and have come on my own errand, or did he say that he was acting under a power, and that too a power of attorney? Is he not called "our advocate"? Can one act as another's attorney or advocate except under "a power of attorney"? If I appoint another my attorney in fact can he do anything I have not authorized him to do? Am I any less myself personally because I have appointed him my agent and attorney in fact? Are the conditions relating to the personality of the two parties, namely the party of the first and the party of the second part changed at all whether we consider these two parties to be acting under ordinary law or "the law of the spirit of life"?

If my attorney in fact acting for me succeeds it is to my glory and advantage is it not? And if he fails it is to my shame and disadvantage, is it not?

Now "the God of our fathers" has said and reiterated, has he not, "my glory I will not give to another." Do you think the Christ in his prayer recorded in John, "And now O Father glorify me with the glory, etc.," is asking for something not in accord with this decree? If a father and son are in partnership would anyone be foolish enough to interpret the son's language in regard to their partnership business, "I and my father are one" to mean that they were one person in fact as well as in law? And yet it is upon just such foolish assumptions that theology has formulated church doctrines which the Christian church has accepted, adopted and enforced with church discipline in the face of common sense and the contradictions of reiterated revelation. And when called upon "to give a reason" for this sort of faith has forsooth been satisfied to give only the answer of the older apostasy and of all heathendom always, "mystery." "Great is mystery."

But personal loyalty to God is too great a thing and too important a matter and too fundamental a first principle to be lost sight of in the fog of mystery. The primacy of "state sovereignty" in its relation to a national sovereignty of states in the political assertion of the same pernicious principle. Loyalty to "state sovereignty" necessarily implies disloyalty to national sovereignty. "A bond-servant cannot serve two masters" is one of the fundamental assertions of the Christ himself. But this same bond-servant can and must serve every other bondservant of this one Lord who bought him and owns him. And in this economy "the one who serves best is chief" strange as it may seem when tried by the standards of heathendom.

If the Christ had asserted any other will than the will of the God of our fathers (his own even and "of himself") there would have been no warrant in our accepting him. But the best reason in the world for denying him if we were already followers of the God of our fathers.

There would be just as little reason and sense in the loyal citizens of this country confounding the personality of Washington and Lincoln, because they were both presidents of the United States and devoted to the national idea as to confound the personalities of the God of our Fathers and his Son Jesus Christ because they both assert the ultimate unity of all the nation and their confraternity, and because they are working in exact agreement towards this common end. Let us as Protestants be able to give a better reason for the faith that is in us than the absurd nonsense of the Schoolmen or the apostate theology which we have inherited from the Catholic spiritual harlot.

It is a good time now in this centennial of political loyalty to a person and an idea of nationality to reassert and emphasize another idea of nationality and its Leader and Author. In thus honoring him we will best honor the Christ his divinely appointed vicegerent on earth. "To him be the glory." For if you glory remember "to glory in the Lord." And what lord? The Lord God of our fathers. For this quotation above is from the Old Covenant Scriptures and is spoken of him authoritatively.

CHAS. GARDNER.

To the Church of God in Christ Jesus, Greeting.

"Beware of wolves that come to you in sheep's clothing."

My heart is made sad by the necessity laid upon me to expose the hypocrisy of one for whom not long ago I begged assistance in the name of the Lord. I verily believed that Basil Stephenoff was an earnest worker in the Lord's vineyard. But alas, how we misjudged. The following article I found in the World's Crisis, of Jan. 30th, 1889. It speaks for itself. I might add more of a similar character but I deem this quite enough to satisfy all that we were deceived in the one who echoed the Macedonian cry.

In response to my appeal for aid I have as yet received but $9.50. This I will return as also any that may yet come to me, to the persons who send it, as soon as I get time to go down town and get money orders. One brother sent five dollars. We intended to have added to the sum donated, but now will send it in another channel. Let us not be discouraged, beloved in Christ, but rest assured that there must be a genuine else there could be no counterfeit. The fields are indeed white, and the faithful laborers are few. Let us all pray the Lord of the harvest that he send forth more laborers into his vineyard. Your Sister in the Christ.

MRS. CARRIE WILLIAMS.

A WORD OF CAUTION.

While we are opening new fields in foreign lands for mission work, by corresponding with persons whose names we get, and learning who and what they are, whether worthy of our confidence, competent to manage mission work, and capable of using money properly, we use great caution and every facility to learn the qualifications of men we enlist to aid in the work. Even then we sometimes get deceived. If men are good Christian workers, they are not all capable of using money to advance the cause of truth. We therefore advise all our people who have the missionary spirit and means to bestow, to send it to those who have the best opportunities to know where it should be used, and who should disburse it. We have some faithful men to whom we send means to carry on the work, and to employ and pay proper parties, and not waste money.

Our experience in Macedonia should be a warning to all. Basil Stephanoff wrote his pathetic appeals for gospel missionaries beautifully, pungently, craftily, hypocritically, and lengthily. He deceived me. He deceived the A. A. F. M. Board. He got some money by it. I sent him but little. When he began to develop, I was slow to believe him a rogue. But I commenced a search for his character; I found testimony enough. He was a bad tree. I think our people ought to know more of him, that they may be on their guard about sending funds to strangers. I had heard he was educated in some school in America, so I asked him by letter, "Were you ever in America?" In his reply he was flaming with the love of Christ and his truth, closing with, "I have not time to tell you about being in America." In his next and next, he closed in the same strain. Then came a letter with five certificates from teachers, professors, and ministers, from Rochester, N. Y., Albion, N. Y., Hamilton, etc., highly recommending him to the public and to the churches. These were all claimed as copies. I was not satisfied, so I instituted an inquiry, and found the following testimony from those who have knowledge of Basil Stephenoff.

In 1876, he entered the Congregationalist mission school in Samokov, Macedonia. At the end of one year he was not considered of sufficient importance to spend money on to educate. He then became a Baptist. Some German Baptists put him into a Baptist seminary. After a few months, the principal and officers told him and his supporters they could not have him there in their school longer on any consideration. After that he was sent to America, by German Baptists, to the German Baptist seminary, in Rochester, N. Y. In a six-page letter from Dr. R—, a professor in that seminary, and editor of a monthly German paper, he speaks very explicitly of Basil Stephanoff's hypocrisy and ingratitude, as well as of his "vile habits." One sentence here is extracted: "I may here add that in the spring of 1885, Stephanoff wrote me, asking my pardon, and asked to be received again into the German department. But I answered him that he had deceived us too badly. We did not want to be deceived again by him." Stephanoff then went to Albion, N. Y., where he was received as a member of the Baptist Church, June 19th, 1882, from which he was excluded Sept. 24, 1884. Rev. Mr. R—, pastor of said church, says in a closing sentence, "In a word, everybody in this church that has had anything to do with him, believes him to be consummate hypocrite, and a thoroughly bad man."

Stephanoff was in Hamilton University one year. Dr. L—, Secretary of that institution, says that, "his habits and his reputation at the University were bad." Some Chicago philanthropists found him in western New York, and brought him to "Garrett Biblical Institute" in Evanston, Ill., and supported him there a short time. Mr. R—, D. D., a teacher of that school, says of Stephanoff, "Evidently, he is an unscrupulous rascal." Stephanoff then went to Battle Creek, Mich., and found free board and tuition among the Seventh Day Adventists, three months. Leaving them, he got help to go to Scotland, then to his mother's home in Monastir, Macedonia, where he soon commenced by letters to me and to the Crisis, the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us." We were deceived. I have since told him the above history of himself, and warned him not to write me again. He denounces all my informants as "liars and persecutors," pities me for believing them, and curses them "in the name of God. He says, "Within a few months I shall be clothed with the authority of a Greek bishop. Then woe, woe to Protestantism." Such is poor fallen human nature.—I. C. Welcome.

[This was sent some time ago but has been overlooked in our pressure of business and owing to the amount of matter crowding the columns of our paper for a few months past. It is sad indeed to be so deceived. ED. RES.]

Now is the Accepted Time, Now is the Day of Salvation.

For one with the Editor I am glad to know that our paper, THE RESTITUTION, will in the future be free from those ambiguous articles on a future probation for all those who have long since resolved back to the dust of death, and thus reaped their wages. Few of the readers of THE RESTITUTION can harmonize the general teachings of the Bible with such articles. It is perfectly safe for us to preach that now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation. The sentence of death as explained by God in the 3d of Genesis is too plain to be misunderstood by ordinary minds. "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return," perfectly harmonizing with Paul, "By one man sin entered into the world and death by sin," etc. Here we find no qualification, such as penal, spiritual, temporal, eternal, etc. The Bible simply says, "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die." "Sin brings forth death." "They that commit such things are worthy of death." It does not say you must die twice. Death is the antithesis of life, a total cessation of all the vital functions, when the organs have not only ceased to act, but have lost the susceptibility of renewed action. On account of the curse pronounced upon the woman, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception." This may account for the myriads of humanity that have come and gone from the stage of action during the ages upon ages in the past.

The question may arise, is God responsible for the existence of these generations, these masses who have lived and died like the beasts that perish? It is true, all breathing creatures have their being in him who is the fountain of life, but does this fact obligate him to raise them all from the dust of death of thousands of years duration? Does the Bible teach it? When we look at the teachings of the Scriptures as a whole, we do not find a very high estimate placed on the natural man. The testimony is, "Behold the nations are as a drop in a bucket and are accounted as the small dust in the balance." And in repeating this self evident truth, the prophet says, "All nations before him are as nothing and they are accounted as less than nothing and vanity," and in the Psalms we have similar language, "Verily every man at his best state is altogether vanity." Peter speaks of the righteous as scarcely saved, etc. Do not these with many other Scriptures teach that the natural man or fleshly birth (and which we get from Adam the first) gives no right to a future life? And surely God is under no obligation to give to mankind any other than the present life. But thanks be to God, provision is made through another Adam, the second man, the Lord from heaven. By one man (Adam) came death, so by one man (Christ) came a resurrection of dead ones. By becoming united to this last Adam through faith and obedience we become eligible to a resurrection to eternal life. Now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept.

To make the 21st and 22nd verses of II Cor. xv. teach a universal resurrection, to me does not seem to rightly divide the word of truth. It in fact does away with the distinction between the two classes, viz., those who are in Adam and those who are in Christ. The harmony would appear that those who are in Adam are a separate class from those in Christ and the latter only would become eligible to be made alive by a resurrection. The resurrection that that chapter brings to view is the resurrection of those that are Christ's at his coming. In the teachings of Jesus we find the resurrection set forth as a reward in itself, as in John vi. we have it four times repeated, "I will raise him up at the last day." Thus showing the resurrection is affirmed of a certain class who "look to the Son and believe on him." And again the answer of Jesus to the Sadducees concerning the resurrection. The implication is that certain ones would be accounted worthy of a resurrection from the dead to die no more. Such are equal to the angels and are the children of God being children of the resurrection.

The resurrection of Christ is the seal of the truth of the gospel. "He was declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead." On this doctrine of his resurrection is built our faith in his power to give life and glory to his followers. "He thus becomes the author of life to all them that obey him." If he had been confined to the grave, all our hopes (as in the case of his immediate disciples) would have been buried with him. But his resurrection is the cause, pattern and argument of ours. "God hath both raised up the Lord Jesus and shall raise us up by his power." "He is the resurrection and the life." "Because I live ye shall live also." "Knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also and shall present us with you." "If the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his spirit that dwelleth in you."

There is no vagueness no ambiguity in the above Scriptures. They are plain and easy to be understood. Our duty seems to me to be to proclaim the truth to the present generation, and not create difficulties in our minds of what God ought to do with the past generations of the wicked who have filled the cup of their iniquity and reaped corruption. Dear brethren it is for us "to be found in him, to know him and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings being made conformable to his death, if by any means we might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

JOHN O. WOODRUFF.

Youth's Column.

THE CHILDREN'S PART.

There is never a hand so weak and small,
If it be but a willing one,
But into its palm some task will fall
To be sweetly and wisely done,
Some work that none other can do so well,
As the one in whose palm the tiny task fell.

There are little griefs that a loving heart,
Will ever be glad to share;
The bearing for some one, their sorrow part
Too heavy alone to bear,
Will be kept in remembrance, by One who knows,
How heavy to bear are some griefs and woes.

A cup of cold water a child may give,
To the stranger beside the gate,
Though a simple act, may forever live
While deeds that are counted great
May forgotten be and be dimmed from sight
And lost in oblivion's starless night.

The smile on the lips of a little child,
May be prayer to a heavy soul,
And stained with the world and sin-defiled
Once again to God [illegible] goal,
Shall the tear-wet eyes be turned to love,
From the soil of earth to the pure above.

Christ rested his hands on each little head,
In blessing, but who may know,
But that touch gave him strength in that dread hour,
When he drank of his cup of woe?
That the thought of the children [illegible] his bear,
And made him stronger to bear his part?
With their hands in heaven and feet on the earth.

I count the help of a little child,
As something akin to God's dear worth—
A love so pure and undefiled,
That heaven is bliss it is sweet own,
When God calls the children his loved and his own.

S. B. McMANUS.

DON'T LET GO OF IT. SOME PLAIN TALK TO THE BOYS.

This is a grand world we live in, boys. Were all of us to sit down some day, when we have our chores and work done, and try to think out a plan for a new one, that should be a great deal better and nicer than this, we would probably give up the job after a little while as a very foolish and silly one, and then some wiser for our thinking and a great deal more humble, we could stand up and look as far as we could and think what a really, grand old place this is after all. How wisely everything has been made; how nicely everything has been fixed and adjusted, and how infinitely great and capable that Creative Power was. Who thought it all out? Who set the stars a going and the universe revolving? Who placed the waters and made them to ebb and flow? Who appointed a seed time and harvest, and made the seasons to follow each other?

Yes the world is a good one boys. Just as everything that God made is good. He doesn't bungle or make mistakes; it is only man in his puny wisdom, who makes mistakes and gets things confused and tangled up.

And I want to tell you of one mistake many men have made and you too many make it if you are not careful and prayerful.

The world, we concluded is a very good world, and you and I will give up the idea of trying to improve it from a material point of view.

God gave us the world and the Bible—two gifts that only he could give and he intended they should be always kept together. I don't think he meant we should live in one and enjoy all its bounties and lay the other upon the shelf as we would an old spelling book or geography after we had "been through it once." It was designed, I take it for our daily use—as much as the air and the sunshine. And this is what I want to say: I am not talking merely for the sake of talking but to warn you and befriend you and put you on your guard against a great evil and danger.

It is quite the fashion today among a good many intelligent, educated men and women to put the Bible aside or ridicule it and make fun of it, and sneer and laugh at it. And they treat those who hold the Book as a sacred one, the same way. They claim, they have gotten on a "higher plane of intelligence" as they call it and have left the Bible away behind and have progressed clear out of sight of it, and have no use for such a fogy old volume. It was well enough for their grandmothers to pour over it and follow its teachings, but they didn't know any better and had nothing better to follow. But they have been busy thinking out new philosophies and things and have finally gotten hold of something that is away ahead of the Scriptures and puts it on the retired list like an old lame soldier who has fought his day and is unfit for further service.

Boys, I want to warn you against this sort of men and women. They are a dangerous class of people and you have no use for them. You fasten right on to the Bible your mother reads and your mother believes in, and your mother prays by, and your mother lives by. You needn't fear that you will go wrong or get out of the right way. Keep a fast hold on the book, that speaks of "eternal life," "the kingdom of heaven," and "Honor thy father and thy mother," and that has the Lord's Prayer in and the Sermon on the Mount.

Don't be ridiculed, or sneered or jeered into giving it up. A book, every word of which has been right for early nineteen hundred years, hasn't all of it suddenly become wrong as many pretend to believe. The Bible came to stay just as long as there is any use for it and there will be use for it just as long as men and women do wrong and need forgiveness—just as long as men and women have sorrow and need comfort—just as long as men and women need God's love—and the Bible is the token of it.

Boys, keep a watchful eye on the Bible, on its precepts and its teachings. No amount of intelligence—no amount of learning can do away with one single truth it contains, and always remember this, No one can "leave it behind" as a guide—no human intelligence will ever get beyond it, and when you hear of people who have discarded it—who scoff at it—who laugh at it, you cannot be too sorry for them, or too glad for yourself that your faith in the Old Book is firm and fixed.

Think boys, everything, ever made by human hands, has tottered and fallen and been buried and forgotten, or will be, even mountains leveled and seas dried up, and this grand old volume, lives in all its beauty, nobility and perfection, a testimony of God's bounty and love to the children of men.

MAKING FUN OF PEOPLE.

Once when traveling on a stage coach I met with a young lady who seemed to be upon the constant lookout for something laughable. Every old barn was made the subject of a passing joke, while the cows and sheep looked demurely at us, little dreaming that folks could be merry at their expense.

All this was, perhaps, harmless enough. Animals were not sensitive in that respect. They are not likely to have their feelings injured because people make fun of them; but when we come to human beings, that is quite another thing. So it seemed to me; for, after a while, an aged woman came running across the fields, lifting up her hand to the coachman, and in a shrill voice begging him to stop. The good natured coachman drew up his horses, and the old lady, coming to the fence by the roadside, squeezed herself through between two posts which were very near together.

The young lady in the stage coach made some ludicrous remark, and the passengers laughed. It seemed very excusable; for in getting through the fence, the poor woman made sad work with her old black bonnet, and now, taking a seat beside the well dressed lady, really looked as if she had been blown there by a whirlwind. This was a new piece of fun, and the girl made the most of it. She caricatured the old lady upon a card, pretended to take a pattern of her bonnet, and in various other ways sought to raise a laugh at her. At length the poor woman turned a pale face toward her, and said:—"My dear girl, you are now young, and healthy, and happy. I am now old and forlorn. The coach is taking me to the death-bed of my only child. And then, my dear, I shall be a poor old woman all alone in the world where merry girls will think me a very amusing object. They will laugh at my old-fashioned clothes and sad appearance, forgetting that the old woman has loved and suffered, and will live forever.

The coach now stopped before a poor looking house, and the old lady feebly descended the steps. "How is she?" was the trembling inquiry of the mother. "Just alive," said the man who was leading her into the house.

The driver mounted his box, and we were upon the road again. Our merry young friend had placed the card in her pocket. She was leaning her head upon her hand; and you may be sure I was not sorry to see a tear upon her fair cheek.

I would like to say to the dear brethren of THE RESTITUTION and Church of God that I will be prepared to deliver discourses concerning the kingdom of God and Jesus Christ and him crucified to any company of believers who will pay my fare, giving my time as a sacrifice, looking to him who says, "Lo I am with you always." Those having no regular preaching will please correspond with me. Faithfully your brother in the blessed hope.

Dear Restitution:

I feel quite lonely here, as there are none of like precious faith in this section that I know of, except my own family. If there are any I should like to have them send me their address as I would love to get acquainted with them. I would be very glad if some good teacher could come this way and wake up an interest here.

JERUSALEM.

Bishop Blyth writes from Palestine that within a few years the Jewish population has risen from 20,000 to 50,000, and says, "There never was a time when the Jews listened with such attention to the claims of Christianity as they do now."

Messiah's Herald re-published a letter from Mrs. A. E. Davis in The Age to Come Herald, in which she says: "We have just passed through one of the most severe and trying storms ever known in this country. The gale commenced on Thursday, Dec. 13th, with heavy thunder, rain, hail, and snow to the depth of one foot, which remained on the ground for twenty-four hours. Then the rain commenced to pour down in torrents, and continued till the pools were filled to the top, giving the appearance of miniature lakes, and the cisterns overflowed. Today the sun is shining brightly, and all nature assumes a cheerful aspect. Of course there is great rejoicing over the almost unprecedented rainfall at this season. I learned today from a reliable source that more rain has already fallen this season, than all through the rainy season of last winter. There were, in all, last season 21 inches, and we are only a little past the middle of December. The Kedron is flowing rapidly, and next Sunday thousands will visit our old picnic grounds near Job's Well."

OUR PHILADELPHIA SERMON.

On Saturday, Nov. 25, 1888, we delivered a discourse at the Chapel of the Blessed Hope in Phila. Pa. which we propose to place in substance before our readers in our next issue. In our revised copy we shall present all the points and [illegible] as much of the identical language [illegible] retained in our reported extemporaneous address. We have changed expressions in some instances; abbreviated them in others; and, in others still, we have been a little more diffuse. In one place we have presented a thought on the Sabbath that was not presented in our spoken discourse. The address, as stenographically reported, was delivered during the time the National Conference was in session. As it will appear in print, it is the most lengthy article we have ever prepared for the press, and its length may deter some from perusing it at all. We think however that those who listened so kindly to the living speaker, will be glad to have the sermon in its revised form; and it is to them that we specially dedicate it. To those to whom we have never spoken they will have the substance of a sermon from the Editor. The theme is one of much importance, and the only regret is, that the discussion of the topic had not been in abler hands. To our dear Jewish friends the theme is important.

SOME SIGNS OF OUR TIMES. No. 7.

Last week we gave a part of a chapter from H. Grattan Guinness' book, "Light for the Last Days," on the decadence of the Ottoman power, and this week we give the remainder of the chapter, which is as follows:

"In a recently published 'Collection of Treaties and other Public Acts, illustrating the European Concert in the Eastern Question,' the editor says, 'The assumption of the collective authority on the part of the European powers to supervise the Eastern question, in other words, to regulate the disintegration of Turkey, has been gradual. Such an authority has been exercised tentatively since 1826, systematically since 1856. It has been applied successfully to Greece, to Syria, to Egypt, to the Danubian Principalities and the Balkan Peninsula generally, to certain other of the European provinces of Turkey, to the Asiatic boundaries of Turkey and Russia, and to the treatment of the Armenians. The present work will contain the text in full of the treaties and other diplomatic acts which are the title deeds of the States which have thus been wholly or partially freed by the European concert from the sovereignty of the Porte.' Hence 1856 is a critical date in the fall of the Mohammedan power, marking the point of its entire loss of independence, the point when it passed practically into the hands of Europe, with a view to its safe and gradual dismemberment. The tottering structure was condemned to come down, and the scaffolding was erected by which it might be safely demolished.

"In 1860 took place the horrible Druze massacre of the Christians in the Lebanon and at Damascus, a massacre connived at, if not planned by the Turkish Government. The remonstrances of the European consuls in the country were treated with neglect and contempt. The Christians were disarmed by the authorities, and left, like defenceless sheep, to be butchered by bloodthirsty enemies. Thousands of innocent lives and millions of property were sacrificed and the total apathy and incompetence of the Turkish Government to maintain order was such that the great powers of Europe intervened. Syria was occupied by French troops, and an English fleet anchored at Beyroot. The result was the conclusion of the treaty by which northern Syria was placed under a Christian governor, and the welfare of its inhabitants secured by a restriction of the Turkish power, submitted to under European compulsion. The year, in short, witnessed a marked though partial deliverance of the Holy Land from Mohammedan oppression; it witnessed the turn of the tide. The condition of Palestine and Syria has ever since been improving, and the contrast of what they are today and what they were twenty-five years ago is remarkable.

"The last great crisis in the decay of Turkey, the last phase previously to what we may term the present one, was the Russo-Turkish war of 1877, an event so recent we can only allude to it. The horrible atrocities committed by the Turkish soldiery in suppressing an unimportant insurrection in Bulgaria, were, as is well known, the immediate cause of the outbreak. Fifteen thousand men, women and children had been slaughtered in cold blood, with every conceivable circumstance of cruelty and horror, people against whom no crime could be alleged. Their property was destroyed, their villages were burned, and large districts desolated. Christian Europe was horrified. The Great Powers would have interfered in concert, but that England, whose supposed interests required maintenance of the Ottoman tyranny over the subject Christian races, would not join in any effective common action. The immoral and Jesuitical maxim, that, when self-interest demanded it, the Christian races of the Balkan Peninsula might lawfully be sacrificed, was acted upon by the English Government of the day. Russia, whose policy was a far nobler and more unselfish one, went to war alone consequently to deliver her co-religionists, and she secured her object by a succession of victories, which broke the Turkish power to pieces and laid it helpless at her feet. England did interfere then, to prevent her seizing Constantinople, and at the Berlin Conference obliged the victorious Czar to modify the treaty of San Stephano, and to agree to that of Berlin, by which a large portion of Armenia, was ceded to Russia. The Dobrudcha was lost to Turkey, the complete independence of Roumania was recognized, the limits of Servia and Montenegro were extended, and Bulgaria was erected into an autonomous Christian principality. Cyprus was at the same time ceded to England by the Anglo-Turkish Convention, while this country undertook to defend the Turkish possessions in Asia, the Porte promising necessary reforms, subject to British approval.

"In 1876 Turkey had become nationally bankrupt; her debt, having been mostly contracted abroad, had reached the amount of one hundred and ninety-five millions, on which sum she was unable even to pay interest. This is as serious a feature in the condition of the country as any of its military reverses or territorial losses.

"In 1882 a fresh and very singular stage in the fall of the Ottoman power and independence was reached. It arose, as will be remembered by all, in a military insurrection in Egypt, which was headed by Arabi Pasha; this man and the army obtained a monopoly of power, and the Khedive was forced to accept a national ministry in defiance of the protests of the European controllers of the debt, thus subverting the authority of England and France in connection with the finances of Egypt. The Sultan encouraged Arabi to defy Christian intervention in the financial and other affairs of Egypt, and tried to seize the crisis as an occasion for enforcing his own authority as Suzerain. It was understood throughout Europe that if the western powers were defeated in this struggle, it would mean a surrender of Egypt to absolute anarchy, and the total ruin of civilization and European interests in the country. British and French squadrons anchored in the harbor of Alexandria in May. Panic began to prevail among the Europeans in Egypt; the military party became totally unmanageable, and the Khedive was a mere tool in their hands. The Europeans in Cairo and Alexandria were obliged to flee the country, and all attempts at pacification, whether on the part of the western powers, or of the Sultan himself, failed. A Mussulman rising having taken place in Alexandria, in which a large number of Europeans were killed, and their houses pillaged, Arabi also continuing extensive preparations for resistance in defiance of the English Admiral's expostulations, Beauchamp Seymour finally bombarded Alexandria in the summer of 1882. The rebels were defeated, and under cover of a flag of truce evacuated Alexandria, not however without first setting fire to the European quarter, and letting loose upon it a gang of reckless plunderers. A plan had been laid for the murder of the Khedive, but it was unsuccessful. A brief but brilliant military campaign succeeded in which the English troops defeated the rebels at Tel-al-Kebir, and victoriously entered Cairo. An army of occupation of 12,000 men was left to keep order in the country, which has been since practically, though not nominally, an English protectorate.

"This campaign was remarkable as an illustration of the diminished fanaticism of Mussulman nations. The Mohammedans of India were in no way affected by the struggle between their rulers and the Egyptians. An Indian contingent was sent to Egypt with the full approval of the co-religionists of Arabi.

"As we send these pages to the press, a fresh dismemberment of the Ottoman empire is in progress, and the union of the two Bulgarias is so serious an inroad upon the provisions of the treaty of Berlin, that, as might from its very nature have been foreseen, it is not likely long to hold good as regards other and more important points."

In another work our author, speaking upon the same subject, says:

"Rome trod down Jerusalem in the days of Titus, and Turkey holds her down now. 'Rome cast her to the ground, and when she was down, Turkey set its foot on her neck. Rome hurled her to the dust, Turkey trampled her in the mire; Rome destroyed God's temple and ploughed the sacred site on which it stood, Turkey maintains the Mosque of Omar on that sacred site; and on the hill where Abraham offered Isaac, where David offered the oxen of Arunah, where Solomon built his temple, and where the Lord Jesus, the Son of David, cast out all that was unholy, there by Turkish authority now stands a Mohammedan Mosque, and there no Jew is permitted to set his foot.' But Pagan Rome passed away long since, and Papal Rome is no longer a political power in the earth; the first oppressor is gone, and Turkey, the second, is fast going. 'The foot of the sick man is the only one now remaining on the neck of Jerusalem, and the sick man is dying; when he dies why should not Jerusalem arise and be free?'

"Every step in the downfall of Turkey is a step in the direction of the cleansing of the sanctuary, and these steps are in our day succeeding each other rapidly. Since 1821, Turkey has lost Greece and Servia, Moldavia and Wallachia, Morocco, Algiers and Egypt; and now in the recent war, Bosnia, Herzegovina and Bulgaria. The once mighty Ottoman Empire is in Europe practically extinct. Its power in Asia is also seriously diminished, and notably so in Syria. Aliens, or non-Mussulmans, are now allowed to hold landed property in Palestine, and the number of Jews resident in their own land is every year on the increase. Thousands of intelligent Christians visit its shores annually, and the Palestine Exploration has completed a survey of its every square mile. 'Thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favor the dust thereof.' There is every sign, when the present is contrasted with the past, that the time for the complete liberation of Palestine from Moslem tyranny is at hand."

As we are now well along in the last seventy years of Gentile times, we are witnessing wonderful events, but more wonderful still are just at the very doors, perhaps this year, so let us watch and pray.

My address will be Andover, Dak., until further notice.

Communications.

February 25th I addressed a note to Isaac Levinsohn, whose name is familiar to our readers, and have received the following letter from him, together with an autograph letter from C. H. Spurgeon, and circulars from which extracts are made. Bro. Levinsohn is at present engaged with the "British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews." A. R. U.

April 2, 1889.

My Dear Sir and Brother in Christ:

I thank you for your very kind note of Feb. 25th. Absence from home and pressure of work, preaching and lecturing all over this kingdom must be my excuse for not having answered your letter before. You ask me if I am still standing on the "Rock." I answer with joy, thank God, "Yes." No rock like the Rock Christ Jesus. No joy like the joy which comes through communion with him.

It is now over seventeen years since I have found Jesus, or rather Jesus found me, and I have ever since blessed God for the joy and peace I have received which Judaism never could give me, and which thank God no power in the world can take away. I am glad to learn that many of your friends are interested in my brethren. God bless you and your friends the readers of The Restitution. Until a few days ago I never saw a copy of your very interesting paper. I shall be delighted to read it regularly if you favor me with copies.

By the enclosed circular you will see what I am doing, and I trust we shall have your prayers with our work. I have often thought how much I should like to visit America, but only God knows if ever I shall see that happy land. I shall be delighted to hear from you, and if I can at any time be of any service to you and your Restitution, which I am at present a stranger to, through not having seen it before, I shall be glad ever to do what I can. May the promised blessing unto all who bless Abraham's seed be your reward. I am, dear brother,

Very Truly Yours,
Isaac Levinsohn.

Westwood, Beulah Hill,
Upper Norwood,
June 5, 1886.

Mr. Levinsohn has passed through the Pastor's College with satisfaction to the tutors and myself. I have the utmost confidence in him. He has given himself up to work for his fellow Israelites by aiding the British Society for propagating the gospel among the Jews, and I wish him every success in his undertaking. Difficult as the work is to win a way for the gospel among the seed of Israel, it is our heart's desire and prayer that they may be saved; and therefore we must wish well to every effort to make known to them the true Messiah. Mr. Levinsohn has special qualifications for pleading the cause of the society.

C. H. Spurgeon.

Dear Friend:

It is now my honor to be deputy for London and the following Counties: Leicester, Rutland, Northampton, Huntingdon, Bedford, Cambridge, Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex, Hertford, Buckingham, Middlesex, Surrey, Sussex, Kent.

I feel that the responsibility is great, and the difficulties very many.

I would have been reluctant to undertake this difficult and responsible task, but for the sense of duty, and the fact that this cause so dear to our hearts has many Christian friends, whose prayers and sympathies we enjoy. With this knowledge I feel encouraged to undertake the office of Mission Deputy over so large and important a district.

For the last 15 years I have carefully watched the operations of the British Society, and for the last five years I have had the honor of being engaged in the Society's services. I have therefore had countless opportunities for observing the work of its agents. I have much joy in testifying that God hath done great things for us whereof we are glad.

I feel sure that if the Christian public only knew half of the work accomplished by God's blessing through Missions to Israel, their faith would be much strengthened, a Missionary enthusiasm would reign in the churches.

The British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, was formed in 1842.

Missions to Israel in England and America have done splendid service. Although these agencies have had to endure terrible hardships and encounter innumerable difficulties, yet they have continued their work and the Gospel has triumphed! Over a hundred thousand Hebrews have entered into the Church of Christ, and who could count the multitudes, who were like Joseph of Arimathea, disciples of Christ but secretly, for fear of the Jews! Surely God hath done great things for us whereof we are glad. I am dear Friend,

Faithfully yours in the Master's Service,
Isaac Levinsohn.

Our Conference.

For a quarter of a century or more it has been the custom of the Church of God to hold a spring conference. For several years this gathering of the brethren has been in June, over the second first-day, therefore called the June meeting. The place of assembling has been Antioch Church, in Marshall county. This place has been rendered endearingly sacred to the memory of many of us by the many joyful meetings we have attended there, the numerous acquaintanceships formed and old ones annually renewed, and ties cemented which nothing but death's cold hand can sever. Some of the dear saints whose faces we so often saw and whose voices we heard in song and in prayer, counsel and exhortation, have gone down into the silent chambers of death. These we remember as the faithful ones whose watchword was duty. The cause of the Master is in the hands of the living church and its demands upon the powers of body and mind, and upon the means in our hands to carry it forward are just as urgent as ever. The truth of the gospel imposes obligations upon the members of Christ's body which can not be disregarded except at the peril of our highest interest, our eternal being, and well-being. There are duties circumscribed to one's own family or neighborhood to be discharged single handed; Christian work for associated effort on the part of local churches to hold forth the word in the communities where they exist; and broader fields of labor to be occupied and ends to be accomplished which require the co-operation of many local churches in furnishing the means to keep an Evangelist or Evangelists employed to do the work. With this end in view our State Conference was organized. The results of this concert of action are already encouraging. The reports of our State Evangelist from time to time, of a number of precious souls who have been instructed and come into the Christ through the obedience of faith has gladdened the hearts of the many who have a deep interest in this blessed cause and whose love like that of their crucified and risen Lord's goes out after the sinful and perishing. Do you, my Christian brother rejoice over one sinner that turns to the Lord? If not how have you the spirit of the blessed Christ? How dwells the love of God in your heart? Think of the angels who have no connection with our race rejoicing over one sinner that repents. A Christian without a Christian heart? How can this be? Do you profess to love sinners and yet make no effort to save them? You have means in your hands but will not send the gospel to save and bless those who are perishing for lack of knowledge. If you love me, says Jesus, keep my commandments, Jno. xiv. 15. Go preach, may not be a command binding on you but to give as the Lord has prospered you to enable some one else to go, is an obligation not to be disregarded.

If you are not interested in this grand and glorious work of saving the lost and thereby saving yourself, become interested at once. The Father the Son, angels and the warm-hearted Christian are interested in this beneficent work. I am glad of the honor of sharing with loving hearts and hands in heaven and on earth in helping to carry forward this high and holy enterprise and I want to do it in the best possible ways. If co-operative effort is necessary to reach results which can not be reached otherwise then I am in favor of this. "In union there is strength." Come then dear brethren to this Conference; come in the fulness of the blessing of God; come with hearts warm with love for those for whom Christ died; come to be useful and to throw your influence jointly in favor of this missionary work; come to bless and be blessed, to kindle a flame in the heart of others and have it kindled in your own, a flame of love and holy zeal that the coldness of the world's contact will not be able to quench. Come, isolated and lonely brother and sister, who rarely hear the gospel of a soon coming Savior preached, come and be gladdened and contribute your mite of love in exchange for what such a meeting has in the form of many blessings, love, kindly greetings, prayer, counsel, song and sermon. Come, you who have church privileges, and enjoy at stated times sermons from some earnest minister of the word; come yourself or help to send delegates to represent your church in the good cause the Conference designs to carry forward. Freely and cheerfully spare the time from the field and shop and household duties to come to this annual feast; and as cheerfully bear the expenses of coming, or, sending delegates to the meeting. If you can not come and can not be represented by delegation, write letters of Christian greeting with some encouraging word, or making known some want which falls in the mission of the Conference to meet. These will be read and listened to and enjoyed. Under the Law the Jews spared a great amount of time to the service prescribed in their lengthy ritual and made the journey often to Jerusalem even when scattered far beyond the confines of their own land; and shall we, under the system of grace and truth and love which came by Jesus Christ, grudging spare a little of time to the brighter and more hopeful service of the gospel. We believe or profess to believe that the Lord is coming soon. What weightier motive than this for self-sacrifice? Come then disciples of the living Lord to this gathering at old Antioch.

John L. Wilcox.

Selections.

THE EARTH'S FUTURE METROPOLIS.

[The following is the substance of a remarkable interview with Dr. H. P. Mendes, the well-known Jewish Rabbi, which is printed in the Jewish Chronicle. It will be seen that the learned Rabbi fully expects the restoration of Jewish nationality, and fully realizes the blessings to result from it to his own race and the world. He is mistaken, however, in supposing that centuries may elapse before that restoration is achieved.]

"The subject of restoration is one not clearly understood. It is as distinctly a prophecy of the Bible as our expatriation and dispersion, which has come to pass. Apart from patriotic or Jewish sentiment, let us look over it for a moment from a common-sense standpoint.

"First, is the land of Palestine desirable? The answer is, most emphatically, it is a desirable land. Its fertility was proverbial, and the soil, after its centuries of rest, must, from a farmer's standpoint, be fully recovered. Apart from Bible sources, where it is constantly called 'a land flowing with milk and honey,' or 'the land is exceeding good' Num. xiv. 7, or 'a good land whose stones are iron and out of whose hills thou mayest dig copper'—apart from these and other such Biblical sources, we find in Josephus, Strabo, Hecateus, and Tacitus statements as to the large population it sustained.

"We must draw a distinction between Palestine and the Promised Land, which we regard as our inheritance. The former was from about latitude 31 deg. 7 min. to latitude 33 deg. 15 min., or about one hundred and fifty miles in length. The latter is from about latitude 29 deg. 31 min. to latitude 37 degrees, or upwards of five hundred miles. The breadth of the former was, as can be seen by a glance at any ordinary map, but very few miles. The breadth of the latter is from the Nile longitude 30 deg. 2 min. west, or the 'River of Egypt,' as the Bible calls it, (Gen. xv. 28, etc.), to the Euphrates, longitude 48 deg. 26 min., or more than eleven hundred miles.

"Now, as for its geographical position as a trade centre. Imagine Canada and the United States with 826,000,000, which is the given population of Asia. Imagine South America with 307,400,000, which is the given population of Europe. And the millions of Africa, estimated at 206,000,000. Imagine next that Central America has the milder climate of Palestine; that the supply and demand between North and South America, with all these millions of people with wants to be supplied, passes through, as it must, when North and South America will be connected by rail. Would not Central America offer brilliant promises for business purposes?

"Just so is Palestine. Railroad communication between Africa and Asia, and through Asia to Europe, and vice versa, must pass through our promised land. The connecting line, already talked of as the Euphrates Valley road, to connect the European system of railways with India and the further East, will also roll trade into the confines of our land. And when this comes to pass, strange to say, history will only be repeating itself. For in the days of Solomon, as Dean Milman so aptly points out, the five great caravan and trading lines of the ancient world converged in Palestine, and hence it was that in his days the national prosperity was so great that they used to say 'silver was in Jerusalem as stones, and cedars as the sycamore trees that are in the vale, for abundance.' 1 Kings x. 27.

"A common idea is that the doctrine of our restoration means that all Hebrews must go back to Palestine. Our great prophet, however, seems to distinctly indicate that all will not return, but that some will stay and engage in prosperous business among Gentile nations. Thus, 'And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people: all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed.' Isa. lxi. 9. Or again, 'I will take you one of a city and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion.' Jer. iii. 14. However, as soon as business possibilities are visible you will see that the Hebrews will be ready enough to return to Palestine.

"Every day brings us nearer. Long years doubtless have to pass first. Even centuries perhaps. At any rate, events at this moment seem to indicate that only decades and not centuries are destined to slide away before our restoration becomes a fact. Notice the strained attention at times in connection with the Eastern question—often enough it is brought up. Rational common sense has already suggested that the only way to calm the jealousies of the Great Powers as to Syria, which all of them want, is to make it a neutral state; then give it in charge of the Jews, who are peaceful and able to develop business possibilities.

"But do not let it be at all imagined that Palestine is desired by us simply because it gives us a national home. We desire it on account of what things it involves. To briefly state those I would say—First, the establishment of a respected court of arbitration for the settlement of international and such like disputes, thus causing war to cease, Isa. ii. 4; second, an evidencing of a religionizing religion, if I may coin a phrase. I mean a religion which shall not be a conventionality, so that no more shall we see how these Christians do not love one another, or how orthodox Jews are oft unorthodox and reformed Jews sadly need reforming. Verbum sap. For the expectation of a better moral tone in the world see Isa. xi. 10, or Jer. xxxi. 34.

"In short, to sum up what we mean by our restoration to Palestine, we mean the institution of universal peace and universal brotherhood. Universal happiness must naturally follow. This will be not simply a consolation for the Jews, or the consolation of Zion, so long bereaved of her children. It will be the consolation of the world after all the sobbing and shrieking which history's page records of each and every nation."—Christian Herald and Signs of our Times.

A Dumb Mother.

One of the most pathetic stories of the dumb is that told of the Countess of Orkney, who was married in 1753 by signs. Shortly after the birth of her first child, the nurse, with considerable astonishment, saw the mother cautiously approach the cradle in which the infant was sleeping. The countess was evidently full of some deep design. Having assured herself that the child really slept, she took a large stone which she had hidden under her shawl, and, to the horror of the nurse—who, like all persons of the lower order in Ireland, and indeed in most countries, was fully impressed with an idea of the peculiar cunning and malignity of "dumbies"—she raised it with an intent to fling it down vehemently. Before the nurse could interpose, the countess had flung the stone, not at the child, but on the floor, where it made a great noise. The child immediately woke and cried. The countess, who had looked with maternal eagerness for the result of her experiment, fell on her knees in a transport of joy. She had discovered that the child possessed the sense which was wanting in herself.

Conference Notice.

The third quarterly conference of the Church of God will convene (D. V.) Friday evening June 15, 1889, at Fairview school house, eight miles southwest of Arapahoe, Neb. All lovers of truth are requested to be present. Brethren, all come, and let us enjoy a good meeting.

Thank-Offering Corner.

In compliance with a request we start this "Thank-Offering Corner." A number of poor people are yet to be supplied with our paper for 1889. These have been paid for in the past only partially, and as we are not willing to stop any of them, we hope our friends will come forward with "Thank-Offerings" so that all may be supplied.

EGYPT AND IMMORTALITY.

For twenty-five centuries the world has been taught that the ancient Egyptians were the first to affirm the immortality of the soul. Old Herodotus told us this six hundred years before the Christian era. His words are—"They were also the first to broach the opinion that the soul of man is immortal, and that when the body dies it enters into the form of an animal which is born at the same moment, thence passing on from one animal into another until it has been circled through the forms of all creatures which tenant the earth, the water, and the air, after which it enters again into the human frame and is born anew. The whole period of the transmigration is, they say, three thousand years. There are Greek writers, some of an earlier, some of a later date, who borrowed this doctrine from the Egyptians, and put it forward as their own." (Rawlinson's Herodotus, Book in chap. cxxiii.)

No fact is now more undisputed and indisputable than that the ancient Egyptians did not believe in the immortality of the soul, as that phrase is commonly understood: the leading Egyptologists are agreed on that point. What the Egyptians did believe was in the immortality of some souls; and this is shown when we investigate into the opinions held by this people on the subject of future judgment in the under-world, or the Amenti, as found in their Ritual of the Dead.

"It was the universal belief that, immediately after death, the soul descended into the lower world and was conducted into the Hall of Truth (or of the Two Truths), where it was judged in the presence of Osiris and the forty-two dæmons, the 'Lords of Truth' and judges of the dead. Anubis, the 'director of the weight,' brought forth a pair of scales, and placing in one scale a figure or emblem of Truth, set in the other a vase containing the good actions of the deceased; Thoth standing by the while, with a tablet in his hand, whereon to record the result. According to the side on which the balance reclined, Osiris delivered sentence. If the good deeds preponderated, the blessed soul was allowed to enter the 'boat of the Sun,' and was conducted by good spirits to Aahlu (Elysium), to the pools of peace,' and the dwelling-place of Osiris. If, on the contrary, the good deeds were insufficient, if the ordeal was not passed, then the unhappy soul was sentenced, according to its deserts, to begin a round of transmigrations in the bodies of more or less unclean animals, the number, nature, and duration of the transmigrations depending on the degree of the deceased's demerits, and the consequent length and severity of the punishment which he deserved, or the purification which he required. Ultimately, after many trials, if purity was not attained, the wicked soul underwent a final sentence at the hands of Osiris, Judge of the wicked Dead, and, being pronounced incurable, suffered complete and absolute annihilation" (Rawlinson's History of Ancient Egypt, i. 317).

Each of those who passed the ordeal —who had not stolen, waylaid, smitten men privily, told falsehoods, killed sacred beasts, corrupted men or women —received the name of Osiris, in addition to their birth name, and was addressed—

Hail to the Osiris N! Thou art pure.
Thy heart is pure.......
Thou dost enter the Hall of the Two Goddesses of Truth.
Thou art pure of all sin, of all crime......
Thou, being very pure, dost enter the Lower Heaven.
The Two Goddesses of Justice have purified thee in the great Hall.
Thou dost enter the horizon of the Sun.
Thy soul is received in the bark Neshem, with Osiris.
Thy soul is divinized in the Hall of Seb.
Thou art justified for ever and over......
Thine individuality is permanent.....
Thou art divinized with the souls of the gods.
Thy heart is the heart of Ra.
Thy members are the members of the great god (Osiris),
Thou livest for ever and ever.

The gods who accompany Osiris address the Osiris N in these words—

Thou dost follow Ra.
Thou dost follow Osiris.
Thy soul liveth for ever and ever.

Many are the evil spirits, however, who desire to capture the justified Osiris N as he passes through their domains, but they are thus addressed—

Oh Strider, coming out of An,
The Osiris N hath not committed any sin
Oh Mighty of the Moment, coming out of Kerau,
The Osiris N hath not done any evil.
Oh Nostril, coming out of Sesennu,
The Osiris N hath not been exalting.
Oh Devourer of the Eye, coming out of Kerti,
The Osiris N hath not obtained anything by theft.
Oh Impure of Visage, coming out of Rusta,
The Osiris N hath not been angry.
Oh Lion-Gods, coming forth from heaven,
The Osiris N hath not committed any sin by reason of hardness of heart.
Oh Fiery-Eyed, coming out of Sechem,
The Osiris N hath not been weak.
Oh ye gods which dwell in the Lower Heaven
Hearken unto the voice of Osiris N.
He is near unto you,
There is no fault in him,
No informer riseth up against him,
He liveth in the truth,
He doth nourish himself with truth,
The gods are satisfied with all that he hath done.
He hath given food to the hungry,
Drink to the thirsty,
Clothes to the naked,
He hath given the sacred food to the gods,
The funeral repasts to the pure spirits.
No complaint hath been made against him before any of the gods.
Let him enter (then) into the Lower Heaven
Without being repulsed.
Let him follow Osiris, with the gods of Kerti.
He is favored among the faithful,
(And) divinized among the perfected.
Let him live!
Let his soul live!

The wicked—those tried and found wanting—are thus addressed—You are bound; you are tied by strong cords. I have ordained your detention. You will not free your arms again. Powerful is Ra against you; his soul is fortified against you....Your contempt for justice is upon you; the wickedness of your blasphemies is upon you. Bad for you in the judgment of my father. You are those who have done evil, who have committed crimes in the Great Hall; your bodies are destined to punishment, and your souls to annihilation. You will not see Ra any more in his forms as he passes into his retreat. Oh Ra! Praise be to Ra! Thy enemies are in the place of destruction.....Fall! Never rise again! Be fascinated! thou shalt never be found again....Fire issues from the retreat against thee. We have judged thee; perish!....You are bound behind, wicked ones! Ra will sacrifice you; you will be no longer in existence; your souls shall be destroyed. They shall live no longer on account of what you have done against my father Osiris. Powerful is the word of my father Osiris against you; powerful is my word against you.... Oh, be no longer in existence—destroyed!....Launch thy flame against the enemies of my father, burn their bodies, consume their souls....My children are against them: they destroy their souls: those who have issued from me are against them: they exist no longer.

These extracts, as translated by our leading scholars from the Egyptian records, prove the statement already made that the ancient Egyptians believed not in the immortality of the soul, but in the immortality of some souls: they also declare that the wicked will be literally and really destroyed, their souls will be consumed and perish for ever. In other words, Immortality was Conditional. And no divine or scholar of any reputation, so far as I am aware, has yet risen to affirm that, in the Egyptian tongue, to die (when applied to the lost) means to live for ever in misery; that perish means to preserve in being; and that destroy means to keep alive in endless torment.

There is, there can be, but one opinion on this point. Canon Rawlinson accepts the words to mean what they say, for he speaks of the doom of the finally impenitent being "complete and absolute annihilation." M. Naville is one of the most distinguished of Egyptologists, and this is the conclusion he has reached as contained in a letter to the Rev. Edward White—"I have no doubt that the fate of the wicked is destruction. We often hear of treacherous guides who lead the soul to the place of destruction. It is spoken of enemies who devour the souls, who live upon them. It is spoken also of dead spirits, of the furnaces where the deceased asks not to fall. There is a chapter on not dying a second time. In the scene of the weighing of the heart, the enemy is called the great devourer. All these images indicate a final state, or rather a final destruction; and that explains why, contrary to what we see in other mythologies such as Homer's, there is hardly any description of the wicked in the Book of the Dead.

Vicomte Rouge is equally decided: "Among the punishments for sinners," he says, "the second death figures first in the scale." Often it is Horus himself who, as the avenging deity, "delivers their souls to annihilation." And in a lecture delivered at the Royal Institution in March, 1881 (and published in the Contemporary Review for July, 1881) Dr. R. S. Poole, the accomplished Orientalist, thus described the results of the future judgment—"Acquitted, he passed through a further probation to final bliss; condemned, his intelligence wandered in space a tormented and tormenting spirit, until annihilated by the second death.... There are many transformations of the soul, but no metempsychosis in the Pythagorean sense; the justified soul returns to the source of all good, the condemned passes away to annihilation through torments which are not eternal."

The last scholar from whom I shall quote is Le Page Renouf who thus speaks in the Hibbert Lectures for 1879—"The 149th chapter [of the Book of the Dead] gives an account of the terrible nature of certain divinities and localities which the deceased must encounter—gigantic and venomous serpents, gods with names significant of death and destruction, waters and atmospheres of flames. But none of these prevail over the Osiris; he passes through all things without harm; unhurt he breathes the fiery atmosphere and drinks the waters of flame; and he lives in peace with the fearful gods who preside over these abodes." Here follow some of the invocations— "Oh Lord of the great dwelling [the universe], supreme King of the gods, save the Osiris from that god who has the face of a hound and the eyebrows of a man, who feeds upon the accursed." "O Lord of victory in the two worlds....save the Osiris from that god who seizes upon souls, devours hearts, and feeds upon carcasses." "O Scarabæus god in thy bark, whose substance is self-originated, save the Osiris from those watchers to whom the Lord of spirits has entrusted the observation none can escape. Let me not fall under their swords nor go to their block of execution, let me not remain in their abodes, let me not rest upon their beds [of torment], let me not fall into their nets. Let nought befal me which the gods abhor." Then Renouf adds—"These trials which the departed undergo, and which are triumphantly overcome by the Osiris, sufficiently show the fate which the wicked must expect. This fate is called 'the second death.'"

The matter, then, is perfectly plain: the Egyptians did not believe in the immortality of the soul. They believed there was immortality for some —for those whose lives on earth would bear strict examination in the Amenti, when they appeared in the Hall of the Two Truths and took upon them the name of Osiris, standing before Anubis who produces the scales and places in one a figure of truth, and in the other a vase containing the good deeds of the deceased; before Horus who watches the balance; before Thoth who stands ready to register the result on the tablet which he holds in both hands, and in the presence of the forty-two Assessors before whom each candidate must be able to say that he is innocent of the forty-two principal sins: if they are able to do this they are indued with the life of Osiris and "divinized among the perfected." The wicked cannot pass this ordeal, and so they perish; they are destroyed; they die the second death; they are annihilated; their souls are devoured.

Here it may be very naturally asked by some to whom the above exposition of the old Egyptian belief is new and startling, How do you account for the fact that the words of Herodotus have been accepted for 2500 years as a true version of that belief, when it is evident from the inscriptions and papyri that immortality is declared to depend on the life the person leads in this world and is not a natural possession? How is it that it is only within the last half of the nineteenth century after Christ we have arrived at the real teaching which we find to be so different from the traditional?

Such questions are fair, pertinent, and easily answered. Egyptology is a science of the present century: it may almost be called a science of the present generation. The Rosetta Stone, it is true, was discovered in 1799; but it was not until 1822 that it was partially deciphered, and not until 1837 that that partial deciphering was confirmed and extended, and the key supplied by which the secrets of the old hieroglyphics were unlocked. There had also to be excavation as well as the work of translation; and from 1837 to the present time an enormous mass of Egyptian literature has been given to the world by English, French, Italian, and German scholars. This literature is the oldest in the world, and every department of thought is represented in it. We have historical and religious works, poems, travels, letters, military and statistical reports, romances, orations, treatises on morals and rhetoric, mathematical works, books on geography, astronomy, astrology, and magic, collections of proverbs, calendars, books of receipts, police court trials, catalogues of libraries, etc. Some of these take us back to 4000 B. C. A new literature has therefore been recently discovered; and we were enabled, by the stock of information continually increasing, to correct many ideas current for centuries. So Herodotus has been all within a very short ti was no documentary ev proof or disproof of his The evidence is now abundant; it is within the reach of all; and the conclusion is indisputable: Ancient Egypt did not believe in the immortality of the soul.—J. Mill, in Messenger.

A LONG LIVED FAMILY.

A special to the Chicago Tribune of April 17, from Washington Court House, Ohio, says: Ohio has come to the front as the State for centenarians, and there is quite a rivalry existing between several of our communities as to which can produce the most aged person. Pickaway county takes the lead at present, as she undoubtedly has the oldest citizen in the State. The person referred to is Mrs. Margaret Arnold, who lives with her son, Henry Arnold, on a 1000-acre farm, through which runs the dividing line of Pickaway and Fayette.

The correspondent called at the home of Mrs. Arnold and secured a reliable account of her life. As she lies in bed continually it was necessary for us to have her placed in a chair in order to obtain her photograph, which was the first one that had been taken for twenty-seven years.

Mrs. Margaret Arnold was born near Richmond, Va., July 4, 1777. Her father, Mr. Robert Kiser, had twelve children, four of whom are living— three daughters and one son. Margaret was a remarkably beautiful girl, and she was married to Mr. Frederick Arnold when quite young. Her husband died over seventy years ago, and she has remained in widowhood ever since. She removed from her native State to Chillicothe, Ohio, where she remained but one winter. From Chillicothe she removed to a farm in Fayette county and followed the occupation of a tailoress. She made her home, after this, in Illinois for twenty-seven years, and ultimately returned to Ohio, where she has since been living with her son.

Her 112 birthday anniversary will occur on the 4th of next July, and her health is excellent. She has a fine appetite and can eat as large a dinner as the sturdiest harvest hand. No physician has ever been called to attend her, as she never has been sick a day in her life. Although a smoker of tobacco for seventy years she has at last laid the pipe aside, finding no further comfort in it.

Mrs. Arnold is five feet two inches in height and weighs 110 pounds. She has a remarkable constitution, and some who know her think that she may hold out until her 125th year. Her five children—two daughters and three sons—have been attentive to her necessities, and the son with whom she lives at present cares for her tenderly.

As hitherto stated Mrs. Arnold has two sisters and one brother living. Her eldest sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Hillard, is living in Lynn County, Iowa, having been twice married. She is 115 years of age.

The other sister, Mrs John Bailey, lives in Dakota, and is 109 years of age. She is a healthy old lady and walks about without assistance. Her eyesight is excellent, and she is likely to retain her physical vigor for many years.

William Kiser, the only living brother, is still alive at the old homestead near Richmond, Va., and is 104 years of age. There is doubtless not another family in the United States or in the world that can show such a wonderful record:

	Ages.
Mrs. Elizabeth Hillard...........	115
Mrs. Margaret Arnold...........	112
Mrs. John Bailey...........	109
William Kiser........	104
Total number of years..........	440
Average age of each..........	110

Each one of these old people has lived during the Administration of every President of the United States and during the greater part of the eventful period of the national history.

Right and Wrong do not Merge.

There is a certain likeness between the things that are moral or spiritual, and the things that are merely physical. Poets find their similies playing from the world of matter to the world of spirit, and from the world of spirit back to the world of matter,—one life explaining and illustrating the other. But there is a limit to the similitude, and that limit is itself moral. In the physical world, men are unable to perceive definite lines of division between the animal and vegetable kingdoms. The one seems to merge into the other, each being but a phase of God's creative handiwork. Similarly, in the moral world, men often suppose that there can be no definite line of division between good and evil; right and wrong are to them blurred pictures with shadowy and indistinct borders. ong. The line between good and evil is sharp and defined. It is no use to hug the border-lands of the moral life in the hope of enjoying a trespass on forbidden ground while yet seeming to keep so near the right as to be counted as practically right. It is well enough for things that are material and temporal to be satisfied with being neither animal or vegetable, or either animal or vegetable, or both animal and vegetable. But for him who has entered the Christian life—a life spiritual and eternal—the time has come when he ought no longer to be satisfied with being neither one nor the other, or either, or both, at the same time. There may be shadowy meanings of texts, shadowy outlines of theological doctrines, but there is nothing shadowy or uncertain, nothing vacillating or dubious, about the personality of Christ. The question is Do you want to see how far you can walk from him, and yet be his? or, Do you want to see how closely by him you can keep in your walk with him?

Religious Liberty in Kansas.

The directors of the school at South Creek, in Atchinson County, engaged Miss Ella Gibson to teach the school. Being a very devoted Christian girl, she opened her school by reading the Scriptures and prayer. Two of the directors, being Roman Catholics, strongly objected to this manner of procedure, and sent her word several times that she must omit this part of the exercises, but she paid no attention to them. Finally they sent a written notice that this would be tolerated no longer. This also failed to accomplish their design.

At last they, with the other director, a Protestant, and several of the neighbors, met at the school house before school time and waited developments. The young teacher came, and with her Christian heroism called the school to order, read a chapter, and then offered a fervent prayer for herself, pupils, and parents. The two Catholic officials were greatly incensed at this, and informed her that she must stop this or close her school, to which she replied that she would far rather give up the school than give up reading the Bible and praying, but she did not propose to do either.

The State Superintendent was consulted. He replied that the laws of Kansas gave teachers in the public schools the privilege of reading the Scriptures and praying in School if they wished so to do, and no class of men had any right to interfere. She was instructed to go on with her school and use her liberty in devotional exercises. Truly the great State of Kansas has paid too dearly for her liberty, to sacrifice it to a set of godless men or institutions, that would, if they had the power, annihilate every Protestant Church and school in the country. Praise the Lord, her power is gone.—Marshall M'Culloch, in World's Crisis.

The Land of Promise.

The country which Israel entered lay before them as a great mass of hills, rising from the bank of Jericho, in height above height, till in its central elevation it towered fully 4,500 feet above the spot on which they stood. Western Palestine is indeed little more than a wide tangle of mountains seamed by valleys, which on both sides run east and west, and form the only roads through the labyrinth. The Dead Sea, close by Gilgal, is 1,300 feet below the Mediterranean, the city of Jericho standing about 600 feet above it; but many of the heights before them tower at twelve or fourteen miles distance, to a height of 2,500 feet above its level. Bethlehem was 2,550 feet above the Mediterranean; Jebus, the future Jerusalem, forty-three feet more; Mounts Gerizim and Ebal, in the centre of the land at Shechem, rose to the height of 2,849 and 3,076 feet respectively; Mount Jermuk, a few miles northwest of the sea of Galilee, was 4,000 feet high. Across the Jordan the hill of Bashan cast its shadow from an elevation of 5,900 feet, and on the extreme northern limits of the land the great summits of Lebanon "the white," attracted the eye from all parts of Palestine. That of Mount Hermon especially, over 9,000 feet high closed the northern view from all points.

The whole land, however, from Dan to Beersheba, was very small in proportion to the size of most countries, though roomy in contrast to the narrow ribbon of fertile land along the banks of the Nile, which has an average breadth of seven miles. It was, in all, only about the size of Wales. Except along the sea-shore, the one plain in the whole region large enough was that of Esdraelon, which measured fourteen miles north and south, by nine east and west, and runs into the land from the coast on the upper side of the Carmel hills. Along the edge of the Mediterranean a level strip runs from north to south the whole length of the country; narrow on the north, in Phenecia; broadened to an average of five miles before it reaches the promontory south of Carmel, and forming a distinct district south of that point, under the names of the plains of Sharon and Philistia. It has been formed partly by the waste of the central hills, partly by the accumulation of sand in dunes along the shore. Towards the south its breadth is increased by the deposit of mud from the Nile, which is traceable as far north as Gaza. The Maratime plain, as this tract is called, is about eighty miles long, and is raised from one hundred to two hundred feet above the sea. Its breadth at its northern end, below Carmel, is eight miles; at Gaza, about twenty. Between this outside fringe and the mountains runs a breadth of low chalk hills, averging about five hundred feet in height, known in the Bible, if Lieutenant Condor be right, as the Shephelah. Behind these rise, north and south, the masses of the central mountains.

Development of Character.

"That which is most precious in character, and which is of most service to others as an outcome of character, is never made manifest except under pressure. The Arabs have a proverb: 'Nothing will get oil out of an olive, but crushing it.' And this is only another phrasing of the thought of Bacon: 'Virtue is like precious odors, most fragrant when they are incensed, i. e., burned, or crushed.' Only when the alabaster vase of perfumed oil was crushed, by Mary of Bethany, did that possession of hers rightly honor her Master; and only then did its fragrance fill the house, and begin its filling of the air of all the world beyond. It is not pleasant, but it is good, to have one's character brought under that crushing pressure of adversity, or of other trial, which shall force out its best influences—as a means of gain to one's self and to one's fellows. As wise Seneca said: 'The good things which belong to prosperity are to be wished for; but the good things which belong to adversity are to be admired.' Chastisement from God is a sure evidence of the love of God; but, at the first, God's loving chastisement seemeth not to be joyous, but grievous."

The Interior of Australia.

Australian travellers state that the interior of Australia is by no means the desert it has long been supposed to be. Though now unpopulated, it is pronounced capable of supporting a large population. Gold has been found there and the travellers brought home stories of vast pasture lands, abundant water, and finally of deep blue lakes, at least one of which is of large and as yet and unknown extent. A great railroad is to extend across the continent from north to south, through the eastern part of the country once supposed to be a desert. It is predicted that the "desert" will disappear, as that in America has gone.

MARRIED

GOCHEE—HERRIMAN.— March 10, 1889, by Elder F. M. Clifton, Guss Gochee and Charlotte Herriman.

The above are young in the one faith; both put on the Lord by being baptized on the same day before they were married. May the blessing of the Lord go with them through life.

Dear Restitution:

On March 9th and 10th we had a glorious season of refreshing, meeting being held at Bro. Leonard's residence. Many came in on Saturday evening, five of whom came forward and gave their hand and asked for baptism. At eleven next day (Sunday) one more came, Charles Herriman, a young man eighteen years of age, and asked for baptism, making six in all. After preaching the congregation repaired to the water where three put on the Lord by baptism. Bro. Leonard and wife deferred baptism on account of Mrs. Leonard not being well, but said they would at the first opportunity. At six o'clock in the evening we partook of the Lord's Supper, after which we had a social meeting which the Lord blessed. Your brother in Christ,

J. L. HERRIMAN, Sec.

FOR simplicity, durability, ease of management and capacity for work, the LIGHT RUNNING NEW HOME has no rival, and the happy possessor of one has the very best the world affords.

What a fallacy is the idea of converting the world by preaching! Scripture testimony is against it; and this fact, for fact it is, ought to be sufficient for them who profess to believe the Bible. Persecutions from without; unfaithfulness, lukewarmness, and heresies within; were foretold to be the condition of the professed Christian world to the time of the Second Advent:—and in the world, wars, woes, famines, earthquakes, and abounding wickedness. What at the present time is the state of the world? Look at any nation, look at every nation: yea look at any city, town, or village. Where is the single spot of earth where righteousness flourishes, and deceit and dishonesty are put to shame? Yea, we may query more closely: where is the single family where all is right? One may think that here and there such a family may be: but have you found one? Acquaintanceship for a time may dispose you to think that you have found one or more: but if you are an old person and an observer, we may ask, have you not invariably found a sore in every family with whom you have been long acquainted? Your candid answer, we think, would be, I have. What an aggregate of evils and wickedness is the world in the closing years of the nineteenth century! Heathenism holds the great majority of mankind: Mohammetanism has its tens of millions: the Greek and Roman Churches (so-called) claim their hundreds of millions: and the so-called Protestant countries, Britain, Prussia, United States, and a few others, containing tens of millions more, have an heterogeneous aggregation of sects, with a greater number of people who profess no religion, and a deadly leaven of downright infidelity extensively prevailing.

Conversion indeed! What if the world were converted to the condition of the sects of the day? Any one who is aware of the actual state of things knows well that fraud, lying, deceit, general corruption, and miseries, would still be rampant. All schemes and contrivances; all plans and devices of men are vain; powerless for the establishment of righteousness and equity. Divine interposition is a necessity for mankind. Come, Lord Jesus.

SEVERANCE, Kan.

Dear Restitution:

Perhaps some are expecting to hear a report of the Cedar Creek meetings, near White Cloud, in Bro. Peirson's neighborhood. Bro. Peirson has lived there for some time and is building up quite a little congregation. He invited Bro. T. E. Adams, of Jefferson Co., and myself to come up and hold meetings. We went the 9th of February and held meetings over two Sundays with good interest and good audiences. The third Sunday in March we went back accompanied by Bro. J. W. Owen who preached two discourses, one on "Religion," and one, "What Must I do to be Saved?" Surely the discourses were a grand treat at least to the brethren. Second Sunday in April your humble servant at Cedar Creek again spoke twice, at 11 o'clock and at night. After the meeting the brethren partook of the Lord's Supper. At 4 o'clock we met on the banks of Cedar Creek and there and then baptized three intelligent persons, William Peirson and his wife Minnie, and her sister Nellie Chaffee, for remission of sins. William Peirson is a son of Bro. J. F. Peirson. He is one of those good young men whom everybody loves. An excellent impression was made in favor of truth. Bro. Peirson lives in a good community. Meeting again the second Sunday in May at 3 o'clock. They talk of holding their annual meeting on the second Sunday in June. If anyone wishes a pleasant visit among brethren let him visit Cedar Creek congregation at the June meeting. Steps will be taken I think to co-operate with the Philadelphia conference. What we do we must do quickly.

Yours in hope, J. P. BITNER.

Poetry.

THE HOPE OF ISRAEL.

O Israel! scattered wide and peeled,
Driven like leaves of autumn wild,
Thy shame to every eye revealed,
Sad desolation's weary child:

On whom Jehovah's blessing lay
Like dew upon the springing grass;
When wilt thou greet the rising day,
And bid the veil of darkness pass?

When wilt thou come with shout and song,
When shall thy fruitless wanderings
cease,
And all thy happy children throng
The gates of everlasting peace!

The land enjoys her Sabbaths yet
Where alien empire holds her seat;
The sterile curse that love has set
Keeps it for thy returning feet.

O could thy blinded eyes but see
How waits thy long-neglected King,
In mercy still to gather thee
Beneath the shelter of his wing!

The blood that rests on thee and thine,
When thou shalt weeping turn again,
Shall by its healing power divine
Wash out the memory of its stain.

The Hope of Israel, he alone
Beareth the key of David still;
And, for the love he holds his own,
Openeth and shutteth as he will.

Why hardened yet, wilt thou rebel?
O turn thee to the light of day,
And find thine own Emmanuel
The Light, the Life, the Truth, the Way!

ON A MISSION TO THE LAND OF MY FATHERS.

Words fail to describe the feelings of awe and emotion which overwhelmed us when we first realized that we truly walked in the streets of Jerusalem. I could not help remembering the prayers which in childhood I repeated in the synagogue: Leshana Haboa Berushalaim (Next year may we be in Jerusalem). I thought of my brethren according to the flesh still yearning for the coming of the Messiah, and their restoration to their own land. My heart was full of joy and also of sorrow—joy because unto me, who was as bigoted and fanatical as the rest of my poor brethren, the Gospel of the grace of God has been manifested, and the hand of God has removed the vail from my eyes, enabling me to behold the Messiah, Savior and King, and rejoice in the blessing of salvation. But I was full of sorrow and sadness when I thought of the children of Israel who, alas! are still in darkness, ignorance and superstition. I thought of the pathetic words of the Redeemer: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." Yet when inquiring into the condition of the Jews in Jerusalem there was much to encourage.

It was with unspeakable delight I discovered several of my own relatives residing in the Jewish quarter, one of whom is a rabbi. Having visited them all I was surprised by the friendly welcome given me, knowing how great is the prejudice of Jews towards members of families who embrace Christianity.

In all cases, however, my Jewish friends and relatives asked the reasons that prompted me to forsake the synagogue and embrace the religion of the Nazarene. I was glad to find myself in a position of self-defence, which gave me a splendid opportunity of preaching the Gospel to them, my message to them consisting of the "reason for the hope that is within me." I pointed them to Christ himself, one of our own nation, who came to his own, but, alas! they received him not. The aged Rabbi, with considerable interest and emotion, asked—at the same time addressing me as "Rabbi Isaac"—"If Christians are so attached to their Savior, who was a Jew, and whose life was spent in loving work for Israel, and who, when in the agonies of his death, cried for forgiveness on his oppressors, why then do not his followers, Christians all over the world, manifest a similar spirit of love towards us? Why is it that in every Christian country our people are hated and persecuted?" With tears flowing down his aged cheeks, he continued, "My own house in Russia was burnt by Christians, my children subjected to cruel sufferings at their hands, my property burnt, my family, with me, left destitute on the streets, with no friendly hand held out to help us, and the authorities, instead of giving help in our misery and destitution, only annoyed and persecuted us. There are hundreds like myself here," said the aged rabbi, "who have passed through such cruel suffering for no other rea- [illegible] are not true followers of the Prince of Peace but are demoralized, and the name "Christian" conveys a false impression of what Christianity really is. I told him of the loving hearts and noble lives of Christians in England, who yearn for the day of Israel's redemption. He seemed surprised on hearing this, and on leaving him he said, "Tell your Christians in England who love our nation, that the time must soon come when the desire of their heart shall be granted, and Israel shall be brought back by Jehovah, and shall be redeemed for ever." In reply to this I could not help saying, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

Through visiting many homes I made friends with several students in Talmud Torah, where some hundreds of young men spend their whole time in studying the Talmud. With numbers of these I conversed about him of whom Moses and the prophets have spoken and written. Many young men were anxious to know fully what my real belief was. After some conversation I asked them, as I could not take up too much of their time, to accept some small books which I had that would fully tell them what my creed was. I was thus enabled to distribute several New Testaments and a goodly number of portions of Scripture, such as the Epistles to the Hebrews and Romans.

Having spent the first day in visiting Jewish synagogues and homes, and for hours walking through the rough, rugged, and uneven streets, we were glad to find sweet repose in the hotel, whence a splendid view is enjoyed. On one side stands Mount Zion, and at the back the majestic Mount of Olives. We thus rested the first night in the city of David.

The next morning at sunrise we began our wanderings round about Zion. With an open Bible in hand—how precious the contents, how vividly Bible truths are illustrated on every hand! we read for our morning portion, Psa. xlviii., and walking round the walls of the once glorious city, the Psalmist's description more than ever became blessedly realistic: "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King.... Walk about Zion, and go around about her; tell the towers thereof."

The walls closing the city are very thick, 38½ feet in height, and two and a-half miles in circumference. Starting from the Jaffa Gate, we began to count the towers, the first of which is the Tower of David. We continued with interest to count them until we reached thirty-four. Some parts of the city wall at once impress us with the old Jewish masonry. The very names of the gates are interesting to the Bible student, because of their thrilling historical associations. There are seven of them, all standing on the ancient sites. We begin with the Jaffa Gate, and pass the Zion Gate, the Dung Gate, the Golden Gate, the St. Joseph's Gate, Herod's Gate and the Damascus Gate at once strikes us as the finest and most handsome, consisting of two towers, commanding a magnificent view. From St. Stephen's Gate we proceed on the pathway leading to the very spot where the first martyr gave his life and testimony to the truth of the Gospel of his Master and Savior. With great interest we inspected the Golden Gate. This place has for many ages been walled up. Gazing upon this Gate we were reminded of the forcible words of Ezekiel xliv. 1, 2.

"Then he brought me back the way of the gate of the outward sanctuary which looked toward the east; and it was shut. Then said the Lord unto me, This gate shall be shut, it shall not be opened, and no man shall enter in by it; because the Lord, the God of Israel, hath entered in by it, therefore it shall be shut." To this gate the Mohammedans look with great fear, as they believe that on a Friday a great prince, a Christian conqueror, will enter the Golden Gate and take Jerusalem from the followers of Mohammed. Having walked round the city, marked the gates, and counted the towers thereof, we descended into the Valley of Gihon. It was here that one of the most memorable scenes took place, when Solomon was crowned and proclaimed king in the stead of his father David. We were reminded of David's words to Bathsheba: "Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit on thy throne in my stead.... The king also said unto them, Take with you the servants of your lord, and cause Solomon my son to ride upon mine own mule, and bring him down to Gihon. .... So Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet.... went down, and caused Solomon to ride upon King David's mule, and brought him to Gihon. And Zadok the priest took an horn of oil [illegible] And it was no [illegible] here beside the pool where David's son was anointed. It was here that the glorious prediction of Immanuel's birth was uttered, Isa. vii. 14. Here was the place where Manasseh, after much affliction and repentance on his restoration, built a wall of great height, 2 Chr. xxxiii. 14.

It was here that the proud captain of the Assyrians, Rabshakeh, at the head of his bloodthirsty army, stood, and in language so profane insulted the Jews and blasphemed their God. With feelings of reverence we walked about to take particular note of the lower and upper pools of Gihon. Many sacred incidents from the Old and New Testaments forced themselves on our minds. The more we turned over many sacred pages in the grand old Bible, the traveller's most precious companion, the more we were constrained to say with peculiar delight, "Holy Bible, Book Divine, Precious treasure, thou art mine." From Gihon, we passed on to the valley of Hinnom. Here was the scene of many abominations. Near by on the hill overlooking, on the eastern end, high places were built for Moloch. Here the cursed custom of human sacrifices was practiced. Here continued the abominable pagan practices begun by Solomon. Here also were the fires through which Ahab and Manasseh caused their own sons to pass. It was from the awful scenes here that the word Ge-hin-nom was first taken by the Jews to symbolize the eternal torments of hell.

The scenery round here is most impressive. Tombs hewn in rocks are very numerous. It is said that here robbers hid themselves, and also lepers made their hiding-places. In the time of David it was known as the valley of the shadow of death, Psa. xxiii.

From here we passed on to the field of blood, the well-known Aceldama, Matt. xxvii., and Acts i.

We walked over the hill, known also by the name of the Hill of Evil Counsel. It was here tradition says, (that Caiaphas, with the Jews, took counsel how they might take Jesus and put him to death.

As we walked over the field of blood and the Hill of Evil Counsel, we could not help thinking of the awful deeds perpetrated here, and the consequences that followed this evil-doing. The lesson, "Be sure your sins will find you out," became more than ever impressed upon our minds.—Isaac Levinsohn, in Jewish Herald.

Announcements.

The Indiana State Conference of the Churches of God will be held at the Antioch meeting-house, five miles south of Plymouth and three miles north of Argos, Marshall Co., commencing Friday at 10 a. m., June 7th, 1889, and continuing over the following Sunday. All the churches which have been represented heretofore by delegation, and all others wishing to stand in conference relation to aid in the general work of preaching the gospel through an evangelist are hereby urgently requested to send delegates to said conference. Teams will be in Plymouth Friday forenoon to convey you to the house.

John L. Winch, Vice-Pres.

The annual conference of the Church of God in Michigan will convene (D. V.) at Dutton, Kent Co., on Thursday, May 30th, at 7 o'clock p. m., and continue over the next first day. All are invited and all who come will receive a hearty welcome. Dutton is situated on the Grand Rapids division of the Michigan Central R. R. Now brethren we want every church in Michigan represented in this meeting. And let their delegates be able to officially report as to the following:

1. How many members in the church?
2. Have you a system of finance for evangelical and other work? If so, what is it?
3. How much money do you raise in the church per month by your system?
4. How many of your members have adopted your system of raising money?
5. Do you have regular meetings and how often.
6. How many of your members are subscribers for The Restitution or of some other paper advocating the "like precious faith." Now brethren come and let us have another good meeting. By order of the executive board.

L. C. Cheer, Sec.

The annual conference of the churches of God in Christ Jesus, for the state of Iowa will be held at Ferguson, Marshall Co., Ia., commencing on Friday evening June 7, 1889. Ferguson is on the C. M. & St. P. R. R. Those coming on the C. & N. W., from the east change at Tama City, those from the west change at Marshalltown to the Iowa Central and change again at Pickering for Ferguson. Those coming on the Central Iowa change at Pickering for Ferguson. There will be teams at Ferguson to carry all who come to camp.

All believers in the gospel of the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, and who take the Bible as their creed, and who live in harmony with its teachings in faith and works are earnestly requested to be present.

There are many reasons why you should come, among which are;

1. It will do you good.
2. You have an interest in the work to be done at the conference.
3. You have an interest in the work the conference is to do the coming year in the state.
4. The conference needs your help.
5. You ought not to forsake to assemble with the brethren.
6. We want your counsel in important business matters, a duty no one can do for you.

Let the meeting be the event of the season for all the brethren and sisters in Iowa. The people of the world have their important annual gatherings and why should not the Lord's people. Many of our people have already written us that they intend to come. In reality it will be a camp meeting. The camp ground will be near Ferguson eight miles south of Marshalltown, in a natural grove. The meeting must be self-sustaining, that is to say you will be expected to take care of yourself. There are no brethren in the immediate vicinity of the camp, but a team will go to town (a mile or two distant) and return each day for provisions, mail, etc., for the purpose of accomodating those who may need to send.

We will be near a church to which we can retire to hold meeting, in case of rain.

Last year there were six tents on the ground. Bro. John Garton and family made their tent on the ground. A bolt of sheeting, a needle and thread, and a blanket or two, or some quilts, is all the material needed to make a comfortable tent. A good sized trunk will hold all the baggage, including a few dishes, etc., etc.

We want to see you all there. Make a little sacrifice, if necessary, and come. Again we say come.

A. J. Eychaner, Chairman.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXVIII. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 26, 1889. NO. 24.

THE RESTITUTION

THE RESTITUTION advocates the "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the dual destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Modern Criticism in Relation to the Four Gospels and the Messiahship.

Number 1.

Modern criticism of the Bible, whether adverse or apologetic, has signally missed the mark in regard to one point of most radical import. Critics have been chiefly occupied with questions concerning the authenticity of the various treatises of which the entire volume is made up, embracing their date, authorship, etc. These are the mere outworks of the subject. The real substance of the book, and especially one central point which constitutes the citadel of the fortress, has been through sheer ignorance left unassailed, and consequently undefended. The shell has been carefully and minutely examined pro and con while the kernel has been left unnoticed.

Not, however, that there has been any lack of doctrinal controversy. From the days of the apostles a contest between truth and error has been waged; but the combatants have been found principally in the camp of the professed soldiers of Christ. The writings of the apostles themselves show this in a manner which is fitted to sadden the heart of the true disciple. These divinely appointed men predicted a departure from the Christian faith on the part of many who had set out as good and true followers of the Master; and church history but too fully verifies the truth of their prophecies.

Religious controversy has been confined for the most part to doctrines of an abstruse nature—points into which so-called philosophy enters so largely as well nigh to preclude satisfactory conclusions, even by trained thinkers. Witness the question of the divine Sonship of Christ, a question, [illegible] [illegible] jeror [illegible] dowas summoned [illegible] of trying this question in connection with the opinions of the so-called arch-heretic, Arius, as Presbyter of Alexandria in Egypt. The chief point of distinction between the opposing parties seems to have been that which found expression in the Nicene creed, "begotten, not made." The difficulties surrounding this subject may be estimated from the fact that upwards of thirty different opinions, most of them giving rise to distinct sects, were held concerning the person of our Lord, from the first to the nineteenth century.

Notwithstanding the vast amount of discussion which must have been devoted to this subject for many centuries, and even down to the present day, the particular point I refer to, although closely related to Christ, has been almost universally ignored. The various published creeds and confessions of faith bear distinct testimony to this assertion, and shall be quoted in evidence in the sequel. And yet it is a question which, considering the prominent position it occupies in the Scriptures, ought never for one moment to have been lost sight of.

This central point, too, is one which, in a remarkable manner shows the unity of the sacred volume, and especially of the four gospels in an eminent degree. It is, moreover, a truth which sustains a fundamental relationship to all the other doctrines of revelation. At the same time it is unaffected by the various circumstances which surround the contents of the many documents of which the Bible is composed, such as the idiosyncrasies of the different writers, the place and date of writing, or the various classes of persons for whom they wrote, or even by the various readings which have accumulated in the lapse of eighteen hundred years. In short it runs like a golden thread from beginning to end throughout the sacred writings, and thus challenges for itself a position of paramount importance among the other truths contained in the divine oracles.

This remarkable truth concerning our Lord has reference to his office rather than to his person. On this account it is free from the subtle intricacies which enter into the doctrine of the Sonship and is thus more capable of clear definition from data contained in the Scriptures. For the same reason it is more easily apprehended by simple minds—for whom indeed the gospel was chiefly designed; and is thus more practically influential on the minds of those who intelligently receive it. With such advantages as these to recommend it, we must surely come to its consideration with feelings of no ordinary interest and minds disposed to give it due attention.

While in itself extremely simple and easy of apprehension, the full elucidation of this truth requires a measure of detail to be gone into, for which I have to bespeak the indulgence of the reader. This arises from the fact that the true and Scriptural import of the matter has been lost sight of, and its place taken up by some other idea altogether different from the original sense. This may seem a startling assertion to make, but I make bold to affirm that it will be found of easy demonstration. Its supreme importance will be acknowledged by all who believe that the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament contain a revelation from God in relation to the deliverance of man from the physical, moral and spiritual evils under which he now suffers. And I feel confident that even sceptics, if honest, will admit that it is a doctrine taught in the Bible which has been overlooked even by themselves, and which, moreover, has something about it which, in no slight degree, appeals to their common sense as well as higher interests.

The office, then, to which I wish to direct attention, is one which is expressed by the very term by which our Lord is most widely and most familiarly known, namely, Christ. And strange to say it is just here at the outset that divergence from the doctrine of the Scriptures is seen in a departure from the language of Scripture; for the full and definite expres- [illegible] of speech called the article be prefixed to it, thus, "The Christ." This is at once seen to take the term Christ out of the category of a mere surname, and to raise it to the dignity of an official title. This form of the term, however, has in many instances been suppressed by the translators of King James' version of the Bible, especially in the New Testament. Fortunately a sufficient number of cases escaped suppression from which the force of the prefixed article can be seen, and which afford ample data for determining the propriety of its insertion in the translation wherever it occurs in the original. And not only so, but this fact affords a sufficient reason for understanding it as a necessary supplement in other cases where by a common ellipsis it has been omitted by the sacred writers.

The instances in which the translators have preserved the article in the Common Version, are such as could hardly, in the circumstances, have been deprived of it, without greatly diminishing the force of the statement in which the term occurs. For example, in such forms as "Jesus is the Christ," the omission of the article would amount to so defective a representation of the original as to conceal the fact that the proposition meant something more than the similar one of "John is Smith." But every one will admit that the phrase "Jesus is the Christ" imports more than simply that the surname of Jesus is Christ. The phrase "John is the Smith" is admittedly very different from "John is Smith;" simply because Smith with the article prefixed denotes an occupation; while Smith without the article simply denotes a surname.

I shall now make a few quotations from the New Testament in order to show how the apostles of our Lord used the term "the Christ." In the fourth gospel, to begin with a late instance, John states his design in writing it in the following terms: "Many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book. But these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name."

It seems proper to mention here that criticism in recent times has been especially directed against the gospel according to John. The apostle's authorship, as well as the early date of the gospel, was denied. Both, however, have been unsuccessful. In Chamber's Encyclopedia it is stated that the Tubingen school, headed by Baur, placed its composition in the middle of the second century and assert that it obviously rose out of the conflicts of opposing teachers. This view, however, is rejected by the greatest critics and scholars of Germany, and its Johannine origin is now admitted." It is also stated as to its date, that it is "generally believed to have been written about 78 A. D."

It therefore becomes an interesting point connected with this inquiry how far John's design in writing his gospel corresponds with "the form of sound words," which constituted the doctrine of the disciples of Christ at a period nearly half a century earlier. The unity of the whole four evangelists becomes strikingly apparent as the result of inquiry. The synoptical gospels as those of Matthew, Mark and Luke are termed, because of a certain similarity of argument and sequence, of topics, are especially identical even to circumstantial details on this question. But let us look first at John's narrative on the point, keeping in view his design as already shown.

In the sixth chapter of his gospel, John records a conversation which our Lord had with the Jews concerning himself as "the bread of life." Many even of his disciples murmured at it. And John adds—"From that time many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him. Then said Jesus unto the twelve, Will ye also go away? Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life. And we believe and are sure that thou art that Christ the Son of the living God." It is to be noted here that the apostle speaks in the name of the twelve, and this confession of their faith, uttered [illegible] special emphasis—"We believe and are sure"—must be held to express that definite belief concerning Jesus which was in accordance with the mind and will of God.

At a period somewhat earlier than this we find, from John's narrative, the same belief readily evoked among a different race of people by the direct teaching of our Lord himself. At the well of Jacob in Samaria, in his conversation with the woman, he elicited the remarkable statement from her—"I know that Messias cometh, which is called Christ: when he is come he will tell us all things." And the reply is direct—"I that speak unto thee am he." The woman returns to the city, and tells her friends—"Come see a man who told me all things that ever I did. Is not this the Christ?" The result was that "many of the Samaritans believed on him:" and they expressed their faith in the same definite manner—"we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Savior of the world."

MICA-PEN NOTES.

I have just met and marked the following citation;—"The greatest events of an age, are its best thoughts. Thought finds its way into action." I mentally clapped my hands, when I read that, and said that is true, and it is mightily encouraging too. And to me, the greatest and best thought, is the perfect and eternal goodness of God. Blessed and grand conviction, and may it be the center and fountain of the noblest action, and the kindest enjoyment, and the sublimest and most stupendous results. It is the greatest thought of any age, and is it not the one potent, precious and coronal thought of the age, in its closing period, and the new age, in its silent, heaven appointed beginning? Sweet, great and holy thought! Do thou go on and prosper, as thou are commissioned and bound to do! Go on and prosper, and be fruitful and potent and pre-eminent!

And then I found another welcome and noble sentiment. "It is not true that love makes all things easy;—it makes us choose what is difficult." And I said to my wife, "That was true of Christ—Yes, how true it was of him. And now while I think of it, did not Jesus feel a joy in choosing the difficult part? No doubt he did. He was appointed to do a great and a hard work, and to die a hard death, and he had a glow of desire to go forward to meet and do every difficult thing, to grapple with the difficulty and master it,—to enter upon the suffering and endure it;—to encounter the obstacle and overcome it. Yes, I believe it. And I hope that Jesus had an inward joy even in going to the cross. I hope he had a joy in enduring it. Lord grant that it be true! Not only a joy in anticipation, but a joy in possession, some joy amid the terrible suffering, even to that one last moment of completed anguish."

And now Lord I look to thee for the manifestation of thy power in the world, and the fulfilment of thy word spoken ages ago. I look for it. Take the prophecies of thy chosen seers. Are they not clothed with thine own authority, sublime by thy sanction, instinct with thy life? I feel that the case is urgent. Is it not written, "it is time for thee, Lord, to work," and thou most merciful and mighty God, is it not thy time to work, now, is the ripeness and fulness of time, and in the majesty of thy truth and righteousness?

Is it an error? Am I wrong? I feel inwardly and deeply that a time of crisis is at hand. Great events impend.

One of the chief of the secular papers, says this morning, that Europe is in a ferment of uneasiness and apprehension—partly because the Czar is angry and dissatisfied. And the telegraph reports the pope as much depressed because the tendency of the time is so adverse to the papacy. And the emperor of Germany is not a man of meekness and patience incarnate. And did I not read that the emperor of Austria was weary, with years and misfortunes? And then more than all, we have the word of God. We have Great Pyramid chronology. Labor troubles, according to the noted Carrol D. Wright began in 1882, and in what will they yet end? But not alone because the Great Pyramid is pronounced Messianic, are we moved and is our expectation roused. We have Messiah himself in his own word. And I said to my wife, "Now don't think me strange and unreasonable when I say to you, there is one pre-eminently precious passage." "What is it, please?" "For as a snare shall that day come on them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye therefore, and pray always." It is not because of the snare, but of the Lord's kind and timely warning of it. There's the preciousness. It is the warning, and it is affecting indeed, and I want to heed it. The snare is coming now, no doubt, and men will not believe it. Ministers and churches will not heed it;—not yet, at any rate. Adventists have said for years that "mens hearts were failing them for fear"—but I never could see it. It wasn't true. Mens hearts didn't fail them for fear. Men have been confident and eager, and self-glorifying, and man-glorifying, and they have glorified progress and deified success, and magnified mammon, thats what they have done. But it will not be so long. Men will fear, looking for the things that are coming on the earth.

Christ photographs a future with a flash. Think of "the sea and waves roaring"—not merely such a tremendous and awful wave as the great roaring Conemaugh flood—not that merely—but the sea and waves of commotions among masses of men—among princes and leaders—and among instigators and revolutionists, the ferment leading on to upheaval.

And some men's faces will blanch—not least among them, possibly—those who have either openly cried, peace, or have implied it in their action, implied it by their inaction and incredulity.

And Jesus says "watch and pray always." O, blessed words! O kind and timely injunction. Watch and pray! Why that is the very thing I am, and have been doing. How I have stretched out my hands to heaven, by night and day, in incessant pleadings, asking for many things I know—but not more than God was able to grant, and great things, but none too great for God to give. A time to pray? Most certainly it is.

Now to recur a moment. The second best thought of all I can call to mind, is human receptivity of the truth that God is good. For example, let all the world of mankind open their hearts to this God of goodness. Let every avenue of access be unbarred and unclosed. Let the light and love and truth of the King enter unchecked and unrepelled into human consciousness, and what a glory will follow! Accordingly, to one, to two, to ten thousand, the highest intelligence, and the most exalted propriety, is this openness to God, and seeking his power and presence with infinite petitions. Does God dwell in our hearts by faith? How near at hand may be the time when he will come suddenly to his temple, in grand and deeply felt reality, and that temple, the most holy place in human hearts! Let us not forget it. Let us remember to choose and cherish and magnify them. No matter for their temporary unpopularity, or that the majority of the short-lived children of Adam, ignore or disaffected them. Ages are many and long.

Out of all inharmonious elements God is able to bring order. And in some moment of transfiguration, some hour of prophetic fulness, the Spirit of God sweeping on like a wind of heaven, shall make clear and regal the grand best thought, that he, despite all calamities, despite all short agonies,—is, in very truth, is, in the heart and soul of all the march of events, one immutable loving God and Father, looking to the end, and that end, the greatest good—yes, all good to perfection. Then shall a hallelujah be heard, not like so many I see and hear, that are weak and lame and superficial, but a hallelujah of soul and power, of joy and reverberation, and thanksgiving and victory. (In a parenthesis—O, that men would cease all their cold amens of routine, for a season—amens that almost shock by their pottiness and childish frequency. [illegible] amens with soul and power, or prove that silence is more rich and eloquent in a world where coldness or pattin[illegible] is near neighbor to mockery.)

Nor would we forget the holiness of God, of such inestimable value, as a thought, as a truth, as a power. The holiness of God is the hope and salvation of the creature. Utterly weak, as we are, subject to vanity, conscious of imperfection, we are glad to repair to one central, uncontaminated Spirit might, light and life. Faith in the holiness of God helps us believe. It saves us from our darkness and desolation. But think how disastrous to any human mind is doubt of the Divine goodness, a settled doubt of God's being and governing in goodness and rectitude. The mind thus disturbed and darkened and distrustful, is without an anchor. Imputing evil to the maker and Sovereign, makes havoc in the heart where the unbelief is harbored. It is destructive and deadly. It is so in the very nature of things. But on the contrary, an immovable and strong confidence in God's perfect rectitude, in the grand and infallible tendency and design of his administration of affairs, to and for the ultimate best, is a powerful tonic, it has in it a virtue of regeneration. But I have reached my limit of space and will close.

C. COLEGROVE.

BAPTISM.

Luke vii. 29: All the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. John iii. 22: After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea; and there he tarried with them and baptized; iv. 1: Jesus baptized more disciples than John; 2: Though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples. Peter says, Acts ii. 38: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit; 41: Then they that gladly received his word were baptized; and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. When Philip was preaching the gospel in the city of Samaria, Acts viii. 12, he baptized both men and women. Likewise was the eunuch baptized, when he believed. Saul was baptized after his vision. Baptism was also administered to a number of Gentiles as related at the end of Acts x. Lydia, of Thyatira, with these that accompanied her to Philippi, of Macedonia, attending to the things spoken by Paul, and the keeper of the prison and his house, after they had heard the word of the Lord, were also baptized (Acts xvi), as were also those Corinthians that, hearing Paul, believed.

Thus we see that the command of Jesus was always obeyed in apostolic days and the importance of baptism is also evident from the language used in reference to it.

Matt. xxviii. 19: Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them. Mark xvi. 16: Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth (this gospel) and is baptized (repenting and living uprightly, faithful in act as well as in word), shall be saved. Gal. iii. 27: For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. Eph. iv. 5: One Lord, one faith, one baptism. Heb. vi. 1, 2: Leaving the principles....of the doctrine of baptisms. Titus iii. 5: Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration (born again) and renewing of the Holy Spirit. John iii. 5: Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God.

The signification of Scriptural baptism can be found only by a careful, candid, prayerful study of God's word. Weigh each text carefully, and let the will of the Lord be yours.

Rom. vi. 3-5: Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection. 1 Pet. iii. 21. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ. 1 Cor. xv. 29: Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead (in the semblance of death) if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead? Col. ii. 12: Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead.

The signification of baptism is also shown by the most literal interpretation of another class of texts.

Mark i. 4, 5, 9, 10: John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins. And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan. And straightway coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens opened, and the Spirit like a dove descending upon him. John iii. 22, 23: And there he tarried with them, and baptized. And John also was baptizing in Aenon near to Salim, because there was much water there. Acts viii. 35, 38, 39: Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus. And he commanded the chariot to stand still; and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip.

What has been given seems so plain and all-sufficient, that more need not be said; but I wish to place the whole subject before you fully as well as clearly, and would add a few classes of texts, comparing them with the original. In the following passages we find in the King James translation the expression "baptized with water," and in six cases in connection with "baptized with Holy Ghost." This word "with" is translated from the Greek preposition εν. With a little assistance the English investigator can readily trace the signification of this Greek word, without a knowledge of that tongue. The texts are: Matt. iii. 11, Mark i. 8; Luke iii. 16; John i. 26, 33; Acts i. 5, 11, 16. I will give you all the texts in which εν is used in the Greek in the first two chapters from which the passages are taken above, viz., Matt. iii. and Mark i.

Matt. iii. 1: In those days came John the B. preaching in the wilderness; 3, in the wilderness; 6, baptized of him in Jordan; 9, to say within yourselves; 11, I indeed baptize you in (with, King James) water unto repentance, but he that cometh after me is mightier than I whose shoes I am not worthy to bear, he shall baptize you in (with, King James) Holy Spirit and fire; 12, whose fan is in his hand; 17, my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased. Mark i. 2: Written in the prophets; 3, voice of one crying in the wilderness; 4, John did baptize in the wilderness; 5, all baptized of him in Jordan; 8, I indeed have baptized you in (with, King James) water, but he shall baptize you in (with, K. J.) Holy Spirit; 9, came to pass in those days, that Jesus was baptized of John in Jordan; 11, in whom I am well pleased; 13, in the wilderness forty days; 15, repent ye, and believe (in) the gospel; 16, casting a net into the sea; 19, were in the ship mending their nets; 20, left their father Zebedee in the ship; 23, there was in their synagogue a man in (with) an unclean spirit; 45, was without in desert places.

I cannot see how any one who makes a conscientious study of the word εν can come to any other conclusion than that it should be rendered "in" in Matt. iii. 11, and the other passages under consideration; but I do not desire to argue the matter here, and will claim simply that there is at least as much reason in favor of rendering it "in" as "with." But even if "with" were the correct rendering, it would not take from the force of the plain statements of Paul and Peter quoted in preceding sections.

A careful, exhaustive study of the verbs βαπτω (bapto) and βαπτιζω (baptizo) is to me absolutely convincing as to their meanings. All scholars, so far as I know, agree as to the common and primary significations of these words; but some claim possible renderings far from the literal. Hence, to avoid argument, I will claim no more for these Greek proofs, than I did for εν, viz, that these words agree rather than disagree with the plain statements quoted above. βαπτω occurs in: Luke xvi. 24, send Lazarus that he may dip; John xiii. 26, dip the sop....and when he had dipped; Rev. xix. 13, mantle dipped in blood.

The verb ραντιζω (rhantizo, sprinkle) occurs in Heb. ix. 19, 23; x. 22; xii. 24, and never refers to baptism. Infants were not baptized in apostolic days, and cannot be now. When mothers brought their babes to be blessed by the Lord, the disciples rebuked them, not being accustomed to have such presented. But Jesus loved them and spoke most encouraging words to the mothers. Lydia was far from home in Philippi, when she and her retinue, believing the gospel of the kingdom as presented by Paul, were baptized, and of whatever the household of the keeper of the prison may have consisted, they were all believers. Acts xvi. He that hath been baptized into Christ, hath put on Christ.

J. G. HAUPT.

It would be a happy day for some of us who are professing more than we are possessing, if we would stop a little and look over accounts. The wood, hay and stubble which make the paper on which we write must be burned up some day. The very writing of this sheet is no doubt fuel for the flames. I find it literally true that when I "say I do not."

I believe that five words of the Lord Jesus Christ will be effective and lasting while all that I write is in comparison rubbish. I would never write another word if it was not that it seems as if there was much that is worse than rubbish published which must be met. Besides too, I cannot be on the street all the twenty-four hours of a day and so the scribe tries to do a little good with the pen.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All correspondents addressing us should give their name, Post Office, County and State plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co. Ind.

Remittances should be sent by Bank Draft Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk: money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

IN closing up our editorial remarks for this number we have to announce to our readers that the trouble with our foot has developed into a cancer. We are not suffering extremely with it only during six or eight hours out of each twenty-four, and that time is during the application of the remedy employed, which causes severe anguish while applied to the cancerous tumor. Indeed, it causes us to writhe with pain while the application is on, and for about two hours afterward. We think the prospects of a cure quite favorable, but cannot predict anything with certainty. We are striving to trust in God, and are looking to him in prayer to bless during sufferings and to keep us patient and submissive to his holy and divine will. We are deserving of chastisement and when it comes from our Heavenly Father's hand we will try hard to bear it uncomplainingly. Brethren, pray for us.

FORMULARIES OF FAITH.

All humanly formulated creeds are worse than useless; they are injurious to, and subversive of true Christian faith. The faith that God approves of is the belief of the truth, and God's word is truth; hence the absolute necessity of believing the exact statements of divine revelation. We should use the most special care when speaking of God, the Father, of his Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, and of the Holy Spirit, never to make use of terms not employed in the Scriptures. We note one word here that can not be used in speaking of God, if we adhere closely to inspired terms, i. e., material. God is a Spirit—literally, God is Spirit—is inspired language, and we honor God when we adhere to inspired expressions. The following from the Independent is worthy of careful consideration:

"If one wants to understand who Christ was and is, what are his offices, and what is the nature of his work in human behalf, the book for him to study in preference to all other books, is the Bible itself. He may aid himself in this study by the use of commentaries; but he should never substitute anything for the Bible. The Bible contains far the best Christology ever written or read."

COMMANDS.

God's commandments always have a restrictive definiteness. This definiteness is sometimes concealed in versions made from the original by transferring words instead of translating them. Were the word baptidzo translated as should have been done there would have been no place for doubting just what God enjoined in that institution. Give the English equivalent immerse, and there could be no shadow of support drawn from the Bible for sprinkling or pouring water upon a person and calling the act baptism—immersion—as every child would see the contradiction in the terms. And there would be no shadow of support for three dippings, when the Bible says plainly there is "one immersion" or "one dip." God has been specially careful to guard those that must use a version with the transferred word to explain that baptism can only be performed by a burial, which is far from being represented by sprinkling, pouring, or even the three dips. A command is something always too definite to admit of being obeyed in several different ways each equally meeting the requirement of the lawgiver. To change the meaning of the words is to change the revelation. We subjoin the words of another.

"The revelations contained in the Bible are made to man in words: and these words, like those contained in any other book, are to be interpreted by applying to them the established laws of language. The meaning of the words, when thus ascertained, is to be accepted as God's rule for human faith and practice. What the words mean he means. His authority attaches to that meaning."

CREATION [illegible]

In the great work of creating this, our world, there was a well-defined and perpetual progress from the lower and more imperfect to the higher and more perfect forms, whether of animated or vegetable life. This continued advancement upward was a prophecy, in type, of a consummating climax. Science reads this prediction on every rocky leaf of the earth-volume. Man was the fore-ordained being toward whose final appearance all changes and revolutions were tending from the remotest beginning. Revelation also, is explicit that God designed to crown the work of his hands with a being formed in his own image, and that his gestation was in the world-womb of Nature. "My substance was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth," says inspiration. In the mind and purpose of God man was designed to be the sublimity of his lower earthly creation.

In nature, as in redemption, there was progress toward "a glory that excelleth." In the creation processes, as the fauna advanced from grade to grade, the flora made co-eval progress. The scale of exaltation in animated existence was evenly paralleled in the scale of vegetable growth. The minute and humble, the gigantic and wonderful in both kingdoms appeared in their times, had their history, disappeared, and left time, place, and history to be occupied by higher orders of creation. Creation and evanescence are written in the rocks of the ages past, and the everlasting mountains are but the faintly sculptured monuments of departed existence.

At length animals of the highest type appeared, and the creation work was consummated in the fore-ordained and crowning work—Man in the image of God. Then it was that nature had come to her best in tree, shrub, flower, and fruit.

In the mighty upheavals of the past the mountains had been lifted up, the hills formed, the valleys fashioned, and the plains smoothed out. Then came the creation blessings for the last and higher orders of living beings. From the upheaved mountains and hills springs, streamlets, and rivers break out, and course through the valleys and plains. On the mountains are the waving forests, and on the hill-slopes groves of the shadowing trees. Along the streams and spread over vale and plain, "sweet fields stand dressed in living green." From the flowery bloom the moving breeze "fans the earth with od[illegible]rous wings."

The [illegible] of the more ancient ages had stood in crowded and lofty majesty, but it had been stored up for fuel neath the everlasting hills. It is said to be a geological fact that the grain-bearing grasses came into existence only in that age when man appeared. It was then that those sweet herbs that so much minister to human pleasure first made their appearance. The mints, the lavenders, the aromatics, and incensed herbs, came when that being who could sense their odors appeared among the marvels of the newer creation.

Then, too, came the luscious fruitage—the apple, the peach, the plum, the apricot, the almond, the fig, the orange, the lemon, the strawberry, and all related fruits. Over all this world-wide scene of blessing the vaulted blue above was spread, the work of God's fingers. "The heavens declared the glory of God, and the firmament shewed his handiwork."

Blessings above, blessings below, and blessings on all sides around, marked the advent of man on earth. Earth was decked in her holiday robes, and blessings crowned the festal board. When man came all was beautiful, all was charming, the whole world and all in it was a benediction. O, beautiful but fading picture—evanescent and departed! Abiding glory came not then. Sin came, and with sin the curse!

THE CREATION CURSE.

God made man upright and surrounded him with the choicest blessings. Man sinned and the doom of death was denounced against him by his Creator, and his malediction fell upon the ground that had been made so abundantly prolific of blessing by his benediction. Man was not, however, wholly bereaved of all the heaven-bestowed bounties, but these bounties must hereafter be won through exhausting toil, and in contention with resultant products of the curse. The noxious weed, the spiny brier, the thistle and the thorn became spontaneous on those very grounds that had been so exuberant of fruit, of flower, of grain and aromatic shrub. Bane and blessing became closely allied—the bush that bears the queenly rose bears the thorns to lacerate the fingers that would pluck the tempting bloom. The fruit of the "tree of the knowledge of good and evil" was sadly effective in its results; as eating of it brought about a condition of things where "good and evil" are strangely blended, both in the natural world, and in the human experience of joy and sorrow, of health and sickness, of life and death.

Man became a sinner, the curse came, and the whole state of the outward world was changed. For sinful man the noxious growths spring up abundantly from the ground.

A writer speaking on this says: "It is a remarkable circumstance that whenever man cultivates nature, and then abandons her to her own unaided energies, the result is far worse than if he had never attempted to improve her at all. There are no such thorns found in a state of nature, as those produced by the ground which man once has tilled, but has now deserted. In the waste clearings amidst the fern brakes of New Zealand, and in the primeval forests of Canada, thorns may now be seen which were unknown before. The nettle and the thistle follow wherever he goes, and remains as perpetual witnesses of his presence, even though he departs; and, around the cold hearthstone of the ruined shielding on the Highland moor, and on the threshhold of the crumbling log hut in the Australian bush, those social plants may be seen growing, forming a singular contrast to the vegetation around them."

All that have settled on the new lands of the Western States know that the vexing vegetable pests follow man in his migrations from place to place. Think of the bateful burs that choke the growing crops, and mat the wool and hair of the farmers' flocks and herds. Think of the sorrel and thistles that displace the growing grass and grain of his fields, and that seemingly poison the soil itself. Think of the rag-worts and the rag-weeds that crowd the roadsides. All those, and others equally harmful, were not growing on the virgin soil of the grand old forests, the wide-spread openings, and the almost boundless prairies of the West till the cultivator of the soil came.

The lurking curse is in the ground, and as soon as man breaks the surface, that curse comes up in baneful life in the thorn, the brier, the thistle and the noxious weed, to ban the sinner for his rebellion against his Creator. The creation curse inheres in the present world's very constitution, and it will never be eradicated till God shall "mak[illegible] things new."

JUDGMENT TO COME.

The certainty of judgment to come rests upon the oath of Jehovah as recorded by his prophet Isaiah, xlv. 23, "I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness and shall not return. That unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear." This is not an isolated statement. It is one of the settings in a group of affirmations made by Jehovah that he and he alone is the fountain of all power, wisdom and righteousness and that he alone is the Savior of men, and that there is no one else. Judgment to come is therefore a divine oracle and not any human deduction or inference from any indirect statement. We do not therefore, as many, argue away this declaration by any subsequent statement but simply and reverently believe it and seek to find its meaning to us to whom it has now come. This declaration of Jehovah is also remarkable for being quoted three times by Paul in three of his letters, viz., in Rom. xiv. 12; 2 Cor. v. 10, and Philip. ii. 10, 11. The quotation of it by Paul in his letter to the Romans is for the purpose of inducing them to give over the practice of judging and condemning each other upon doubtful matters. His rebuke runs as follows, "But dost thou judge thy brother or why dost thou set at naught thy brother, for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ, for it is written, As I live saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me and every tongue shall confess to God." So then adds the apostle, "Every one of us shall give account of himself to God."

This expression of judgment by the apostle is remarkable for its clearness upon three things: 1st. The certainty of a future judgment of himself and his brother Christians; 2nd. That he calls it the judgment seat of Christ; and 3rd, that this standing before the judgment seat of Christ is equal to each one giving an account of himself to God. In the context he states that Christ died and rose and revived to acquire Lordship over man. This right or sovereignty over the living and the dead has to be distinguished from the right of Creatorship. The fact that Jehovah alone is the Creator of man places in him the absolute right of possession in every unit of his creation. No act of any one of his creatures can set aside this right. As the judgment seat of Christ is used interchangeably with giving individual account to God it is manifest that the acquired right of Jesus does not supercede Jehovah's right but simply acquires the right to apply it instead of him or conjointly with him. It should also be carefully noted here that this purchased right of property in the living and the dead begins when the agreement to purchase was made and was completed, when the terms of purchase were completed. To make sense of the apostle's statement "that to this end Christ died and rose and revived" three things are implied namely, the existence of the three parties, the living and the dead, the proprietor and disposer of them and the proposed purchaser. This is manifest for if any one of them be absent no transaction in the shape of purchase could have taken place. Neither is the purchase that of creatorship as that cannot be bought nor sold but remains the absolute property of the creator. In like manner the right of property in the dead and the living cannot be transferred to any other being. It is permanent in him who made the purchase. It is a completed transaction absolutely independent of the will or choice of the living and the dead. Although therefore their interests were altogether dependent upon the purchase being completed they were not active in it. And now that the purchase has been completed and registered complete and made the basis of a proclamation conjointly by him who sold and him who bought them, i. e., the living and the dead; the whole conditions of this proclamation concerns every one of these in whichsoever of these two states they may be at the time of the proclamation being made.

Some seven centuries before this proclamation was made Jehovah swore by himself that every knee shall bow to him. If he had not the right and power to make such an oath and to compel every knee to bow to him then the living and the dead now may give no heed either to his oath or to his proclamation of Jesus Christ as now the proprietor of them by right of purchase from him. But if the sole property of the living and the dead was in Jehovah, by virtue of creation then every utterance of the proprietor must be carefully obeyed as the destiny of Jehovah's property is absolutely in his own right to do whatsoever seems good to him. Jehovah's proclamation is not faithfully made by any one who fails to point out his absolute right of property in mankind living or dead. Neither can the gospel of Jesus Christ be fully preached by any one who fails to discern in the testimony of Jesus Christ that he was to give his life for the life of the world. And after he died and rose again the reasons he gave, viz., that repentance and remission of sins should be preached to all the world in his name.

There is a mutilation performed upon the divine proclamation of his will to man by every one who keeps out of it judgment to come. To the unbelievers on Mars Hill Paul used this one fact as the incentive to repentance when he said, "But now he commandeth all men everywhere to repent because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that he hath raised him from the dead." Acts xvii. 31. It was in full consciousness of this fact that he assured the Romans that God will judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ and reward with eternal life those who sought for it by a patient continuance in well doing, and on the other hand with tribulation and anguish the contentious and disobedient concerning whom on another occasion he wrote to the Thessalonians that all such will be punished with an everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power when he comes to be glorified in his saints and admired of all them that believe him. Paul's preaching wherever he went was a savor of life unto life in those who believed it and obeyed it, and a savor of death unto those who despised it and counted themselves unworthy of everlasting life. Indeed we boldly affirm that this idea of no judgment to come for good and bad had no existence in the apostle's mind and never has been expressed by him in any of his reported addresses nor in any one of his letters. That he did learn of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come for both the just and the unjust these same addresses and letters are conclusive evidence to all who seek to be guided by evidence.

Again we have Peter's declaration in the temple to his brethren of the house of Israel which he finishes by quoting Jehovah's own declaration to Israel "that the soul that will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people." Acts iii. 23. This has no reference to natural death but to judicial death for personal rebellion against Jehovah. Again when specially sent by God to the house of Cornelius among other things he declared that Jesus commanded them to preach unto the people and to testify that it is he who is ordained of God to judge the living and the dead. Acts x. 42.

In full view of the existence of these two declarations of Jehovah, the first to Moses, Deut. xviii. 15, 18, 19, and the second to Isaiah, xlv. 23, and their quotations by Peter and Paul, we utterly fail to see how they can either be set to one side or totally ignored by any community who go in for the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

If I have failed to gather the true meaning out of them or take from the words of Jehovah or to add to them a meaning which is not right I shall feel deeply obliged to any one who shall point this out and give the reason or reasons for it. But in the absence of conviction produced upon my mind by testimony that all these declarations are wrongly applied by me to a judgment to come of the just and the unjust I must hold that every preacher or community who fails to preach this publicly fails to speak the truth as God himself and his faithful servants have done. "I speak as unto wise men, judge ye what I say." Paul.
